The first touchdown for the Catamounts came very early in the second period as Earl Olson combined with End Dan Leber to draw first blood for the contest. The pass was perfectly timed as Leber had his defender beat by several steps, and caught the ball just as he stepped into scoring turf. The second Vermont score came as Kevin Lynch intercepted a UConn pass and brought it down to their 11 before being brought down himself. Steve Coon and Gary Vandecar continued to peck away for yardage as finally Coon swept around the right side to give the Cat a 13 point advantage. As before, Paul Jakubicki point after attempt

The third and final score for the home club came within two minutes of the final bell. Quarterback Ed Yurica scrambled out from under a horde of tacklers to job the ball to Tim Sullivan standing on the edge of the scoring zone. Jakubicki's attempt after the score was blocked, but still the game was put out of UConn's reach.

The lone UConn six pointer came late in the third quarter. The offensive drive was started on the 49 yard line of Vermont, and carried into the goal zone 11 plays later. The point after attempt was successful, but this proved to be the limit of the Huskie scoring.

The Catamounts outmarched the University of Connecticut in both their running and passing yardage, and the Huskies only managed to complete 25% of their attempted aeriels. Vermont quarterback Olson, who suffered an ankle injury in the third quarter and was replaced by Yurica, showed some fine passing technique as he hit his man among a number of defenders. Bob Rodger proved to be the running workhorse of the day as he carried for a total of 68 yards in 18 attempts, and Tim Sullivan was the most utilized receiver. Rodger continues to be plagued by fumbles, losing the ball once each in the first and fourth quarters, the first quarter fumble came on the four yard line of Connecticut. The Huskies proved to be more unlucky, as they lost four fumbles and suffered one pass interception. One of those fumbles stalled a drive on the UVM 12 yard line. Tom Nieradka was responsible for the third catamount fumble, but he redeemed himself minutes later by recovering one hobbled by the opposition to stop a serious scoring threat.

The view of the UConn-Vermont game (consuming in feeling out their opponent from the stands must have been extremely exciting. I know for a fact that the view from the field was, to put it quite euphemistically, exhilarating. Although those feelings were very real, they were not distinct and separate properties of the other group. It is essential in reviewing the game to realize that feeling was not generated by one group or another, but rather by the interaction of the two camps. When the team made a good play, the fans became excited. The excitement in turn was transmitted to the field where the players felt it and were stimulated to harder play. The snowball effect issued. Each group was essential to others performance. The fans must realize that they are not just bystanders.

For instance, the crowd had already visibly effected some of the individual members of the team before the game began. Players are only human. Despite all their training and coaching to the contrary, they oftentimes develop minor kinks in their football armor. In the locker room before the game, some players become so nervous that they become dedicated patronizers of the bathroom. Other players are just the nervousness by yawning and entering into a lethargic trance. Both types of players need fan reaction to help remedy this condition at game time. The nervous player gains confidence from the cheers of the fans. The nervousness either dissipates or is channeled angrily across the field at the opposition. The lethargic player is awakened by the fans and alerted by their exhortations. In this way, the fans do their part in preparing the team for the game to be played.

Once a game starts, the rapport between the fans and the players becomes even more significant. A team can fall prey to three different menaces in successive stages of the game. In the first stage, a team can be unduly cautious and time

Thus they play too reserved. In the second stage, a team can easily fall into a complacent routine of platonic play. By the time the third stage arrives, weariness sets in and begins to gnaw away at performance. None of these factors were significant in the UConn game. The primary reason was, of course, was that the team refused to lose. However, the fans were again crucial. The team was at all times very much aware of both the magnitude of the crowd and its vocality. The stimulus gained from fan support was immeasurable. The louder the crowd, the more "psyched" and vicious was the defense. When the crowd cheered on the offense, it gained added momentum and the blocks became more forceful. The victory was not only for the team but also for the fans who made it possible.

It is admirable that Vermont fans have been great so far this year. The impressive amount at the pep rally and the game bear out this fact. The question call for be raised however, whether students can do anything further to support the team. At the risk of sounding a little silly and antiquated, I have a suggestion to make. There is nothing that spurs a player on to more brutalizing play than the fans personally cheering him on by name. Sociologists and psychologists might call it creating a little ego trip. Nevertheless, the effect is fantastic. The player becomes psyched right out of his head and plays like a madman. My suggestion is that we field an entire team of egotistical madmen. I suggest that each fraternity, sorority, dorm, etc. pick out one player to be their favorite. This is "their boy." They promote him and create banners to exhort him on. They compete with others in the stands to see who can cheer "their boy" on the loudest. They have a blast high in the stands while their boy is going bananas.

Homecoming Ralph Nader

by Jim Stevens
Attractions planned for UVM's 1971 Homecoming include consumer rights activist Ralph Nader and well-known jazz vocalist B. B. King. Nader is set to speak Friday evening, Oct. 8 at 8:00 P.M. in Patrick Gymnasium. Once a sea-man crusader against corporation - consumer fraud, Nader and his Raider's have spread their talents in mushrooming proportions throughout the government and economy. His programs include the Center for Study of Responsive Law, a Public Interest Research Group, the Center for Auto Safety, and a Student Association Speaker's Bureau to videotape Nader's lectures. Press conferences are presently being set up. All UVM students will be invited to the event.

SA News: Barwin, UVM R Explains Foulups

by Sue Kapp, SA
Recording Secretary
Dick Barwin, SA, this period Registrar, was the guest at last week's Senate meeting. He said that he understood the troubles students were having with scheduling and transcripts, but felt that they can be eliminated. Mr. Barwin requested more student feedback on these problems and asked for the formation of a student committee to meet with him on a regular basis. "Tell us where the problems are and we'll try to work them out."

Mr. Barwin explained that the office of the Registrar is divided into three parts - Scheduling, Recording, and the Counter. Difficulties in scheduling have been noted because there is a new computer, and the programs have to be rewritten. Preparation for next semester will be from November 9 through 15. The transcript problems that some students had last year are being worked on. Mr. Barwin explained that the week drop period for classes prevents the registrar's office from getting records out

IRA Topics Range From Dorm

Movies To Future Of Converse Hall

by Joel Casey

The Inter-Residence Association held its second meeting of this semester on Tuesday, September 14, in the Marsh-Austin-Tupper main lounge. In a pre-meeting interview, IRA President, Steven Rice, said that he hopes that this year the Association will "go from the saying stage to the implementing stage." In connection with this policy, the members of the Executive Board brought before the dorm representatives a full agenda of proposals.

Dorm Movies

Ray Roberts, Vice President of Social and Cultural Activities, suggested that two different movies be shown on five weekends this semester in various dorms. The ten movies, which will be free to campus students, will be picked by the representatives and announced at a later time. Any dorm which has the facilities and volunteers students to show one or more of these films should contact Ray Roberts.

Student Judicial System

Plans for a student judicial system were proposed by Gary Long, Judicial Chairman. Representative boards will be set up in each complex to handle the judicial matters of the complex. A training workshop for the judicial representatives will begin October 4 or 5. The training program will emphasize the due process of law.

Refrigerator Proposal Rejected

A report from Margaret Tetrick, Vice President of Welfare, announced with regret that IRA will be unable to offer refrigerators for student rental. The cost of the rental is higher than expected and the necessary bookkeeping is more than the Council can handle. However, students, except those living in Buckham, Wills, Chittenden, and Converse Halls, may rent or buy a refrigerator on their own. These students will have to pay a four dollar electricity fee. A committee will be set up to formulate a specific policy on refrigerators in individual rooms.

IRA Committee

Margaret Tetrick also encouraged all students to give their support on an IRA committee. These committees were formed by the Association's by-law and are necessary to the smooth running of the campus. The Welfare Committee facilitates the negotiations and communications between IRA and the University Housing Office and the University Food service office. The social committee was established to promote sound and healthy social programs for the IRA members. The Athletic Committee promotes intramural programs and the improvement of the athletic facilities used by the students. The Cultural Committee provides events or series of events to enhance the academic milieu of the IRA constituency.

The Standards and Publications Committee oversees IRA elections, reviews all unit constitutions, and oversees the publication of the Residence Hall Handbook. The Education Committee reviews present educational programs and concepts, and explores proposed concepts. Any student living in the dorms is eligible to work on these committees and is encouraged to contact Margaret Tetrick, Ext. 2952. In addition, a special SAGA food committee will be organized to work on dining hall problems. Every dorm must submit one representative to this committee.

Locks, Deadbolts

Recording Secretary, reported that copies of the IRA constitution and by-laws will be available to all students this week. A head count and voting strength will also be available to enable each living unit to vote representatively for their constituents in the Council.

Homecoming '71

A guest from the Inter-Fraternity Council, Woody Glade, asked IRA's support on behalf of Homecoming '71. October 5 to 10, events will include a concert by BB King, a football rally, and football and soccer games against the University of Rhode Island. Because of lack of funds, the idea of floats has been abandoned and each living unit is encouraged to enter the poster contest and support a candidate for king or queen.

Wills Hall

A petition for the improvement of the living conditions at Wills Hall was presented by the Wills representative, Steve Farber. The petition included the following proposals:

1. the desire for carpeting in the halls to cut down on noise and dirt
2. the free distribution of paint and supplies to improve the hallways and some of the rooms

3. the desire for a ping-pong table

4. the need for paper towel dispensers in the bathrooms

5. the need for storm windows to prevent the precipitation leaks and the wind from coming in

6. the desire for washing machines

7. the desire to rewrite the electricity for heavier appliances

8. the desire for mailboxes in each dorm

The proposals were discussed and referred to the Dorm Concepts Subcommittee of the Welfare committee.

CBW Renovations

In connection with the living conditions in the CBW complex, Dr. Keith Miner, the newly appointed Director of Housing, announced that he has accumulated $3,000 for the improvement of Chittenden, Buckham and Wills. Dr. Miner asked that a committee from these three dorms be formed to decide how this money should be utilized. Dean Gloria Thompson, Assistant Dean of Women Students, said that Chittenden and Wills are both having their central lounges redecorated at present. However, these dorms are having a security problem, and several pieces of furniture have been ripped off.

A motion was made by Steve Farber, Wills representative, that a ping-pong table be placed in Wills Hall for the use of the whole CBW complex. The motion was seconded and tabled, according to IRA rules, for voting next week.

Barbara Haggerty, representative from Christie Hall, suggested that IRA sponsor an all-campus ping-pong tournament. Barbara also urged the Council to plan some activities for Parents' Weekend, November 6.

Future of Converse Hall

Steve Rice suggested that an ad hoc committee in relation with the Dorm Concepts Committee be formed to study the future of Converse Hall. Construction of the Medical School may necessitate the destruction. A motion was made, the rules of the house were suspended, and the motion was passed.

The Inter-Residence Association meets every Tuesday night, 6:30, in the Marsh-Austin-Tupper Lounge. The meetings are open to all interested students.

Semi-Annual Blood Drive Begins Next Week

"Why should I give blood?" "I need all of mine, I just don't have any to spare."

"It's painful to give blood." "There are some of the thoughts which go through the minds of most of the students as the semi-annual blood drive rolls around."

Well, when you stop to think of it, those really are not valid arguments.

The human body contains an average of twelve pints of blood.

When you donate one pint, it is replaced in 24 to 48 hours. The process is almost painless. The nurse applies a liquid spray which numbs the area around the vein. The actual drawing takes seven to ten minutes. It's as easy as that.

Why should you give blood? Well, there are many people in the hospitals of Vermont and New Hampshire who need blood because of accidents and surgery. You could very well be in the same situation some day. Your generosity could very well save a life. Someone else's generosity may save yours some day.

Whole blood may be used for up to twenty-one days after it is donated. If it has not been used by then, it can be broken down and parts of it used for different purposes. Up to seven different products may be obtained from a pint of blood. You can be sure that yours will not be wasted.

Ethan Allen Rifles and Percussion Rifles are co-sponsoring the blood drive in coordination with the Red Cross on October 4-6, in Billings Center. Come between 10:00 AM and 4:00 PM. Refreshments will be served after you have donated. Parental Permission slips are no longer needed, as the age of majority in Vermont has been lowered to eighteen.

An added incentive for the Greeks is the trophy for the house having the highest percentage of donation. The Captain John C. Strickler Memorial Trophy goes to the fraternity with the highest percentage of its membership donating blood. The Sergeant Louis C. Hines Memorial Trophy goes to the sorority with the highest percentage. The Lieutenant D. Orvis Trophy and the W.S.G.A. Blood Drive Trophy go to the men's and women's dorms, respectively, with the highest percentage. The winners from last year, March 1971, are Alpha Gamma Rho (100%), Gamma Phi Beta (63.7%), Marsh Hall (30.9%) and Slade (21.7%).

Last semester, noted 755 pints. Let's try to break 1000 this time. We need your help.

Moulton Urges Student Participation In Politics

Elbert G. Moulton, secretary of development and community affairs in Vermont, told University of Vermont students Thursday (Sept. 16) to "become part of the political system and exert public pressure."

This, he continued, is the only way to influence the future development of the state. Don't leave it to "pie-in-the-sky" planners hired by the state, he warned.

Moulton spoke at a session of the Environmental Quality 99 course taught by Dr. Bruce Parker as part of the Environmental Studies Program of the College of Agriculture and Home Economics and open to the public for the many guest lectures planned.

Moulton said that wide participation in decision-making is essential in what he called a "delicate moment in the history of the state of Vermont," when decisions that must be made will affect the growth of the state for the next several decades.

He said "extremes of both sides" were involved in the pressure groups offering solutions to environmental problems. "There are those who would build a wall around Vermont and turn it into a park. There are others interested only in the quick dollar, who are willing to ravage the land."

He called his a "middle course" to preserve the environment yet provide jobs for our people. "We have been on a course of environmental suicide," he said. "The answer is not to substitute a course of economic suicide."

He said he feared the emergence of a "tragic paradox in which our young people are forced to go to the hot cities to get jobs, while retired people come here to enjoy our clean air and clean water."

Moulton predicted a growth in the state of 55,000 persons in this decade, about the same as in the past decade.

To have them gather in Burlington, Montpelier-Barre, Bennington and Brattleboro, as they have in the past 10 years, would be tragic, he said, and "only add to our environmental problems, our traffic problems."

Instead, "we've got to help communities like North Troy.

We've got to help the North Troy, the Newports and the Hardwicks to get industry so that the growth can be in those areas."

Throughout his talk, Moulton emphasized that planning at the community level is essential if communities are to control their own growth.

In this planning today, "Vermonters themselves are not participating enough in the decision making. They're letting too many other people make the decisions on which way their communities grow," he concluded.

Big Sister Program Beneficial

by Debby King

Carol and I are members of the Big Sister Program of the Howard Family Service. I am a senior here at UVM, and Carol is a sophomore at Burlington High School. We're writing this together because we both wanted to tell about what we've done and how we feel about each other.

Early this summer the Howard Family Service called me. They were looking for a Big Sister for Carol. I was working nights, my friends were working days, and I was lonesome - so I volunteered. That's how I met Carol.

We had a lot of fun all summer. It wasn't that easy at first, because neither of us makes friends easily. It just took a little while to get used to each other. We rode our bicycles everywhere, mostly to North Beach (though you wouldn't know it by our "lans"). One trip took us to Anable Chasm, NY.

Even though it's only three miles from the Port Kent ferry dock, by the end of the day we both felt like we'd ridden for fifty miles. Not long after this trip both our bicycles broke down, so our traveling became limited. We never did anything elaborate - we had more fun just relaxing and getting to know each other. Carol and I have found a lot of things in common. We even took a trip to the horror movie house. We both like reading, music and rain. We're becoming a little closer each time that we get together, which isn't as often as we'd like now that school has started.

So far this fall, we've painted my room (even the window shade!) and we've gone to a football game. We talk to each other on the phone at least once in the middle of the week. School is a big adjustment for both of us - it just takes so much time! For Carol, this relationship has helped her "get out of the house." She has become more active and outgoing, and we've both been to many places that we've never seen before. For me, I've gained a valuable insight into the attitudes and priorities of a fifteen-year-old, many things which I'd forgotten from my own early teens - already! Carol is really unique, she's intelligent, fun, and perceptive, especially where other people are concerned; in other words, she is usually "Right on!" Being in secondary education, these observations are especially valuable to me.

Carol and I are continuing our relationship because we really enjoy it. We don't expect too much from each other, just sisterly companionship and mutual trust. After all, what are sisters for?

Merger Of Student Organizations

By William A. Stewart

Fort Collins, Colo. The National Student Association and the Association of Student Governments, the nation's two largest organizations of student governments, intend to merge and develop a national student union.

Plans for the merger were laid at the 24th National Congress of the NSA at Colorado State University here. Together, the NSA and ASG represent about 800 student governments.

The merger would create a single association to represent student governments nationally. Delegates considered it the first step toward a national union of students. Ultimately such a union would have individual students as members, rather than student governments.

The new association probably would be called the U.S. National Student Union. The more than 400 NSA delegates also unanimously approved a proposal calling for a student voice in faculty collective bargaining.

"What little legitimate power students have in governance will be largely destroyed by the new movement to collective bargaining," the resolution said. While crediting unions with providing a "desirable means of organizing against exploitation, and economic pressures, and political threats to academic freedom," the proposal warned that "unions exist to further the self-interest of their members. And so we can expect faculty unions to be frequently working against the economic self-interest of students."

The unions will "shift power from faculty-student committees and student to boards of collective bargaining," the proposal said. It declared that "the interest of all faculty groups would be best served if students with voting authority are represented on boards of collective bargaining which deal with instructional negotiation."

The proposal gave NSA a mandate to enter into negotiations with the National Education Association, the American Federation of Teachers, and the American Association of University Professors to "establish a policy statement and guidelines on the role of students in collective bargaining" and to have the bargaining agents "clarify their position on the role of teaching assistants and faculty unions."

The Concert Bureau has gone ahead on their own, without contacting IRA or the Greeks as they did with Homecoming Weekend, and they intend to present some form of entertainment that weekend. Dick Gregory, the black comedian who spoke here two years ago and stimulated a good deal of discussion, will speak at UVM over Winter Weekend. There will be an alumni hockey game, and a Varsity Hockey Game against our arch-rivals Middlebury. But the prospect of another Film Festival seems doubtful at this point. Although, as SA President Gene Beaudoin said, "A Film Festival could really tie the whole weekend together," there are as of yet no concrete plans for such an event. The Administration and the Student Association are at an impasse over how to resolve the $22,000 debt, and until that question is settled upon and agreed upon by all parties concerned, the chance for another Film Festival seem very dim.

Editorial

Justice Hugo Black

This past week former Justice Hugo Black of the Supreme Court passed away, barely eight days after his resignation from the nation's highest bench. In his thirty-four years as Associate Justice - from 1937 to 1971 - Black's tenure saw five Chief Justices and six Presidents. Yet throughout that period, from Roosevelt's New Deal to the Cold War and the McCarthy Era, to the turbulence of the '60's, Hugo Black's overriding concern was the protection and preservation of those rights which are guaranteed to us unequivocally in the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States: freedom of speech, press, religion, and right of assembly. In an interview a few years ago, Justice Black stated that as long as freedom, liberty and justice endure in America, America will persevere in solving her problems peacefully and democratically.

Freedom, liberty, and justice. Those are the ideals upon which this country was founded two centuries ago. However, Justice Black could not have been more accurate in his prescription for today's problems. For unless, freedom, liberty and justice continually triumph over slavery, repression and injustice, all of us - Republican, Democrat, conservative, liberal and whatever, will be the ultimate losers. J.B.Y.

A Thoughtful Look At Pollution And 'The Forces Of The Marketplace'

That the environment is in serious trouble is unquestionable. The typical solutions to ecological problems proposed by liberals and radicals are unworkable and often dangerous in a proportionately rare way. The typical liberal calls for government controls, in a world where about the only thing government can do effectively is inflate our money. The typical radical calls for a return to the pre-industrial era, the assumption being, "no industry, no pollution."

But there is a third alternative, one receiving widespread support in conservative circles, which is worth discussion. This proposal, which would employ the forces of the marketplace to control pollution rests on the premise that pollution is a cost to society and should be considered in such a way. This proposal is outlined in a pamphlet written by Frank S. and John C. Meyer entitled "The Conservative Answer to Pollution," distributed by the American Conservative Union.

"The crux of the problem," write Messrs. Meyer, is that the polluter makes either bear a part of the cost of his activity, a situation which economists call an "external diseconomy." "The solution lies in finding a method which causes each polluter to bear this cost himself."

The method is taxation - another of the rare activities which the government is capable of handling. By determining the cost of pollution, taxes can be levied, taxes which would, in effect, tell industry to clean up or pay.

To avoid paying the pollution tax, an industry must stop polluting. The conservative tax credit should also be given to firms which do not pollute.

Under this system, companies may refuse to stop their dirty activities. If they choose this course, the cost of their products will be higher than that of comparable or substitute goods, and their sales and profits will decrease, which is exactly what should happen. For the less they sell, the less they produce and the less

Dick Gregory, he was paid the sum of twelve hundred and fifty ($1250.00) dollars of Student Association funds.

From would seriously question these four particular speakers (unpublished anything to the University Campus that could be termed "cultural, educational, or recreational."

20. The Court finds Student Association fees have been used and expended for the purchase of revolutionary films.

21. The Student Association fees were used and disbursed to delay the expense of one John C. Phillips to attend a National Student Conference at the University of Michigan where demonstrators were planned to disrupt the operation of the federal government in Washington, D.C. during the first week in May 1971. Phillips at the time was the President of the University Student Association. The expenditure of these Student Association fees for Phillips' trip to Michigan University was approved by one Richard Hansen, who at the time was a Student Association advisor and Director of Student Activities at the Defendant University. He testified in these proceedings.

22. During the year 1970-71 the sum of twenty-one thousand ($21,000.00) dollars of the Student Association fund was appropriated to the "Cynic" newspaper.

The "Cynic" has consequently published political editorials of a radical persuasion, espousing the tenets of radical student unions; made an editorial appeal to advocate political activism, published articles that have resulted in embarrassment to the plaintiffs; accepted advertisements for contraposition; ridiculed and accused the President of the country of political guttering and attacked him for "selling out"; gave front page prominence to a political speech of a John F. Kennedy calling for nuclear disarmament; published articles written by an E. K. Brewer entitled "SCEPTIC" that recommended violence by "students upon students" and proposed open civil war among University students, and concluded the article with a notice that "A conference on revolutionary politics will be held at M.I.T., Cambridge, Mass., Feb. 28, Mar. 2. If interested see poster in Cynic office."

In general the publication has pursued a course of blatant abuse of its rights as a free press and has evidenced a narrow-minded, dogmatic desire to win at all costs and anyone disagreeing with its policy, its beliefs and opinions, all contrive to the pronounced policy of a free and independent campus publication.

23. It is the facts as found in the preceding paragraphs, 17-22 inclusive, as well as the previous findings of the Court, that the "Cynic" is not a neutral publication but is a partisan publication, one that is biased and prejudiced, and that it is not a free and independent campus publication.

24. The plaintiffs testified, and the Court finds, that their objections to certain speakers brought to the University campus is not the speakers' political views or philosophies but the fact they are required to contribute to the cost and expense for the appearance of certain speakers.

25. That sometime during the middle of April 1971 an opinion poll concerning the mandatory nature of the Student Association Fee was conducted throughout the so-called University community. A total of eighteen hundred and seventy-four (1874) students voted. Four hundred and sixty (460) voted to make membership in the Student Association voluntary and to eliminate the Student Association Fee. Two hundred and seventy-two (272) voted that membership be automatic and the fee optional. Four hundred and sixty-two (462) voted for the present system.

26. The plaintiffs testified that they would not object or oppose the present mandatory fee system provided the University trustees were to exercise direct control over the disbursement of the fees. The Court so finds.

27. The Defendant University assumes other fees against its enrolled students, i.e., student health, library and athletic, and others, all of which are directly controlled by the Defendant University.

28. The University Student Senate voted for a mandatory Student Association Fee.

29. At the time the University's books and records are audited, the books of the Student Association are also audited. This audit of the Student Association's books is limited to "income and disbursements" entries.

30. The plaintiffs herein have all paid the Student Association fees during their enrollment at the University.

31. No evidence was introduced that had a tendency to show that the Trustees of the Defendant University have at any time exercised any influence, or attempted to, in the selection of speakers obtained through the so-called "Speakers Bureau" referred to in paragraph 18 of these findings.

32. One cannot become a matriculating student at Defendant University without first paying the Student Association Fee.

33. The Court finds it to be the duty and responsibility of the Trustees of the Defendant University to control and supervise the disbursement of the Student Association fees assessed against enrolled students by it.

34. The Court finds the Trustees of the Defendant University have failed to assume the duties and responsibility of controlling and supervising the disbursements of the Student Association fees.

35. The Court finds that Student Association fees have been expended and disbursed by officers of the Student Association for purposes other than educational, cultural, recreational or social in nature.

36. The Court finds that expenditure and appropriation of the Student Association fees may not be made without the approval of the Trustees of Defendant University as to the purpose for such disbursements so long as the assessment of these fees remain mandatory against the enrolled student.

37. A Judgment Order will issue in accordance with these findings. The transcript and exhibits are made a part of these findings for the purpose of review by the Supreme Court.

Bald Eagle In Danger Of Extinction In U.S.

Washington, D.C. - The National Wildlife Federation has announced a $500 bounty for information leading to the conviction of anyone shooting a bald eagle anywhere in the United States.

Federation Director Thomas L. Kimball said the reward program was started as a result of hunters throughout the U.S. expressing their outrage at the recently revealed mass slaughter of eagles in Wyoming.

The bald eagle, America's national bird and emblem, is in serious trouble from hard pesticides and diminishing habitat. The southern race of bald eagle found in the eastern half of the U.S. is classified as an endangered species by the U.S. Interior Department. The total bald eagle population in the lower forty-eight states may contain as few as three to four thousand birds.

Since 1940 it has been against Federal law to shoot or otherwise molest bald eagles, but the number of illegal shootings is becoming more important factor working against the bird's survival. A national furor was raised when recent testimony before a Senate subcommittee in Washington revealed that air-borne sharpshooters were hired by local ranchers in Wyoming, Wyoming, area to slaughter eagles and other wildlife. More than 65 golden and bald eagles were reported in a pile at one ranch. "Frankly," Kimball said, "American hunters are tired of being tarred and feathered for the actions of criminals erroneously identified as hunters."

Effective immediately, the Federation will pay a $500 reward upon verifying that the claimant's information was of substantial assistance in obtaining a conviction for shooting a bald eagle (Haliaeetus leucocephalus) in violation of 16 USC 668.

The claimant must request the reward in writing to the National Wildlife Federation 1412 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036, within six months after conviction. If more than one bald eagle was shot, the convicted person will be awarded $500 for each bird, representing the total number shot.

Letters ToThe Editor

September 23, 1971

To people:

Go ahead, murder someone, but unless you are either very bright or lucky our society will in one way or another terminate your life. We value life to the extent that we severely punish those who end another's life, and frequently scorn and devalue those who would take their own life. We want people to live, but how much is actually done to help people to be at peace with themselves and be more than production and consumption units.

We teach and many do learn something, but how important is it to know some history, to be able to do derivatives, to hit a tennis ball, write a poem, and so on when the person does not joy in living? In comparison, how important is it to help people to find their way in life, and learn to live creatively and peacefully with themselves and others?

In my life it is more important to be at peace with myself and to interact with others in a nondestructive way, than to acquire any specific skills or knowledge. From this orientation it troubles me to view what I consider to be a disproportionate expenditure of energy on this campus and most other campuses throughout this nation. So much is spent to teach skills and knowledge and so little to help people to learn about people and themselves. Traditional modes of formal education have typically had this imbalance of energy expenditure, but where has it gotten us? It seems that it has helped take us to the brink of eliminating the form of life we supposedly value so highly.

Look around, what is life about? Is it the people hiding with drugs and alcohol, the friend who took his life, a relationship that ended in hatred and hurt, people who are mugged, raped, killed, and often the girl giving her body for love, the guy prostituting his values for friendship, and you, with all your fears, worries, and doubts?

Does all this have to be? Isn't it time we seriously reconsider our educational priorities and energy expenditures? Do we really value life?

Making Of

James Abrams

Life on the Cynic staff is exciting, the office a hotbed of information. Editors are kept scrambling between phone calls to the power centers on those bright red phones, and directing the eager mass of writers to heads on those countless stories that keep pouring in.

The Cynic week actually starts on Friday afternoon, when the editors meet to discuss the week's paper. "How come the article that was to be continued on page seven never reappeared?" The editors also discuss the news, feature, sports, and other items that might be researched. Writers turn in their stories Monday at noon, and suggest, or are given, new stories to investigate. Seriously, writer told me that he "doesn't know any better way of getting to know those people on campus and in the community who are at the center of those activities that really make a difference, than by working on the Cynic staff."

Tuesday night is lay-out. Stories are returned from "type-writing," where they are printed in long, single columns. "Lay-out" is the editors' job of putting those long pieces of paper together on a page in such a way that it makes sense, and is aesthetically pleasing. It is analogous to putting together a jig-saw puzzle. The comrades of the editors as they try to help each other lay-out their pages is heart-warming. "Who stole my article? A guy on my page." "It did." "It's mine, my writer did it." "Whose that?" "Me." "Oh, anyway I have priority." "Oh yeah." "Yeah."

Wednesday the paper is sent to the printers, Thursday it comes out, and Friday we start all over again.

Ordered Priorities" Not A Panacea

By Baron Von Kannon
 Reorder our priorities.
 The Liberal catch-phrase has been heard so many times people blindly accept it as the solution to all of our problems. Proponents of a basic reordering of priorities claim that if the government would only use money for the purpose of social welfare, we would solve our problems of housing, poverty, drug abuse and crime.

Wide-spread acceptance of this claim, I think that it is time to ask the question: "Is reordering priorities the way to solve our problems?"

Let's take a look at the behavior of the U. S. Government. I think all can agree that the Vietnam War is the most technological war in the history of the United States. It is also fair to say that the major decisions regarding the war have been made by civilian bureaucrats. The civilian bureaucracy, the State Department and the Defense Department have been calling the shots, while the military has been carrying out the orders.

What have been the results of this highly technological war? The answer is obvious: it has been one of the most inefficient, most bungled wars of all time. It has cost billions of dollars and thousands of lives, and it has not solved any of our problems.

Who urges us to reorder our priorities? The answer is, it is often those very people who are responsible for the inefficiency of the government.

the civilian-run war effort is inefficient, what is if this country would follow the advice of the reordering of priorities? What would happen if we shifted money presently appropriated to the Defense to pay, HEW and HUD? Aren't the departments — the ones that deal with social problems — the ones that have been bungling the civilian-run war effort? The very same ill-run bureaucracy that has been bungling the operation of the war in Vietnam is being made by defense critics is that the civil service is inefficient and that HEW and HUD are all bungle, inefficient, and women who, if only given the resources, would be able to solve the complex problems of poverty, drug abuse and crime, while their counterparts in the Defense Department are a bunch of bunglers who are totally incapable of finding the answer to the situation.

Only for the reordering of priorities people the efficiency of HEW bureaucrats is ungrounded. In recent years the percentage of the national budget spent on social welfare programs has risen.

Want not only a percentage increase of money for HEW, but an increase in the total amount of money spent on social welfare programs has risen.

example of the failure of money to solve problems in New York City, under the leadership of that Ritualistic Liberal, John Lindsay. During the administration the city's expenditures have increased. Yet the problems are worse today than they were when Lindsay took office.

is that money alone will not solve complex problems and if money is channeled through bureaucratic problems are likely to be worse.

I Drive The Cynic To Be Printed Every Week

by Shelly Eisenberg
 Click... "Good morning, the time is now 4:00 A.M. The highlights in the news are..."

Do you know what it's like waking up at 4:00 A.M. every Thursday morning? I do. I drive the Vermont Cynic to be printed every week.

The Cynic is printed at the office of the Springfield Times-Reporter, in Springfield, Vermont. Springfield is a factory town about 120 miles south of Burlington. The factory workers are arriving at the now famous Jones and Lamson tool factory.

I have a large flat green box with me that contains originals, and negatives of the originals. The originals are the layout sheets on which the paper is made up. These sheets are then photographed by a big camera that produces a negative the size of a newspaper page. When I get to Springfield I give the negatives to Ralph (not our editor) and he gets the paper ready for printing.

Ralph "marries" the negatives together in preparation for making a positive for the printing press. This involves attaching the appropriate pages together. For instance, in an eight page paper, pages one and eight are attached and a big "print" is made of the two pages. The "prints" are made on a machine that burns the negatives onto a metallic paper. This is done by a carbon arc lamp. The "print" is then developed chemically and made ready for the press.

The newspaper is made by a process called offset printing. The "print" is taken and put onto a roller on the printing press. The reason it is called offset is due to the fact that the "print" never touches the surface on which it is printed. By a system of rollers and water pressure a microscopic film of water forms between the "print" and the ink. The ink in turn is imprinted on the paper going through the machine.

The press has been run by the proud operator, Steve, for many years (incidentally Steve's son is now a student at UVM). Up until recently he has done the job single handedly, and believe me it is quite a job. The press consists of 4 units, each unit able to print 4 pages of a newspaper. A paper can be printed in any of several colors by using different colored inks. The press runs at a rate of 10,000 papers per hour, which means 300 per second. It does not take long to print the 5,000 copies of the Cynic. As the papers come off the press they put me to work stacking and tying them.

Finally about 8:30 I load the 1,000 pounds of the Cynic into my car and I am on my way back to Burlington. By now the sun is well up in the sky and I can see the beautiful Vermont countryside. I travel north past Mt. Ascutney and Windsor, the birthplace of Vermont. Just south of Montpelier, the interstate reaches its highest elevation of 1752 feet and a magnificent view of Camel's Hump and Mt. Mansfield can be seen. Warily I arrive back in Burlington at about 10:45.

Back in Burlington the circulation staff takes over delivering the Cynic throughout the campus. My job is over until next Thursday when I click "Good morning the time is now 4:00 A.M."

Used books cause problems for Bookstore Credit: Ken Perry

MoreOn TheBookstore

by Sandy Margolis
 Everyone of us has faced the misery of watching our funds dwindle away as we pay for books we may not even need. If the situation is to be alleviated we must turn to the faculty for help.

The enraged cry for more books can be answered. The bookstore management is willing to help the students in any way possible. The bookstore always requests the faculty to get their requisitions in before finals, earlier than most universities, so bookstore buyers can hand pick as many used books as there are to be had. Too often a faculty member may forget the burden on students of buying and paying unnecessarily for new books and not meet the requisition deadline.

In addition, many professors order the newest editions, which are not always superior to the old. Making used copies valuable. While others sometimes require books which are never even used in the course.

Finally, at the end of the semester when one may sell back their books, the bookstore will pay 50% of the book value, assuming the book will be used the following semester. If the book is not to be used, or even if it is unclear whether the book is to be used, the bookstore will not buy them back. The used book companies will buy them, but only for about 20% of their actual value. These companies have representatives at our bookstore who fulfill this capacity.

Certainly with the cooperation of both the faculty and the bookstore, the cost of books for next year could be less than at the present. With the cost of text books going up about 20% each year, let's hope so.

Transcendental Meditation Offered AtUVM

At Stanford University Dr. Demetri P. Kanellakos summarized the profound effects of TM. As stated in Hospital Times - London, effects of TM "include increased energy and efficiency in performing any kind of work; increased tranquility of mind coupled with decreased physical and mental tension; partial or complete loss of desire for hallucinogenic and similar drugs, including alcohol; increased creativity, productivity, intuitiveness, and so on; improvement in functional disorders such as poor body posture and insomnia; and better mobilization of body resources to meet adverse circumstances such as accidents, sensory monotony, and surgery."

"These effects," Dr. Kanellakos emphasizes, "come about rapidly, easily, and quite automatically, and do not depend on the adoption of any new beliefs or strange style of living."

During July over 1000 people gathered at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst for a two week symposium. The participants were not necessarily committed to TM, rather these prominent professional people were invited to discuss their fields as the Maharishi commented on the relationships between their areas and his own. Among the symposium speakers were Buckminster Fuller, Society, is an affiliate of SIMS.

Bill Russell who teaches TM in architecture and inventor; Major General Franklin Davis; and Roland Patzer, U.V.M. Dean of Students. Regarding the Maharishi's comments Ben Gerson says in Boston After Dark "The tendency to present everything in terms of SCI at first seemed manipulative; but it became apparent that the thought processes Maharishi is concerned with are indeed so fundamental and their application so broad that they can hardly be extraneous to any discussion of consciousness. His points were, at the worst, obvious, but more often than not, analytically useful and poetically apt."

The Students International Meditation Society (SIMS) is a non-profit educational organization; IMS, International Meditation Society, is an affiliate of SIMS.

Vermet through SIMS spent three and one half months in training with the Maharishi in India. He believes "TM is so simple that it is conceivable to teach everyone in the world... TM is a systematic process of taking the attention from the surface thinking level, to progressively finer states of mental activity until the attention transcends the finest aspect of thought and comes to pure consciousness or pure creative intelligence. It's not a matter of letting everyone think alike; it's a matter of allowing everyone to reach, to unfold his full potential." His SIMS office is located at 52 Birchcliff Parkway (Telephone 862-7259). For those interested in the introductory lecture for the next series will be held in City Hall auditorium on Wednesday, October 6 at 8:00 pm.

Every year about this time, the Cynic Sports staff seek fit to make various award presentations to those public figures it has learned to keep an eye on. The list of these "All-Americans" and the trophies to which they are entitled has been compiled with sincere appreciation and respect of those individuals who have mastered their specialties in the political game.

Frustrated Halfback Award: This year, President Nixon has been afforded the rare honor of receiving this trophy. The presentation is made in dedication to his uncanny ability to fumble the ball. However, he has been able to get a firm grasp of the pigskin in pressure situations, but still has been somewhat reluctant to do anything with it.

The Sideline Award: This trophy will be jointly shared by both Secretary of the Treasury John Connally and Mayor John Lindsay. Both have been noted for playing from both sides of the field. Each will only be allowed to keep the trophy one month at a time, but no difficulties are expected since both recipients are so skilled at exchanging things.

The "Oops" Award: will be proudly presented to Vice President Spiro Agnew. Mr. Agnew has become very skilled at making the tackle, whether the victim is the ball carrier or not. This is an excellent illustration of his desire to tackle anybody or anything on the opposition's side, and also a good indication of his desire to stay in the action, despite his team mates desire to keep him out.

The "Too Soon" Award: This award will be presented to Governor Nelson Rockefeller (affectionally called Attica by his teammates) of New York. Always eager to start the action, he has been noted on many occasions to hike the ball long before the quarterback has called for it.

The "All American Quarterback and Razzle Dazzle Award: will be presented to the Silent Majority, in humble recognition of their ability to pass the ball off before they are forced to do anything with it, and also their mastery of the technique of making everyone else on the team believe that they are calling all the plays.

And finally, the Myopic Referee Award will be granted to J. Edgar Hoover for his courage in refusing to call the game, no matter how late or how dark it gets.

WRA Plans Active Year

The Women's Recreation Intramural Basketball and Association, which has recently Paddleball competition.

In regards to the Thousand Islands Swim Marathon, the turnout was the most enthusiastic in the history of the event. Christie Hall came out the victor with the greatest number of laps over the two week period, and Mary Powden from that hall had the greatest individual number with 235.

Cindy Matheson and Barbara Wachter tied for the greatest number of lengths in a 15 minute period, each finishing with a total of 44.

Anyone who has questions on the upcoming events is asked to get in contact with Betty Jones in 438 Harris.

Winner Don Tetzlaf displays Battered Bumper

The Great Race

The first annual U.V.M. "Great Fraternity Race" last Saturday night was won by Sigma Phi's Don Tetzlaf.

Don Tetzlaf won the race on the final run down the front straight, squeaking by the three wheeler at the finish line.

The race had its share of real excitement, including a spinout by Jack Arne on the third turn, and the early race leader turning the final two laps without a right front wheel.

Thirteen fraternities sent drivers to Catamount Stadium for the big event, but four of the first brothers found themselves without rides, as accidents and mechanical troubles throughout the evening of novice drivers racing reduced the number of available machines.

Sigma Phi now holds the "Battered Bumper Award". The trophy, a bumper from the Nordic Ford / Coca Cola Torino of defending Vermont Nascar Champion, Ron Barcomb, was formed into a free-standing, four foot conversation piece by Burlington sculptress, Kate Robins.

Don Tetzlaf and Sigma Phi also picked up three "lapper legs" of Falstaff Beer, undoubtedly quickly consumed in the post race celebration back at Sigma Phi.

The other members of the triumphant three were Tom Glazier, who represented Sigma Alpha Epsilon and who placed second in the competition and Jack Arne who brought home the third place honors for Sigma Phi Epsilon.

Paul Jakubielski (16) sends it through the uprights for the first Vermont score against Bucknell.

Victory Slips In Final Moments

by Ken Whittaker

When asked how the team felt after the game, the only answer one of the Catamounts could think of was shocked. This feeling was undoubtedly shared by many of the Vermont fans Saturday afternoon as they left Catamount stadium shaking their heads over the defeat. The UVM Catamounts lost to the Bucknell Bison by a score of 10-6, the winning play coming within the last minute of play.

The Catamounts held the edge all the way, both in the scoring and the statistics, until that final decisive play in the last stanza. Vermont by far proved itself to be the superior club, gaining 21 first downs to only 8 on the part of the opposition. Along with this fact, they doubled the yardage gained on the ground by Bucknell, and almost tripled the yardage gained in the air.

The first blood of the contest was drawn by the Catamounts early in the second quarter. Vermont started an offensive drive from its own 25 yard line, and in 13 plays brought the ball down to the Bucknell 20. Here the drive stalled, but a field goal attempt by Paul Jakubielski proved successful as the Cats went ahead by a score of 3-0. The remaining three points for Vermont were scored in similar fashion late in the third quarter as Jakubielski once again sent it flying through the uprights.

The last quarter proved to be disastrous for the Catamounts, for it was here that the Bisons scored all of their ten points.

The first mark Bucknell made on the scoreboard came as a result of a safety. Carl Daukas dropped back to punt, but took the hike high and cleaved to down the ball to give the opposition two points. Minutes later, another bad hike from center ended in disaster. The hike was low and as Daukas bent to pick it up, his knee inadvertently brushed the grass, and the ball was downed. On the very next play, Bison quarterback Paul Kmetz combined with halfback superstar Rick Dietz for a 28 yard pass play which took into the endzone to put the Catamounts under by a score of 8-6.

The two point conversion proved successful as the scoring ended for the day. The Catamounts came very close to adding more points to the cause in the first quarter. The two linebackers came as Gary Vandecar fumbled the ball on the one, and the second as another Jakubielski field goal attempt hit the crossbar.

The defensive club for

Vermont kept up the reputation it has so far established for the present season, and put in a very fine performance. The offensive unit also moved the ball very well, having a little bit better luck in the first half.

Ed Yurica served as the signal caller all afternoon and put in a fine performance in mobilizing the offensive unit. Earl Olsen, who saw most of the action against Connecticut, did not play since he is still recovering from an ankle injury.

Bob Rodger saw a lot of action in the first half, but little in the second as he contributed 60 yards on ten carries. Gary Vandecar and Steve Coon were both utilized to a great degree throughout the entire contest, and Carl Daukas was called upon to do a lot of running in the second half, where he contributed a good hunk of yardage.

Both clubs showed the same pass statistics, throwing 19 and completing 8. Dan Leber and Tim Sullivan were called upon the most, as each caught three and continued 65 and 53 yards respectively.

To illustrate the performance of the defensive unit for the Catamounts, the Bisons were unable to cross the midstripe of the field until the fourth quarter, where everything broke loose. The only penetration that was made into Vermont territory came as a result of the bad pass from the center to Daukas, which set up the winning touchdown. The Bisons were limited to only 99 yards during the entire contest.

Coach Scannella's team was slated to meet Lehigh, another Pennsylvania club, at Centennial field this Saturday afternoon at one o'clock. With this game, the Catamounts hope to boost their record up to two wins and one loss.

Managers Wanted

There are several openings for managerial positions in various fall sports. This is an excellent opportunity to help any University student to build character and leadership abilities. As of the moment, a manager is needed for Cross Country Track and also a student to help out the swim team. Anyone who is interested should make a point to contact John Stowell in Room 337 Mills Hall Ext. 3898 or at the swim office by calling 656-3074.

Lehigh Poses Strong Threat

All American center candidate John Hill will lead an offensive array with Coach Fred Dunlap believes to be the strongest he's seen since coming to Lehigh in 1963. The Engineers, victors over Hofstra 28-0, and C.W. Post 24-14, are off to their best start since 1960.

The club from Allentown Pa. have shown themselves to be very strong up the middle. The offensive standouts for the team are Kim McQuillen, who plays the role as the chief signal caller, fullback Jack Rizzo, and tailback Don Dorio.

McQuillen, a 6 - 2, 180 - pound right hander, has given the Lehigh squad a very valuable passing threat. So far into the season, he has completed 28 of 49 passes for 371 yards and three interceptions. He also has a 28 yard touchdown pass and one field goal.

The backfield combination of Dorio and Rizzo can prove to be a very valuable weapon against the Catamounts. Dorio was the team's rushing leader in 1969 with 637 yards and a 4.4

average. He also led the season in punt returns, scoring, kickoff returns and punting. Rizzo was the team's running leader last year, totalling 800 yards and a 4.5 average. He also set the pace in touchdowns and pass receiving.

Lehigh ground out the school record of 2,371 yards on the ground in 1970, but made only 675 in the air. However, the Engineers have a variety of receivers to work with this year. Like flanker Bill Howard, split end John Aylsworth, tight end Dave Gill, along with the infamous DiOrio - Rizzo combination.

Defensively, the Engineers are counting heavily upon the services of a defensive lineman who helped to limit the opposition to 175 points in 10 games last season. The record for a Lehigh Club since 1960. This group includes Ed Romanow, Tom Benfield, end Mike Impink, linebackers Blake Johnstone, Mike Barth, Chuck Smith and Tom Staughnessy.

will once again be in a slot - T team with two running backs, a wingback, and a split end who can flip - flop to either side of the formation. Defensively, the set up will be four big men in front, four linebackers, leaving three men to cover the deep secondary.

The Engineers will be faced with an alumni problem this Saturday. Coach Joe Scannella is an alumnus of Lehigh, and he did his playing under the present director of athletics at that School. Scannella was an outstanding quarterback for the Engineers during the 1947, 48, and 49 seasons. They were winning seasons and Scannella, also a baseball letterman at Lehigh, was the field leader.

UVM Coed Is Attacked In The Parking Lot Of Robinson Dorm

by Arlene Erikson
A University of Vermont coed was attacked in the Robinson Hall parking lot on Friday, October 1. The incident occurred about 8 o'clock in the evening as the girl was getting out of her car. Although this is the sixth such assault to occur in the Burlington area in the last month, it is the first one to take place on the campus proper.

The coed is a commuting student. She had dropped some friends off at Memorial Auditorium and then proceeded to the Robinson Hall parking lot to park her car as usual. As she got out of her car, she was grabbed by an unidentified assailant. The assailant pushed the girl up against the car but she managed to push him away.

Upon reporting the incident to the Campus Security, the coed was taken to the UVM Infirmary where she was put under sedation. Besides being in shock, it is believed that the coed might have a back injury.

According to Chief Frederick Barrett of Campus Security, it is doubtful that this assault was committed by the same individual that was involved in the recent rash of female attacks. Moreover there was "no theft or robbery to motivate the individual." The Friday evening assault is now being investigated by the Burlington Police Department.

Campus Security Is Not A Taxi Service

While speaking to the Cynic, Chief Barrett made a point of noting that he does not appreciate the prank calls that the Security Police have received in response to their ride service. This service is only to be used by girls in "uncomfortable situations" during the evening hours. It is not intended to be a taxi service for groups of four to six females.

Free Karate Course

In response to the recent increase in personal attacks upon women in the Burlington area, a free course in self-protection is now being offered at the Academy of Okinawan Karate, 100 Church Street.

The course is made available through the efforts of the Academy's operator, Howard R. Flynn. A Karate expert, Flynn holds a second degree black belt in Vech-Ruy Karate.

Flynn had originally planned on holding the course from 1 P.M. to 3 P.M., Monday through Friday. The response was so great last Monday, however, that he found it necessary to open new sessions

Classes are also being held Monday through Friday, and from 10 A.M. to 12 noon. (continued on page eight)

UVM Votes May Swing Election

by Ralph Robbins

The State of Vermont will be the first test in the United States for the new law which enables 18 year-olds to vote in both local and national elections. The passage of the 26th Amendment to the Constitution guarantees this right. The law will be tested in the special election which has been called by Governor Davis to fill the seat left vacant by the late Senator Prouty. This election will be held on January 7, 1972 while the primaries for this election will be held on November 16, 1971.

Most of UVM's students, which now number about 7,000, will be able to vote in the election. The new law enables any student to register to vote in Burlington if he has "resided" in Burlington for 90 days prior to the election of a state or national official. Vermont's law requires a 180 day residing period to be able to vote in an election involving local officials.

According to the law, a student may still pay out of state tuition and receive financial support from his family in another state, and still qualify to vote in Burlington.

Going Through the Paces

This reporter went through the steps of registration at the Burlington City Hall. Although his parents reside in New Jersey and he pays the out-of-state tuition, he did not encounter any difficulties in the registration process.

The fact that the applicant has maintained an apartment in the State of Vermont for over a year without any interruptions, enables him to qualify for voting privileges in the State.

The situation is somewhat different for those students living in dormitories. Since people living in dormitories have only resided there since September 1, 1971, they are not eligible to vote in the primaries on November 23.

It appears, however, that these same students will be able to vote in the January 7 general election. It is not known at this time if Winter recess will have any effect on this situation.

The Board of Civil Authorities, which meets prior to each election, will rule on this and other borderline cases when they meet.

UVM Voting Power

Primaries in Vermont have traditionally yielded small voter turnouts. It is estimated that as few as 6,000 Vermonters may cast their ballots in the State primary in November. In 1968, the Democratic Primary winner won with a margin of 97 votes, with only 1,000 Democrats voting.

In Burlington's Ward 6, there are approximately 2,600 registered voters as of June 1, 1971. Also located in Ward 6 are the UVM resident halls which lie South of Main Street (M.A.T. Millis - Harris, Redstone). These dormitories represent a possible 3,000 additional voters in Ward 6.

Candidates Response

Candidates for the primaries must have filed by Wednesday,

October 6. Because of the time element involved, the Cynic is unable to print a list of the candidates at this time. The Cynic will, however, review all of the candidates before the primaries.

Campus leaders expect the candidates to conduct a more active campaign on the campus than has been conducted in the past. Dennis Morrisseau who is seeking the Democratic Nomination for Senator, and who may also receive the Liberty Union nomination, has already visited UVM's campus informally.

Registration

A voter registration table is located in Billings Center for the convenience of the students. It is estimated that a total of 250 students have already registered in Billings Center while approximately 300 to 500 students have registered in the City Hall.

Trustee Meeting: UVM's New Deficit: $1,000,000

by JBI Stevens

Waterman's Memorial Lounge was the scene Saturday for the October 2 meeting of the Board of Trustees. The meeting convened at 8:30 A.M. and began with the report of the Student Activities Committee. Mr. Arthur Jones discussed a resolution concerning residency requirements, the Health Association's investigation of the infirmary, and the referral to President Andrews of the Activities' fee dilemma.

Living-Learning Center

Mr. Jones also released more detailed information about the prospective 1973 Living-Learning Center. Following the meeting, the Cynic spoke with Mr. Jones, a member of the Evaluating Team called in to decide upon the proposals submitted by various firms for the final design of the Center. He stressed particularly the Team's innovative approach to making the decision. Instead of the usual method of accepting the lowest bid for certain specifications, the University outlined for each firm the elements involved—that is, the number of acres available, the amount of room necessary for various academic and residential functions, and then specified the exact price. With this information, the firms formulated their designs, from which the Evaluating Team has chosen one.

Mr. Jones, the Team consisted of Dean Powers, chairman; Dr. Bishop, a civil architects, two students and various consultants. They assumed the responsibility for investigating each detail of the plan and selected finally a series of interconnected units which contain residential, cafeteria, academic and recreational facilities for the 600 students and faculty members who will participate.

Jones pointed out that UVM is among the first to initiate such a program as the Living-Learning Center and also to use such a design concept. Harvard, Yale, and the University of California at Santa Cruz have established similar programs, although none is as extensive as that planned at Vermont. The Center, slated for opening by July 31, 1973, will occupy six acres on Main Street in the area of Marsh, Austin, and Tupper Halls. This location places the Center within convenient proximity to the library and laboratory facilities which will not be duplicated. The total price tag of $6,000,000 will in large part be covered by joint funds from the Departments of Housing, and Urban Development, and Health, Education, and Welfare.

IRA News: Students Claim Freshmen Women's Curfews Are Now Unconstitutional

by Jeri Covey

The Inter Residence Association held its meeting Tuesday, September 28 in the Marsh-Austin-Tupper main lounge. Among the topics discussed were Homecoming '71, freshman curfew, and the proposed refrigerator policy. Greater communication between the various student governments was also brought up by Gene Beaudoin, president of the Student Association, and Steven Rice, president of IRA.

Gene Beaudoin, Student Association president, and Jack Arute, Fraternity Forum president, cleared up the misconceptions about Homecoming '71. The point was stressed that SA did not legislate against Homecoming. Rather, due to a lack of communication, no Homecoming committee was formed last year. In previous years it had been the policy that Homecoming Weekend was managed by a self-perpetuating committee and funded by an allocation from the Student Association.

In consequence of this lack of a formal committee to handle Homecoming, the Student Association and the Fraternity Forum have taken over various aspects of the weekend. The SA is sponsoring Ralph Nader and BB King appearances at a cost of nearly $11,000. In turn, the Fraternity Forum is sponsoring a poster contest and a King and Queen contest. Individual fraternities are holding pregame rallies and parties.

Refrigerator Policy

A refrigerator policy was proposed to the Council. The point of the policy are:
1. The unit will not exceed 115 lbs. 20 volts, 60 watts, and 2-3 cubic feet.

2. A per-semester fee of $2.00 for electricity, payable to housing, will be asked of every student having a unit in his room.

3. Refrigerators left in the room at the end of the spring semester will be removed at a cost of $10-25 to the student.

Students are required to register and pay the fee because building and maintenance checks will be periodically made. Any refrigerator not conforming to the policy, in the event of fire or damage to the unit, will not be covered by insurance.

Freshman Curfew

Representatives from Harris, Patterson, and Wright Halls presented separate petitions against the obligatory curfew for freshmen women. The main point of each petition was that the curfew was unconstitutional in light of the lowering of the age of majority. A committee is being formed and a detailed proposal is being drawn to be (continued on page ten)

SA Is Asked To Join The National Student Lobby

This week the University of Vermont was invited to join a new political organization—the National Student Lobby. This is a non-profit, registered lobby in Washington, D.C. and is the only national student organization with a tax status which allows it to lobby Congress in behalf of student interests. It has a permanent staff and office in Washington to monitor the activities of Congress and the Executive.

Gene Beaudoin, president of the UVM Student Association, told the Cynic that he felt the formation of a student lobby is long overdue. Although Beaudoin supports the concept and believes UVM's Student Association will join the National Student Lobby, he explained that the Executive Board must look at the structure of the organization more carefully, as well as the financial obligations that will have to be met before making a final decision.

The National Student Lobby was organized this summer by four students from the University of California who were involved in the creation of a successful student lobby in California.

The California Student Lobby is student controlled and financed and has been an effective voice for student interests in the state legislature.

On 47 bills on which the lobby took a position, Dick Twohy, the legislative counsel of the California Student Lobby, has claimed a success rate of 81 percent. Twohy also pointed out that the California lobby has concerned itself with a wide variety of issues, "ranging from supporting greater aid to higher education to opposing a state 'no-knock' law."

Using the California Student Lobby as a model, the National Student Lobby will be controlled by students. The politics and priorities will be set by a poll of students at the member campuses, and from that consensus the policy will be determined.

This month the National Student Lobby has begun a massive membership drive. From its national office at 1835 K Street in Washington, D.C., the NSL staff is sending a letter (continued on page six)

Nader's Raiders To Tour The State Of Vermont

by Arlene Erikson

One of the highlights of this weekend's Homecoming '71 is the appearance of consumer rights advocate Ralph Nader. Mr. Nader is scheduled to arrive in Burlington at 5:30 tomorrow afternoon. His itinerary includes two television appearances, one from 6:00 to 6:45 on ETV and the other from 7:00 to 8:00 on CAX.

At 8:15 Mr. Nader will speak in Patrick Gymnasium and all UVM students will be admitted free with a student I.D. He tentatively plans to leave Burlington at 10 o'clock Friday night. Members of Nader's Raiders will arrive tonight. Tomorrow morning the Raiders will begin a consumer-rights campaign in Vermont.

The main purpose of this campaign is to initiate local interest in Nader's Public Interest Research Group (PIRG). The goal of PIRG is to form an organization in which students can employ a professional staff to bring about social betterment—effectively. (continued on page four)

Ruth Knowles To Speak

Thursday, October 7 at 7:30 p.m., Ruth Sheldon Knowles will speak in room 101 of the Geology Building.

RUTH SHELDON KNOWLES

The granddaughter and daughter of independent oilmen, Mrs. Ruth Sheldon Knowles is a petroleum specialist, magazine writer, lecturer, world traveler, foreign correspondent and author of the best-selling book, "The Greatest Gamblers: The Epic of American Oil Exploration," published by McGraw-Hill.

Mrs. Knowles has visited major world trouble spots in Communist and Socialist countries as well as in the developing countries of the Free World. She has made detailed studies of the oil situation throughout the world. Through her personal investigations, Mrs. Knowles has made significant contributions to the understanding of the world food and population problems. She has made surveys of the respective roles of government and private industry in solving environmental problems both in the United States and other countries. She has specialized in

In 1941, she was appointed by Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes as a petroleum specialist on his staff. She was sent to South America to make the first U.S. government survey of oil fields and refineries. She remained with the Petroleum Administration for War until the end of 1942. The following year she was a special consultant to the Venezuelan government on its new petroleum law. Between 1951 and 1959 she spent much time in Cuba in connection with oil exploration projects.

Mrs. Knowles has written a series of radio programs for "Voice of America" broadcasts in Europe and the Middle East. She has recently written a series of radio programs concerning the history and development of Middle East oil which are being broadcast in Arabic in Middle East oil countries.

Mrs. Knowles lectures to high schools, colleges, civic groups and business conventions throughout the United States. She has lectured to more than 5,000 social studies high school teachers from 40 states taking summer refresher courses in American Studies Programs in colleges and universities. way you see it. They are not radical ideas. They're traditional American ideas. That people and not outsiders will determine what their government will be. That's a traditional conservative idea.

Vermont is interesting in that we have many so called left wingers and many Yankees so called conservatives with many of the same and similar beliefs. There will be a political coalition between these two groups and that's the type of political reformation I'm trying to do.

They both believe in privacy, they both believe in human uniqueness. The similarities are much greater than the differences. We have this damn label problem.

CYNIC: What do you feel were the main reasons for losing when you ran for congress last year?

MORRISSEAU: A lot of reasons. We didn't have any money. No one knew me. We didn't have much ability to get people to know me. We were running against a man who ran for national office three times in the state.

The response that we got was tremendous for a person of my age and my quote-radical views.

CYNIC: What would be your future plans if not elected?

MORRISSEAU: If I don't win the democratic primary, I will run on whatever ticket is available either as an independent or a Liberty Union candidate or both. Second I may be doing some work with the McCarthy people. Third I may take some time off to travel and fourth there's a possibility to write a couple of books and do some national political organizing.

Mrs. Knowles has recently returned from her fifth trip around the world in the last six years and, in addition, has made in-depth editorial research trips to South America, the Middle East and North Africa. She has been a war correspondent four times in South Vietnam, from 1965 to 1970, and was made an honorary member of the U.S. Special Forces' famed and elite Green Berets. She has interviewed outstanding world personalities such as King Faisal of Saudi Arabia, President Suharto of Indonesia, President Thieu of South Vietnam, Prime Minister Golda Meir of Israel, Prime Minister Fidel Castro and Che Guevara of Cuba.

In 1962, just before the missile crisis Mrs. Knowles spent a month in Castro's Cuba. Her experiences were reported in an article in Petroleum Today and reprinted in U.S. News and World Report. She also contributed to the Reader's Digest, Wall Street Journal, Fortune, Nation's Business, Alumni and a number of professional journals.

Mrs. Knowles has served as a petroleum consultant to the United States, Mexican and Venezuelan governments. Working For The Volunteer Program

How does a nineteen year old, white middle class, pseudo-intellectual, college kid understand what it's like to be in prison, to have a mother and/or father who is an alcoholic, beats you, and probably runs around with other studs or mistresses, or whose life has been such a down that he's now strung out on drugs cause there was nothing else? He doesn't, because he's too naive; but he tries to be sensitive, knows that it will be hard learning. Maybe he'll never get anywhere, but he keeps trying.

That's one, and maybe it's just you too. Working for the Office of Volunteer Programs, one of my assignments is to do follow up on projects. I began last week, but I really did not know where to start. So I got in touch with a leader of Project Reach? We talked about the need for Volunteers to talk with men at the Correctional Center, and the needs of delinquent boys, and I knew I really did not understand, but I kept trying. Then I called up the Next Thing and went down there, and I talked to their people about the drug thing, and how NT is trying to show people that they can go beyond that. We talked about Unbound (a sub-project of NT) and how our own students could go and talk to somebody without any hassle. We talked of their need for volunteers and of their other needs, and though I knew I didn't really understand, you have to keep trying.

Later during the week I called up a leader of the Place. They work with people already into drugs. We talked of their needs, and though I still knew there were things I did not understand, I told him I would do what I could. After trying for three days, I got in touch with the leader of SHAC, a place for runaway kids to live temporarily. We made an appointment for next week. Though we'll talk about common needs, I know there will be a lot I won't understand. Finally, I talked to Sister B., a nun at Crossroads. This was a woman who could say more good words in one sentence, than most of us could write in a page. When a fellow volunteer offered to go there, I jumped at the chance.

Crossroads is a halfway house for convicts and ex-cons in Shelburne. It is the only halfway house in Vermont. It is a place where cons can get (re-)educated to society. A place where they can live while they hold a job, or try to find one (if someone will hire them). Crossroads is a place where the cons know someone is there to help them! When Doug and I got there, we saw a small house with a field around it. We rang the bell and Sister B. came immediately to the door. Before me stood an elderly nun with curious eyes, and a smile that relaxed us immediately. She is a five foot dynamo of energy. She hardly stopped moving, and even while she was still, you could feel her energetic presence filling the building. Doug, being a bit more knowledgeable, did most of our talking.

Sister B. talked about the "boys" (her expression for the men who stayed there). She talked about the "boys" like a mother talks about her children, and she talked of their hardships. I learned how one had to leave because he was an alcoholic and could not admit it, and could not stop. I heard about another who could not get a job, and could not get enough money for his wife and children, so he had to steal, got caught, and was sent back to prison. I learned about the cons' wives, and of the hardships of their children. I heard of the bad times of some wives, and the fickleness of others. And though I have heard of some of this before in some "fairy tale" or there, this was reality. And I saw tears come to Sister B.'s eyes as she told of all the needs of the "boys", and I began to understand why I had to keep trying.

Sister B. then gave us a tour, and at the end Father Baffa came in with many groceries. Father Baffa runs Crossroads. He was a young man, and just by his look, you knew that he knew.

They talked more, and I learned that Crossroads did not get any funds from the state. They had been running only on donations. Looking around at the pleasant comfort of the house, I thought a little of God. And listening on, I began to see a little spark of light, and I understood why I must keep on trying. And after listening to many more things, Doug and I finally left.

Outside, I felt strange, like I was "high". I felt I had just seen a part of a miracle. But it's hard to put a meaningful experience as possible there.

on paper, and maybe I have failed. But you have to keep trying. And maybe that's why I am writing this instead of cracking a few underused books. And maybe I know most of you volunteers are going to go into Big Brothers, or tutoring, or some of the "nicer projects". For it's hard to get people interested in some of these less accepted projects. Besides, it is a lot easier to feel all warm and good in your chest. Mr. and Mrs. white, middle class America. And I say this, because maybe I was like that too, because I am also a Big Brother, and it is too easy to "feel good". So I know it is hard, because there is so much more I do not understand, and there will probably be many times of "feeling bad". But maybe that is what it is all about. I do not know because I'm afraid that maybe I'm doing it wrong, but then you never really know. So you keep trying.

Editorial UVM's Voting Power

The students at the University of Vermont represent a potential voting block of about 6,500. This figure is large enough to have alarmed many Burlingtonians who fear a "political student takeover" similar to that of Berkeley, California only a short while ago. Most statistics gathered about the voting behavior of "young adults" throughout the country would not support these fears.

There appear to be too many "ifs" involved to support the fears. If every Vermont student registers in Burlington... If every out-of-state student can qualify as a resident of Vermont... If every voter that registers will actually vote... If every voter that votes will vote for the same candidate... If relatively few "older voters" cast their ballots... If...

In reality we find students somewhat apathetic when it comes to voting. If each student examines himself and his friends more carefully, however, he will discover that what appears to be apathy is actually a form of honesty and sincerity. Yes, it is true that many students do not vote; but this is often due to the fact that students refuse to vote indiscriminately for candidates they do not know. Therefore they do not vote at all.

Now suppose some of the "ifs" are removed. Suppose there is a candidate that finds wide support among the students. If this be the case, the students may indeed vote in a block large enough to sway an election in Vermont. Contrary to the beliefs of many Burlingtonians, this large vote will represent a sincerely and intellectually chosen candidate, rather than an indiscriminately chosen candidate.

It is time for the students at UVM to eliminate as many of the "ifs" as possible by registering to vote. For the Vermont student whose parents reside in the State, the decision to register in Burlington for the special election is not a major one.

For the out-of-state student, registering to vote in Burlington, Vermont, and claiming residence here has a slightly larger dimension to it. Two factors are important for the latter student to consider: one is that your voting power will be increased by voting in Vermont because of the small number of voters in Vermont, and two, the student is more familiar with the political scene in Vermont and its implications.

Registration tables are located in Billings Center!

Winter Weekend Mess

under. That is total loss of $18,000 for the concert alone.

Blair contends that despite the memorandum which he issued in November, he never saw the contracts for the concert groups until one week before the weekend, and he likewise was not even told that he was performing. However, he is not pinning the blame on Tesconi, or any of the Directors. "Lou Tesconi acted in good faith. Every time he saw me he assured me that everything was all right. I was a good profit. Decisions were made and things were done without the knowledge of the whole Committee. They overstepped, but in good faith... maybe last year they did need a policeman."

U.V.M. Financial Situation Tight

When asked about the payment of the outstanding debt, Blair stated, "Things are very tight financially at the University of Vermont this year. The Administration is not in a position to pay off the debt."

"However," he added, "the Student Association might not want to pay it off." He also raised the possibility of the S.A. paying the debt in deferred installments.

Gene Beaudoin, President of the Student Association, said that an internal audit will be done to check last year's Winter Weekend Budget. Bob Ansel, who was Assistant Production Director of the Weekend, believes that the students will pay the debt, either directly or indirectly. He believes a compromise is possible, but if one is not reached, the S.A. will have to pay the debt.

Trustees will levy a per capita assessment on every full-time student at U.V.M. Ansel explained his views: "The S.A. and the Administration share equal burdens in this affair. The S.A. never asserted its valid authority over Winter Weekend. The Administration knew it was carrying over a debt which the S.A. had not formally guaranteed. The University was not authoritative enough in advising the Winter Weekend Committee."

Dean Patzer Encourages Students To Speak Out And Become Involved

by Kirby Kirkpatrick

Dean Patzer witnessed student trouble at the University of Vermont for the past ten years. His past titles are synonymous to the Dean of Students. He's returning this year after a sabbatical working with The President's Commission on Campus Unrest and his own personal research on five Canadian universities for the American Association of Colleges. Springing back with enthusiasm for student participation, he'll be a familiar figure on campus. The President's Commission on Campus Unrest remains a good focal point to view Dean Patzer on his opinion towards the growth of UVM.

The Kent State and Jackson State Universities tragedies provoked President Nixon to set up an investigating commission. The study on campus unrest measured general conditions and responses to crisis within a college environment. Dean Patzer and eleven men involved themselves with general investigations for the book. Ten colleges and universities were explored on their techniques and approaches dealing with unrest. Law enforcement and university personnel, from police chiefs to students, expressed their views. Case situations were built from these interviews and chapters were written on various aspects of discipline including: law enforcement, government, academic reform, teaching, administrative style and tactics, student tactic and culture, and minority relations.

The report concentrates on student and university personnel involvement on the University campus. Dean Patzer encouraged faculty to maintain their political views and center their interest on teaching methods, environmental research, and scholarship instead of outside research. The Dean by working with young people encourages better teaching to create greater self-motivation and tolerance within their daily experiences. To achieve such goals, the university structure must be decentralized allowing student responsibility and opportunity in its programs. Organized on a human level basis, the Dean is confident students will emerge taking greater advantage of opportunities with a sense of involvement. The Dean stressed, most students effectiveness remains at the departmental level.

Heading north, this past summer Dean Patzer witnessed student participation in Canada and discovered students are given the opportunity to participate in the budget review of University administrative departments and personnel.

Despite the advantages of student participation, its effectiveness depends on the size of the university and the nature of its participants. The Dean considers participation one of the most important facets of the learning experience. (Students bring their talents with others in the community.) He complimented UVM's flexible Experimental program as the kind of approach necessary for an educational experience.

"The University must become a true community whose membership shares a sense of respect, tolerance and responsibility." Tolerance among students is important. The President's study found reasonable and persuasive tactics are replacing revolutionary methods, accomplishing more than confrontation. The Dean pointed out faculty does consider students opinions important and communication between the two must continue. It is with this in mind, that Dean Patzer hopes to increase his circulation within the student community.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

The youth of this country has an important decision to make. Will they or will they not allow oil into the Arctic of Alaska and the construction of the trans-Alaska pipeline? What they decide will determine whether we continue this downward spiral of our society and its environment, or whether we finally turn the country around toward a better tomorrow.

We should not be debating this issue of oil in Alaska. Instead we should be demanding a full scale investigation into why the oil industry has become so powerful. The petroleum industry is undermining national security and threatening our very resources by squandering away in less than ten years we put a man on the moon. But in nearly 80 years since the automobile has been on the streets of this country, we still get less than 15 miles to a gallon of gasoline. This is progress? Where are our priorities?

Our mass transit system is on the brink of collapse, yet the oil industry vigorously promotes the highway trust fund. Eighty per cent of all our miles of highways are paved with asphalt. What kind of social responsibility does the petroleum industry practice when it lets our cities strangle themselves just so oil can satisfy its own selfish aims?

But will the young generation follow the same path of apathy that the older generation did? If it does it will be sowing the seed for alienation and a generation gap far greater than exists today. It too can expect to feel the sting of "hypocrisy" and "hypocrite" flung at it by the next generation and with more profound vengeance.

More efficient forms of energy are being suppressed. Why? Will those concerned about the future of this country win out over greed, or will greed write the final chapters to this planet's history?

Walter G. Bruska
Vice President for Development University of Vermont

Dear Mr. Bruska:

This letter is to confirm the statement I made to you on the telephone yesterday that I, as chairman of the Equal Opportunities Committee, protest very strongly the decision to hold the UVM Homecoming Hall of Fame dinner at the Burlington Elks Club on October 8. I ask you to reconsider that decision because of the Elks' national policy—reaffirmed about a year ago—which permits racial discrimination in the admission of members.

The Elks' policy on racial discrimination should be repugnant to anyone who believes in racial equality. Therefore, while I have not had time to consult with all members of the E

The Elks' policy on racial discrimination should be repugnant to anyone who believes in racial equality. Therefore, while I have not had time to consult with all members of the Equal Opportunities Committee, I am certain that they would join me in protesting the University's misguided action. A university neither should nor can be neutral on the issue of racism. If the Hall of Fame dinner is held at the Elks Club, this University will be condoning racism.

Granted, there is not much time left to relocate the dinner. But if there is no other place available for it, it should not be held at all. It is far better to "guess who's not coming to dinner" than vice versa.

Sincerely yours,
Richard E. Warner
Chairman
Equal Opportunities Committee
UVM Faculty Senate

Editor's Note: As of October 6, 1971, Richard Warner has not received any reply from the office of Walter Bruska concerning this matter. The Equal Opportunities Committee met on October 5, to discuss what further action should be taken, but the Cynic is unable to report the results of the meeting because of the Cynic's deadline.

Better Ways To Prison Reform Than Attica

by Tom McCormick

The insanity that is the revolutionary movement has entered Vermont, and, as is its nature, sprouted in trouble and matured in tragedy. With customary irrationality, prison reform has instantly been seized upon as the cause du jour, and to that end, we are currently being bombarded with posters, meetings, and slogans.

"Attica is America," pontificate one placard. Decipher that if you can. Conceivably, it is a rather poignant statement upon the nature of America's difficulties today, namely that the nation has lost its will to act. Confronted by blackmail, decisions are reached at an excruciatingly slow pace, finally carried out, and, post facto, agonized over — and just as that process tears apart an individual, it also wrecks a country.

As I say, that may have been the meaning, (after all, one is quite restricted by the general lack of content implicit in a slogan), and if it were, certainly commendable, but I rather doubt it. No, I suspect that the intent was somewhat nearer to a canonization of the dead prisoners. Now, if you consider the reasons for their incarceration and their subsequent behavior, such an attitude begins to appear quite ludicrous.

The real innocents were the ten security guards. They were the pawns at Attica. Perhaps History (and her right arm, the investigation) will ascertain that prison officials misjudged the situation and will decide that the prisoners were only making a little funny — they weren't really going to slaughter the guards if their demands were not met.

Some will quip, yes, that's very true, but what about the twenty-six prisoners? Maybe they too died unnecessarily, but I find it hard to sympathize with men who seek concessions for the price of others' lives.

Certainly one should feel sad in pondering their misguided lives. In no case, however, should they be enshrined, for such a reaction would be analogous to making the abductor of Charles Lindbergh child a hero. After all, he only wanted money.

But back to Vermont.

In a rather pitiful aping of the Attica scene, the prisoners at Windsor went on strike, and those outsiders so constantly aware of their needs had a rally.

I find it difficult, nay, impossible to understand. Allow me, in my simplicity to place the problem before you. The place is Burlington. The crisis is the terrible insecurity of women. Many are terrified, and with reason, at the prospect of walking the streets alone at night. Perhaps it is because I so enjoy walking under a pale evening sky, or merely because I'm so naturally — ah — empathetic, that I don't want people denied the pleasure of a nocturnal promenade.

Now, dream along with me, and imagine the killer of Miss Rita Curran being apprehended, tried, convicted, and sent, let us say, to Windsor. Presumably, he would feel a little warmer inside at the thought that there were people outside the prison gates who felt that his work was rather admirable. I know that it would cheer my little heart to have a rally in appreciation of what I have done. (How does Homecoming Weekend sound?)

My point is this: If the aim is prison reform, then there are far better ways of achieving that end than a show of support for the same men who have denied Miss Curran the right to a full life and b) my friends the joys of nighttime walks. If the goal was political, then a rally of solidarity with those men who have forfeited their right to freedom, because they have oppressed others, is worthy only of contempt.

Mother And Child

Morrisseau Nomination

Andrew Gilbert

Demote Morrisseau is running for congress in Vermont. He was born and brought up here in St. Johnsbury and Burlington area. He will be 29 this month. He graduated from UVM in 1965. As an Army officer in 1968, he was arrested for protesting the war in full uniform. Attempts were made to send him to Viet Nam and he refused to go. After resigning his army commission he "ended law school briefly. He then worked in Washington, D.C. mainly with integrating Labor Unions.

He came to Vermont to first run for congress as a 27 year old war protester with a radical label in conservative Vermont and lost the nomination by only 2000 votes.

CYNIC: You're trying to get nominated in all three parties: Democratic, Republican and Liberty Union. Is that correct?

MORRISSEAU: We have now made a decision on whether we'll actually file in the Republican primary. We may not but we have petition out and signatures to file if we decide to nominate.

CYNIC: What do you think your chances are in each one of the three parties?

MORRISSEAU: Well, you couldn't win in the Republican primary. But you could make a point. Both parties need to be treated alike. They are alike. They are pretty much closed. One way to make a point is to somehow do something that dramatizes the point and that's the reason I'll do it.

Also the party most susceptible to reform is I would think the democratic party and the only way you can reform it or at least the most effective way I can think of is to establish a third party that you can run on whether you win the democratic primary or not. So the point is very clear. If the democrats don't nominate and run good people who are where they need to be on the issues there will be a third party in the race. That will split the democratic vote. And they will lose and lose and lose until the changes are forthcoming in the structure of the party.

CYNIC: Who do you feel will be your strongest opponent within the three parties?

MORRISSEAU: I would think the strongest opponent

Actresses Fonda and O'Neill Standout

Kino

Kino—Donald Sutherland
Bree—Jane Fonda
Screenplay by Andy and Dave Lewis
Directed by Alan Pakula
117 minutes. Rated R.

This film concerns the search by Donald Sutherland for a friend who has vanished in New York City. His only leads are some letters written to a high-priced call girl, Jane Fonda. With this basic plot the makers of this film have produced a masterpiece of suspense, excitement, characterization, and all around good fun. It is photographed by Gordon Willis, who did The Longford and Little Murders, also shot in New York.

The film's strong point and major reason it is good is Jane Fonda's outstanding performance. She has enormous heart, and this might be considered her best role to date. In the character of Bree Fonda brings to the screen all the talent at her command, resulting in a sympathetic character that is totally believable. Bree was once a full time call girl but, tired of spending her entire life in bed, she tries to get work as an actress or model, returning to her old profession occasionally only to support herself. This takes a great deal of courage. She has given up large sums of money and now lives in a rundown apartment. More important, she has given up emotional security. The thing she liked most about her work was that while the tricks were always nervous, she wasn't; she was a professional and knew it. Now she faces the uncertainty of acting and model auditions, and the depression of being turned down. She wants to quit, however, because she feels a loss of identity. Men never wanted her personally, they just wanted a woman. Then she is trying to break her ties with the old life and establish a new one.

Donald Sutherland is a contrast to Fonda. He doesn't do much acting, mostly he just stands around looking like a sad hound dog. This, however, is just what is needed and he fits right into the film. For a private detective he doesn't have the powerful manner of a film star, but he does the job well and gradually unravels the case, with a little help from Fonda.

This film is good because it works on several levels. First it is a great horror film with the suspense built up by only glimpsing the killer's hand or just hearing his footsteps. The last minute rescue keeps the film suspenseful until the last scene. The call to Fonda by the killer and the wrecking of her apartment add to the tension. Second, the film works as an offbeat love story between an experienced hooker and a rather inexperienced detective. And lastly, the film is a good detective story keeping you interested in the plot until the very end.

Summary of '42

Produced by Richard Roth, Directed by Robert Mulligan, written by Herman Raucher Cast

Jennifer O'Neill

Gary Grimes

Oliver Conant

From Warner Bros. Rated R

Nostalgia is the mood produced by this film. A look back into youth when things seemed so confused, this film is the story of a boy for whom the summer of '42 was the period of transition into manhood. By the end of the film the trivial things of boyhood no longer matter to him, for he has been caught up in the adult world. The film is a companion to Last Summer, both having in common an island and youthful characters learning about themselves.

This is one film to sit back and enjoy, for humor, longing for the past, and the feel of youth are blended in the right amounts. The photography of the ocean gives the film a relaxed pace, a feeling of time standing still that is associated with having an entire summer free to do what you please. The combination of this mood and the story result in a most entertaining film.

While the acting is good throughout, the laurels must go to Jennifer O'Neill, for she is absolutely superb and the film has made her a star. She has all the warmth and spirit to make the part come alive. Without her, the film would be only good; with her it is excellent in its character portrayal. She and Gary Grimes complement each other exceedingly well. This is a film that is superbly cast, making Jennifer O'Neill's next picture an eagerly awaited event.

The photography is good but not great; in at least two cases it does not add anything to the film as a whole. Every element of film should tell you something that you would not know if this element were omitted; it should not re-state something you already know. Thus, in the dragstore scene the camera remains almost static and the film is carried only by the dialogue. Once we know the scene takes place in the store, the screen could go black and we would not miss anything by just listening. Here the director has failed to make script and photography effectively. Also, the scene is too long. The dialogue is not enough to sustain this scene for so long. Some of the beach scenes do not work because the roaring ocean overpowers the characters and their dialogue. Here also, sight and sound do not work together.

Aside from these criticisms the film is very good and these faults do not interfere with enjoyment of the story. This is a movie you should not miss.

Album Review

From The Inside

by Bob Miller

Poco has been around for quite some time but only recently has come to any sort of prominence. This recognition was mainly achieved by their last album, DELIVERING, which was one of the best live albums to come out this year. The new album, however, is perhaps a better example of the group's potential than DELIVERING was. It is, in fact, a showcase of the group's versatility in far-ranging fields of music.

The first cut "Hoodown" sounds the most like those on DELIVERING. It is a joyous, extremely exuberant song with some fine guitar work on it. The next song "Bad Weather" was written by Paul Cotten who is new to the group (he replaced original member Jim Hester on the last record). It is followed by "What Am I Gonna Do" which is pure C&W. Then an upbeat Richie Furay tune "You are the One" which precedes "Railroad Days" another Cotten composition. At first "Railroad Days" strikes one as derivative of Creedence Clearwater but after further listening it reveals itself to be qualitatively different than anything from CCR.

The other side begins with the title cut written by their bass player Tim Schmit. It is succeeded by a blues number "Do You Feel It Too" in which Furay's vocal is showcased. The third song, written and I believe sung by Cotten, is "OL' Forgiver" or as I like to term it, religious funk. Following that is a very beautiful Furay tune "What If I Should Say I Love You." It reminds me of the songs Furay wrote back in the Springfield days. "Sad Memory." It's so hard to wait. The song actually never ends. The organ ceases only once, the next song begins and as contrast, "For Me and You" is an upbeat number. Thus with such goodtime music, the album is brought to conclusion.

This album is definitely a fine album. Superbly conceived. Finely performed. Well produced. But of course being Poco's fourth, was there ever any doubt?

B B King Highlights Homecoming Weekend

The SA Concert Bureau sneaked into the student eye last week in the Cynic and it occurred to me, (and the members of the committee) that many people on this campus were probably not aware of our existence, let alone what we are and what we do.

In brief, we are a seven member Ad-Hoc Committee formed last spring by the SA. Our sole function is to contract and produce major musical entertainment for the students at U.V.M. Although we are independent of all other S.A. Committees, the nature of our function makes it necessary that we coordinate our plans and activities with the Speakers Bureau, Lane Series, Homecoming Committee, Winter Weekend Committee and to a lesser extent with the S.A. Film Series. The end result of our planning is a concert in the gym.

On the eve of our first attempt, (BB King Oct. 9, at 8:00 p.m.), I want to explain generally how a major concert works. The sequence goes something like this:

A. We pick the dates most likely to succeed, (Homecoming - Winter Weekend or any two or three week period in which no major activities have been scheduled). This must be done several months ahead of time so that the gym can be reserved for the day and night of the concert.

B. We complete the process of negotiation and re-negotiation until the major entertainer is selected that we can afford, that has open dates that coincide with ours, and is the kind of attraction we think (hope) UVM students want to see. This must be done several months in advance because the best talents fill their open dates the quickest.

C. The rent is all busy work, but equally important to the success of the event. Included are details like making arrangements for: (1) a sound system, (2) A flood and spot light system, (3) A back up group to complete the concert bill, (4) Advertising, (5) Security, (6) custodial services, (7) Tickets, (8) Selecting people to work on the day and night of the concert and (if you can believe it) lots more.

The trick is to do all of this while keeping everyone in the University Community happy.

If you are bored and unimpressed "that's the breaks". At least you now have some idea of where the money goes. One of our primary goals is to make concerts more enjoyable for you. We will make every effort to open the doors on time, and to start the show on time. Also, at intermission we will be selling organic food and drinks to keep you happy inside and we'll keep the gym well ventilated to keep you happy outside.

Finally, a word about the ticket prices and — gate crashing. I think that this is the first major concert on this campus that UVM students can see for less money than the general public, (if I'm wrong - I'm sure I'll hear about it). The difference is only 30 cents but it's a move that should have been made a long time ago. We plan the concerts for UVM students, we are backed by UVM Student Association funds, and we stage the concerts in the UVM student's gymnasium. So, we will do everything in our power to lower the price on tickets for UVM students. We will operate on a break-even basis, and any profit will go towards making a future concert better.

For the most part, I think it is unrealistic to talk about free concerts at this time. As long as we (Concert Bureau ergo UVM Students) have to pay for the talent to appear, everyone who wants to enjoy the concert will have to pay also. If we didn't have to prepare for gate crashers at each concert, I could save you money in security expenditures which represents the greatest expense outside of the major attraction itself.

We will do our best to bring you the best talent, and the greatest variety of talent possible. Now, the only thing that will make it all worth while is if you do your part, (no explanation necessary). Your first opportunity is this Saturday night.

Jeff Reeder - Chairman - UVM Concert Bureau

ding Of Bicycles

Like the Sturtevant Archer which are fully equipped, keep everything clean, and use oil on everything except the gears and chain, which use light grease. Learn how to adjust your seat, handlebars, and pedals. Learn how to adjust your handlebars, because sooner or later the cables will stretch, and they'll need readjustment. New stuff with them a little bit if you screw things up, you can always take them to a bike shop. Just keep in mind that there are only two adjustments make, one to keep the thing from going too far out, the other from pushing the chain too far in. With a 10-speed you have four adjustments in all, two in back and two in front.

Three speed hubs are even easier. Many of them have oil fittings. — lift up the little cap and pour in some light oil about every two months. Adjustment is easy, and always well explained in the sheet or booklet you get with the bike.

Comes are little things that keep wheels from wobbling, pedals from jiggling, and handlebars from coming off in your hands. They need adjustment now and then, and can be a little tricky. On wheels, they should be tightened (screwed in) with a special cone wrench or cone pliers) until the wheel rotates freely, but has no side play. You might consider calling a good bike mechanic for this since an out-of-whack cone is going to wear out quickly and screw up your bearings.

Well, folks, be advised: this article is just an outline. For more detail, pick up a good book on bicycles, like Edward Siano's Complete Book of Bicycling; it's expensive at $9.95, but is really complete. Send to parts houses, listed in the book, for catalogues which are really educational. Hound your public library if you can't afford to buy books, and, if you really want to take care of your bike, read all you can, and don't be afraid to try.

of $1,000,000, a move which he felt is not in any way lowering University standards.

Music Facilities

A main topic of discussion centered on funding for music facilities whose conditions were termed "deplorable firetraps" by several members. The consensus leaned toward extensive renovations of present facilities as opposed to the construction of a new building which would cost in the area of $4,000,000. It was urged that a plan be formulated immediately for presentation to the Legislature and that a request for $950,000 be made to subsidize the renovations.

Other business included a recommendation that $150,000 be appropriated for construction of walkways at the intersection of South Prospect and Main Streets, and at the crossing of Main Street adjacent to the Dental Hygiene Department. Three members mentioned informal conversations with UVM students and it was urged that each member make efforts to come into contact with students as often as possible. On this note, the meeting adjourned at 10:20 A.M.

It's very easy to be a Monday morning quarterback. I try to refrain from it as much as possible, for anything that is said usually takes on little if any significance. However, some things can not go unnoticed, and are mentioned.

I am not going to discuss last Saturday's game from the player aspect. I'm sure that everyone has gone over their mistakes a thousand times, and hopefully they have learned their lesson. However, there is one area which deserves to be mentioned, for I simply can find no excuse to save my conscience, and my frustration. To put it simply, the officials at Saturday's game were terrible.

Now, I am not blaming the loss on them by any means, for they most likely made little if any difference on the final outcome. However, my bitterness forces me to call that display the worst exhibition of refereeing I have seen in my college career.

Lehigh Runs Roughshod Over Vermont Defense

It is sadly ironic that the biggest crowd of the season, and possibly the largest Centennial field has seen in over a year, had to see the worst performance of the season by the Catamounts.

It's hard to put your finger on it, but UVM just didn't have what it takes Saturday as they took a heavy loss to the Lehigh Engineers by the embarrassing score of 49-6.

The Catamounts will attempt to redeem themselves this Saturday as they return to hosting Yankee Conference competition. The Rams of the University of Rhode Island will journey to Burlington for the Homecoming game. The game will be at Centennial field at 1:30.

The Vermont, which has built itself such a fine reputation this far into the season, failed to materialize to any great degree.

They were facing a very big, strong Engineer line, and the two professional hopefuls in the backfield certainly didn't help matters. The loss must have proved especially disappointing to Coach Joe Samella, since he is a Lehigh alumnus and played fine ball as a Quarterback of the Engineers for three years.

Lehigh, obviously, dominated the entire contest. The first half shined a little brighter for the Catamounts, but it was by no means good. However, when everything was combined with the team from Bethlehem, Penn., was credited with the amazing total of 49 first downs to the Vermont 8. Those 48 first downs covered almost 290 yards on the ground and close to 200 in the air. The Catamounts were only able to drive for 135 yards on the ground, and took to the air for another 100.

The scoring in the contest was about even for the two halves. The Catamounts went into the locker room at the midway, down by 21 points, even though the statistics were much closer than the final tally would indicate.

The team from Pennsylvania

Soccer Men Suffer First Loss

The University of Vermont Soccer club suffered its first loss on the season to Bridgeport University last Saturday. The Catamounts lost to the club by a score of 2-1, and the team from Connecticut could well prove to be the best the Catamounts have faced all season.

Bridgeport, which has the talents of three excellent West Indian players, outplayed and outshot UVM all through the contest. The Bridgeport competition took 11 more shots on goal than did Vermont. However, the fine play of goalie Jim Kieley saved many a bad situation as he was credited with 17 saves while the opposition's goalie was credited with only 8.

The Catamounts were the first to draw blood during the contest about midway through the second period when Peter Bernhardt placed a perfect cross-over pass in front of the net and Bob Buzzell sent it flying into the net.

With less than a minute left in that period, the Connecticut team rallied and sent one home for the point to bring the contest to a tie. The winning goal in the early parts of the final period.

Catamounts played the Norwich Norwalkers in hopes of gaining their second state series win. The results of that game were not available at press time. The UVM kickers will host Rhode Island for the Homecoming weekend.

Bob Buzzell scored during the contest with Bridgeport.

Student Government, S.A. president, discussed a proposal before the executive board of the Student Association. The proposal would change the system of student government meetings. The Student Association would meet every other week; on the alternate weeks IRA, the Panhellenic Council, and the Fraternity Forum would hold their separate meetings. The purpose of the plan is to cut down on the number of people in the governments and to eliminate duplication of effort in the different organizations. The executive board also feels that the system will provide for better structure and preparation within the different organizations.

Along similar lines, Steven Rice, president of IRA, reported that he had attended a meeting with Deane Patzer, Powers, and Gribbons and representatives from the Student Association, Panhellenic Council, Fraternity Forum and the Medical School Council. "It was decided that these meetings should continue to keep open the lines of communication."

CBW Renovation

A committee has formed to oversee the renovation of the Chittenden - Buckham - Wills complex. These dorms have been allocated $5,000 for this purpose. Representatives of Chittenden - Buckham - Wills Converse, and Jeanne Mance will form part of the committee. The first meeting was scheduled to be held October 6.

The motion made last week that a ping-pong table be purchased and set up in Wills Hall for the use of the whole complex was again tabled for one week. The Welfare Committee will look into the possibility of taking one of the three tables from the MAT complex for Wills Hall.

Jay Allen, representative from March, asked that IRA appropriate $100 to help install a speaker system in the MAT complex. Because the system will be made and installed by students, the cost of the whole system will be $400. The balance would be paid from the MAT account. A motion was made and tabled for voting next week.

Two motions that were made and passed were the allocation of $600 for a film series to be sponsored by IRA and the proposal that IRA sponsor an intra-campus ping-pong tournament. Other business included a complaint by Judy Humphrey, representative of Slade Hall, of the maintenance of the bathroom facilities of that Hall and a proposal by Sandy Hewitt, representative of Patterson Hall, that UVM offer an excused postal system.

Starting next week, brainstorming sessions will be held at the end of each meeting. The fifteen minute sessions will deal specifically with various topics of dorm life and UVM life in general.

Correction

The Cynic would like to correct an error in last week's issue. In "Legislative Matters With Students, Administration and Faculty," Dr. David Howell, advisor to WRUV and a member of the Speech Department, should have read "Dr. Wallace J. Howell, Jr., advisor to WRUV and a member of the Department of Communication and Theatre."

Second Semi-Annual Cynic Photo Contest

Rules

The CYNIC announces the "Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest."

The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)

2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscaping, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces or landscapes.

3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.

4. The picture submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.

5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.

6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.

7. Pictures entered in the Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.

8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.

9. The board of judges will consist of Ken Perry, Photography Editor of the CYNIC, Tito, of the University Photo Service, and Bob Recupero, Assistant Photography Editor of the CYNIC. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.

10. All photographs should be placed in the appropriate box in the CYNIC office.

11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.

12. Deadline for entries will be November 19, 1971.

13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the December 2 issue of the CYNIC.

14. The winner in each category will receive $25. All questions should be referred directly to Ken Perry, in care of the CYNIC office.

Nader's Rail Start PIRG

by Arlene Eriksen

Last Friday two of Nader's Raiders, Donald Ross and Tom Stanton, canvassed the state of Vermont in order to initiate the organization of a state-wide, student-funded Public Interest Research Group (PIRG). They efforts have been successful and already several meetings have taken place among highly motivated and interested college students to discuss the ongoing organization of Vermont's PIRG. All those who are interested in PIRG are encouraged to attend the meeting tonight at 7 pm. in lower sitting.

The aim of PIRG is to encourage students to form, finance and direct groups of full-time professionals to engage in research, citizen action and litigation on behalf of the public interest. These student-funded professionals would work on issues involving environmental preservation and consumer protection, racial and sexual discrimination, product safety and corporate responsibility. PIRG groups range from $150,000 to $300,000 per year, depending on size, experience of the staff, and location.

The financing plan is simple. A majority of students on the campus can petition the student senate or the Board of Trustees to increase activity or incidental fees by a few dollars per year. This money can then be used to hire a staff of lawyers, scientists and engineers to work full time on behalf of students. An elected board of student directors would direct the professional staff. However, students not wishing to participate in funding the group can be granted a refund.

A staff of professionals has several obvious advantages. These professionals would (1) work full time, uninterrupted by classes, exams or student vacation breaks, (2) have the expertise to follow issues through to their conclusion, (3) have

The program's purposes are many but all radiate about an educational hub. The program seeks to foster an openness to communicate about drug issues, increased use of chemical substances, and the use of chemical substances. Nader's Raiders To Start PIRG At UVM

by Arlene Erdman

Last Friday two of Nader's Raiders, Donald Ross and Tom Stanton, canvassed the state of Vermont in order to initiate the organization of a state-wide, student funded Public Interest Research Group (PIRG). Their efforts have been successful and already several meetings have taken place among highly motivated and interested college students to discuss the ongoing organization of Vermont's PIRG. All those who are interested in PIRG are encouraged to attend the meeting tonight at 7 pm in lower hall.

The aim of PIRG is to encourage students to form, finance and direct groups of full-time professionals to engage in research, citizen action and litigation on behalf of the public interest. These student-funded professionals would work on issues involving environmental preservation and consumer protection, racial and sexual discrimination, product safety and corporate responsibility. PIRG groups range from $150,000 to $300,000 per year, depending on size, experience of the staff, and location.

The financing plan is simple. A majority of students on the campus can petition the student senate or the Board of Trustees to increase activity or incidental fees by a few dollars per year. This money can then be used to hire a staff of lawyers, scientists and engineers to work full-time on behalf of students. An elected board of student directors would direct the professional staff. However, students not wishing to participate in funding the group can be granted a refund.

A staff of professionals has several obvious advantages. These professionals would (1) work full time, uninterrupted by classes, exams or student vacation breaks; (2) have the expertise to follow issues through to their conclusion; (3) provide continuity to the mobile campus population; and (4) focus student energies to secure maximum leverage and effect.

Neither Ralph Nader nor the Public Interest Research Group of Washington, D.C. will have any control over a local group. A student elected board of directors will control its own team of advocates and its own finances.

The Vermont PIRG will be controlled by an elected board of student directors on each campus. Each campus PIRG will be broken down into three committees: publicity, petition and co-ordinating. St. Michael's, Goddard, Vermont College, Norwich and Middlebury, as well as local high schools, are among the Vermont institutions which have already begun to organize PIRG's.

The local boards in turn will elect a number of their members, on a proportional basis, depending on school size, to a state board. The Vermont state board will most likely be located at UVM. This state board will serve as the mechanism for student control and will work directly with the professional staff.

Across the nation students have responded enthusiastically to these plans. In Oregon and Minnesota the first two student PIRG's have been formed. Students in twelve other states, including New Jersey, Illinois, Iowa, West Virginia, are mobilizing support for their own PIRG's.

Gene Beaudoin, president of the Student Association, feels that PIRG is an exciting but overdue setup that will play a large role in the state.

"The basic techniques and methods of PIRG are probably the only way an individual can have an effect on the political system we have today. I'm rather impressed by the fact that at one point Ralph Nader was just a highly motivated individual."

Ralph Nader screams before a crowd of 5,000 that it is just as "un-American" to pollute America's land as it is to rip down its flag.

Many Vermonters Listen To Ralph Nader

Editor's Note: On Friday, October 8, consumer rights advocate Ralph Nader was interviewed on WCAX's "You Can Quote Me." The following questions and answers have been excerpted from the program.

Q. What in particular set you off to go into the line of consumer rights?

A. When I was in law school I made a rather extended study of the relationship between the automobile design hazards and the law. I found a lot of questions that I believed needed answering in terms of the kind of safety features that should have been on cars and what the law's relationship to acquiring these are.

Q. In your judgement is the relationship between business and the consumer necessarily and adversely affected?

A. Yes, it's the law of the marketplace. The seller will try to get the best deal from the buyer and the buyer will try to get the best deal from the seller. It's not a simple law as it was in the old bazaar days or in the open market days but it's still a process of tug and pull.

When one side becomes moved and is not organized and doesn't know the details of complex products and services and when the other side is not as competitive as it should be and it's more and more concentrated, you're going to get problems and that's what we have today.

Q. Is other words the simple refusal to buy the product isn't good enough that wouldn't cure the problem?

A. No, that's not good enough for several reasons because the consumer is often deceived.

How do you know whether this is a hazardous steering column and the automobile that you buy later turns out to be a lemon? Also how do you know what's in the fruit that you purchase?

Also there is a sort of common denominator when you're settling the difference between certain insurance policies or certain financial institutions, policies or automobiles... and the choice doesn't differ much. You can go across the street to another restaurant but you're getting pretty much the same thing.

Q. Who can step in and arbitrate for the consumer in a case like this?

A. That depends on the seriousness of the problem. If it's a problem of serious health and safety proportions, the traditional avenue is police power; they say it is one of the first obligations of government.

But there's a role for consumer information services. There's a role for anti-trust enforcement and more quality competition. There's a role for inventors, giving them a chance to have their private market. There's a role for regulation, law suits and for consumer testing.

Q. But the consumer gets billed in so many small ways in the state of Vermont, for instance, the small claims system is really a system that collects bills, a bill collecting agency for business. This is just on a small scale. It doesn't have to be a car it can be a garage bill. It can be very small.

A. You're bringing out a little bit of the fact that most consumer complaints are too small in dollar terms per customer to even interest the lawyer or to be able to weather the attrition and the delay of the court.

As you pointed out many of your small claims courts are utilized more for collecting bills than for a lot of reasons. What we've got to do is to have more arbitration units in labor and in communities which businessmen will really abide by in terms of decisions which can be enforced by the court, and which consumers can go to reasonably after work with no lawyer and just present their case in a simple way.

Q. Would a consumer protection agency such as you envisage provide for consumer spokesmen, some of whom would be aggressively active on behalf of the consumer?

A. Well certainly our trust has been in a significant part misplaced; that is, government businesses by the act that it is fatal to the consumer. Take the regulation of flammable fabrics for example. It's been nothing but a mockery by the Department of Commerce.

Q. What's the reason for this? What's the reason for being a mockery?

A. The reason such regulation for consumer protection has been such a mockery is that these government agencies react to the pressure of Congress and special interest groups have got the lawyers, have got the political pressure and the potential campaign funding to put pressure on in Washington and in the state capitals. That's what the agencies have got to respond to and the consumer just isn't organized to note that kind of representation.

Q. Would a consumer protection agency such as you envisage provide for consumer spokesmen, some of whom would be aggressively active on behalf of the consumer?

A. Yes, there is a proposal in Congress, the Consumer Advocacy Agency, that wouldn't require anything. What it would do would be to look at these other agencies that aren't doing their jobs when it comes to consumer protection and petition and intervene and in effect lobby these agencies to do their jobs with lawyers, accountants, economists and other skilled specialists.

Dean Powers announced that a 24 hour "Social Hours Program can go into effect in the individual Residence Halls if those units vote to implement the policy. The announcement was made at the IRA Meeting which was held on Tuesday of this week. Further details will appear in the next issue of the CYNIC.

UVM Construction Worker Is Beaten Near Library

from a head wound.

On Tuesday, October 5, a construction worker was attacked while enroute to his job at the Allied Health Sciences Building, where he is employed by Vermont Construction Company. The assault occurred at approximately 6:00 am. in the vicinity of the Bailey Library. Harold Hahn, of 148 Battery Street, was knocked unconscious by unknown assailant (s). Mr. Hahn's wallet was also stolen and was reported to have contained a sizeable amount of cash.

The incident was reported by Mr. Rene Tremblay, a foreman of UVM's Custodial Department. Mr. Tremblay responded to a knock on the front door of the Bailey Library. The victim was standing at the door, bleeding Security Police arrived on the scene and brought Mr. Hahn to the Watson Infirmary. Patrolman Garrow of the Burlington Police Department then transported the stricken construction worker to Mary Fletcher Hospital, as the severity of Mr. Hahn's head wound was unknown.

In the process of the investigation, it was disclosed by Mr. Hahn that he frequently walked past the Bailey Library at 6:00 am. on days when he had to report to work.

Mr. Hahn is listed in fair condition at the Medical Center Hospital, suffering from a concussion, lacerations on the scalp, and multiple bruises. Investigation of the occurrence is continuing.

SA Discusses $22,000 Winter Weekend Debt

by Bill Rapp

Last week's Senate meeting began with an Executive Board Report given by President Gene Beaudoin. This new feature will be given by a different officer each week. Gene spoke about the $43,000 for WRUV-FM. The reason for this proposal is so that WRUV-FM can become a "viable source of communication to students who do not live on campus." Presently, WRUV-FM can not even be received on North Willard Street. One Senator mentioned that her constituency had already voted on this issue. Gene pointed out that the Executive Board Report presents ideas, not motions, and that Senators should not be such in decision-making.

It has become evident to the Board that some of the points which Judge Sylvester made in his court findings are not going to be satisfactory. However, the Judge did find in our favor, making the Student Activities fee mandatory. Before we consider taking any action on this, we must wait for the court's decision.

Jeff Even announced that Class Councils will be elected on October 20-21 from 9-4 in Billings. Anyone wishing to run must sign up before October 18.

Jeff Reader, chairman of the Concert Bureau (FRED) which ran last week's BB King Concert, told the Senate that FRED is not trying to be secretive about the entertainment it brings to UVM. Any students who have any ideas about concerts should contact the Concert Bureau. Most of the groups FRED is considering will cost between $5,000-$8,000. One of FRED's main objectives this year is to make concert tickets less expensive.

Winter Weekend

Winter Weekend's $22,000 debt was a main topic this week. Senators were concerned over whether or not we had ever officially recognized the event. It was pointed out that the University had to agree on all contracts and that they were supposed to keep an eye on the spending. However, the University could not audit

Winter Weekend's records because they were insufficient. One Senator felt that taxing the students would be unfair, because it would affect next year's incoming freshmen, and this year's freshmen class, who were not here at the time. Dean Powers reminded the Senate, however, that Kaks Walk purchased many items on campus which are still in use, at the tax on new students could be equated with the use of these facilities.

Bob Miller, Vice President of External Affairs, suggested a "Big Brother" Day, November 6, and said that he hoped that SAGA might be persuaded to donate the meals for the "little brothers" if the big brothers would buy their own. Hopefully over 300 people will be participating in this program. Tentatively, on Saturday, October 30, the SA will present a night of horror films at the gym, to celebrate Halloween. Last May we sponsored an event of this nature, and it was a great success. Gene suggested the formation of a Social Committee to implement this sort of event.

Larry Murphy of AEPI was elected new chairman of the Senate. This is a position he will hold for four weeks. Last year, in order that the President could be free to speak at meetings, the Senate decided on a rotating chairmanship.

The Action Corps Will Recruit UVM Students Next Monday And Tuesday

The first recruiting drive on the UVM campus for the new ACTION Corps will take place on October 18 and 19.

Representatives from Peace Corps and VISTA, the two major agencies in ACTION, will be here to talk to students and faculty about opportunities for service in the States and abroad. ACTION Corps was formed early last summer. In addition to VISTA and Peace Corps, the agency includes four smaller groups that give volunteer assistance to the old, the young and ghetto businesses.

One result of the merger is that Peace Corps and VISTA will recruit together. Skip McGinty, a former Peace Corps volunteer, sees a benefit in this to applicants.

"We can now give objective guidance and offer alternatives to people. In the past, applicants were often treated to a little spiel on 'Why Peace Corps' instead of VISTA' and vice versa," he said. "No more. The competition was something we created, anyway. For most applicants the questions of

"where?" and "with what agency?" go way down the list."

One of the first things ACTION did was to bring VISTA and Peace Corps representatives together to find out about each others problems and people needs.

Gail Snyder, a former VISTA volunteer who'll represent ACTION on this campus, found that the kinds of people Peace Corps is trying to recruit are the same as VISTA.

"Neither of us has abandoned the liberal arts graduates, although there are plenty of people outside who have that opinion," she claims. Miss Snyder, liberal arts graduate, thinks that people have simply misunderstood what's happened.

She said that part of what people have heard is true. That Peace Corps and VISTA have been actively trying to recruit older people and people with specialized skills. But not to the exclusion of people just coming out of college.

"Almost all my time over the next year and the time of all the other ACTION representatives will be spent on college campuses. I don't think that the people who hired us could send us off to college. I over the Northeast if they didn't need applications from college people," she said.

Both representatives claimed that they have trouble recruiting enough people with certain majors and backgrounds. Filling these spots is the first thing they've been asked to do: people who'll graduate with a degree in math, civil engineering, science, industrial arts, business administration, architecture, city planning, law, French, English, linguistics, nursing, home economics, agriculture, industrial arts and vocational education. They'd also like to talk to people, regardless of current major, who have mechanical skills, who have worked in hospitals, and those who have lived or worked in poverty areas or on a farm.

Death Discussions Continue

Death has proven to be a very live subject on the UVM campus. Over seventy people have been coming to the sessions on Death and Dying being held at St. Anselm's Chapel on the four Tuesdays in October.

The program is based on the premise that in order to be free to live, one must first face the fact and the reality of his own death in these four sessions, with the help of tapes, movies, lectures, etc. each person is helped to face the possibility of his own non-existence. By means of some special verbal exercises, each person is given the opportunity to get in touch with his own death and dying, and what that might mean for him amazingly, when one begins to understand what is important to him now, in his life. Our priorities in death are usually our priorities in life.

This week's session will deal with grief—not only the grief of those gathered around the dying person, but also the grief of the dying person himself.

Scheduled this week is the feature-length film version of James Agee's A DEATH IN THE FAMILY, entitled ALL THE WAY HOME. Please feel free to come even if you missed the first two sessions.

The time is 7:00 pm, at St. Anselm's Chapel, on Tuesday nights in October.

Career Placement

All seniors and graduate students in Engineering and Science, and December graduates of all majors are urged to pick up the 1971 Fall Campus Information Program for Employers and Graduate Schools in Room 224, Waterman.

Representatives from the Peace Corps will be visiting the campus Monday and Tuesday, October 18-19, 1971 and will be available for information interviews at the Billings Center. Wednesday, October 20, a representative from the Thunderbird School of International Management, Phoenix, Arizona will be in the Career Planning and Placement Office for half hour interviews. Interested juniors and seniors desiring a career in international business are urged to sign up immediately for an interview.

Thursday, October 21, a representative from Syracuse University School of Management will be interviewing in the Career Planning and Placement Office, 224 Waterman, to explain to interested juniors and seniors Syracuse University's MBA Program.

Trains

The committee for environmental action has organized a campaign to restore passenger train service in Vermont. Our goal is to see established a passenger train system from Montreal to New York City, passing through Vermont, possibly following the old Central Vermont Passenger Route. If Vermont is to see this system, Vermont must first make such a system economically feasible. Anyone interested in working for Vermont Passenger trains please come to Robinson Hall lounge every Thursday at 7:00 pm. Remember trains are the alternative to massive concrete systems of death.

Dr. Houston

The Next Thing, and SA Speaker will present Dr. Jean Houston from the Foundation for Mind Research, New York City in a public lecture on October 18. Jean Houston received her doctoral degree in the Philosophy of Religion from Union Theological School at Columbia University. She is currently working on her doctoral degree in Experimental Psychology. With her husband, Robert Masters, she formed the Foundation for Mind Research where intense experimentation was carried out with LSD-25 until the Federal Government curtailed most of the research being done with this chemical substance.

The Next Thing, 146 So. Williams St., will be holding workshops for interested people in the weeks following Jean Houston's appearance. In these small groups individuals will go more deeply into some of the methods mentioned. The dates for these workshops will be announced at the Houston presentation.

Original "K"

The original uncut version of "King Kong," will be offered by the Lane Classics, Thurs., Oct. 21, and Fri., Oct. 22, 8:00 p.m.

"King Kong," the granddaddy of all monster movies, is a production nearly 40 years since its production ability to excite, thrill and terrify remains a masterpiece by any and all standards.

Movie critic Bill Everson writes: "Mathematically constructed, flawless in its technical effects, King Kong is a masterpiece of old-fashioned, but a permanent by Benay Crowther as one of his 50 of that name."

There will be three showings: Thursday, Oct. 21, and 4:15 p.m. on Oct. 22, 8:00 p.m. Tickets, $1.00 each, are available at Waterman. For information, tel. 656-

New Style Of Scottish Painters

"12 Scottish Painters," an exhibition of 32 contemporary works in a variety of media, is currently on view at the Robert Hull Fleming Museum.

Organized by the Maine State Commission on the Arts and Humanities under the direction of Richard D. Collins, the show was assembled in Scotland with the cooperation of the Scottish Arts Council.

Struck by the similarity between the Scottish landscape and people and those of New England, and by a film, "3 Scottish Painters," Mr. Collins organized his first Scottish show for the IBM Gallery in 1956. Returning to Scotland a year ago to put together "12 Scottish Painters," he found that the interest in landscape painting which was so dominant 15 years ago, had dispersed in many directions. This new variety of style and interest is evident in the works exhibited at the Museum.

"3 Scottish Painters," the film which originally stimulated Collins' interest, as well as two other films, "Francis Bacon Paintings, 1944-62" and "Opus," will be presented by the Museum Tuesday evening, October 12, at 8 p.m. in Votey Auditorium. Admission is by Museum membership or $5.00 per person.

"12 Scottish Painters," comes to the Fleming after a tour of ten New England museums. After its closing here on October 17, the show will travel throughout Canadian museums.

Lane Extension Concerts

The sixth annual University of Vermont Lane Extension Series in St. Johnsbury will present artists from the British Isles, from Vermont, and other American artists in a season of classical, popular, and folk music.

The season will open Oct. 30 with the Vermont State Symphony Orchestra conducted by its founder and music director, Alan Carter. An international program of folk songs by balladeers Addins and Crofut will follow Nov. 17 and Garrick-Ohlson, the first American pianist to win the Chopin Competition in Warsaw, will perform Feb. 26.

The Series will continue March 21 with Clann Gael, a company of twenty singers, dancers and musicians from Eire and the Scottish Highlands. A fifth concert—probably a choral group—is expected to be announced for a fall concert to complete the Series.

The Series will be presented in cooperation with a chapter of the Vermont Symphony Orchestra Association, the Northeast Kingdom Council on the Arts, headed by Sen. Douglas Kitchel with E. Dean Finney as vice president.

The series is subsidized by a substantial National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities grant by the Vermont Council on the Arts; a generous contribution by Lyndon State College from its Sherman Fund; a grant by the University of Vermont Lane Series; and gifts by local individuals and organizations.

The Vermont Symphony Orchestra concert will also feature a "Symphony Day" afternoon concert for young people, and performances by five instrumental ensembles drawn from the orchestra—in area schools. Information and reservations are available by contacting Stanley Shores, 52 Summer Street, St. Johnsbury.

The Ariel is presently organizing its staff for the production of the 1972 year book. Anyone interested in joining the Ariel staff is invited to do so. Meetings are every Thursday evening at 7 p.m. in the Ariel Office in Lower Billings Center. Positions are open of secretary, business, layout, section editors and photographers.

Original "King Kong"

The original movie version of "King Kong" suppressed for 35 years, will be offered by the Lane Film Society Series, "Horror Classics," Thurs., Oct. 21, and Fri., Oct. 22, in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium.

"King Kong," the granddaddy of all monster movies, was directed by Merian C. Cooper. Despite improved technical facilities in the nearly 40 years since its production, its power, skill and sheer ability to excite, thrill and terrify remains unimpaired. Whether regarded as a horror film, a trick film or a fantasy, "King Kong" remains a masterpiece by any and all standards.

Co-director of the 1933 film is Ernest B. Schoedsack, and executive producer, David O. Selznick. The original story was by Merian C. Cooper and Edgar Wallace, and music by Max Steiner.

The starring cast includes Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot, Robert Armstrong and Noble Johnson.

Movie critic Bill Everson writes of the film as follows: "Mathematically constructed, flawlessly edited, still a marvel of realism in its technical effects, King Kong is not just an exciting and nostalgic old thriller, but a permanent masterpiece, rightly selected by Bosley Crowther as one of his 50 Great Films in his recent book of that name."

There will be three showings: 9:00 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. on Thursday, Oct. 21, and 4:15 p.m. on Fri., Oct. 22.

Tickets, $1.00 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For information, tel. 656-3418.

'Spirit In Flesh'
Energy Of Love

Spirit In Flesh? You mean these people who put up those crazy posters everywhere? What's the story on those folks, anyway? Well, here it is in their own words.

Things aren't right now. Drunken men in theater seats sleeping overloads of magic chemicals turned black and parastic.

Men shivers upon peering at the reflection of her children shared with crumble at the slightest quiver.

You can't dam a river and expect no overflow.

Things just aren't right now they need changing.

We in the band share the same biography.

Our home is within the commune Michael started three years ago.

Two hundred people live with us. We've come to know what we on this earth could have together if we would all tune ourselves into this energy.

The energy is of nature. It is the force generated by people living together in love.

Approximately 75% of the students who attend the school are unable to pay any or all of their tuition. The proceeds from the program will go toward making up the deficit, which runs about $1,500 per month.

Spirit in Flesh consists of eleven musicians and nearly one hundred other participants, all of whom belong to a community called "Brotherhood of the Spirit," located on fifty acres of farmland in Warwick, Massachusetts. The community was formed three years ago by Michael Menasha, who is the lead singer in the group and composer of most of the songs.

The group has grown from a handful of dedicated people to more than two hundred men, women, and children. They have recently completed a dormitory building that houses one hundred persons, and operate an accredited school for the children.

The band was first formed as a means to help the community survive economically, but since has become much more. The music delivers the message of the Brotherhood of the Spirit through a rock and roll rhythm which is urgent, intense and spiritual. The lyrics include many biblical references in songs denouncing indifference and hard drugs, and talking of fellowship, re-education, and nature.

The sound system to be used for the concert will be the same one used at the group's highly successful appearance at Carnegie Hall in New York on September 22. The production will also include a spectacular light show.

"Spirit In Flesh" appearing Friday Oct. 15, 8 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

It is the power of a river the gentle breath of the sea breeze combing wild wheat and spreading new seeds across fertile land.

This energy is the source of our music.

This energy is our biography. Spirit in Flesh will appear for the first time in the Burlington area on Friday, October 15 at 8:00 P.M. in Memorial Auditorium. Tickets are $2.50, and the concert will be a benefit for the Shaker Mountain School. Shaker Mountain is an educational alternative available to any Burlington area student seven to fourteen years of age, regardless of family income.

Your interest and support will deeply be appreciated. For further information contact the Museum Reception Desk or phone 656-2090.

"Jazz Clinic And Concert"

The Burlington Musicians Association, through the cooperation of the University of Vermont Music Dept. will present a "Jazz Clinic & Concert" at the University in Allen Chapel, Friday evening, Oct. 15th, at 4 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. respectively.

Guest clinician and artist, featured on both events will be Mr. Russell Thomas of Montreal, Quebec. Mr. Thomas is presently Professor of Instrumental Music at the University of Montreal and is known throughout Canada as an artist in woodwind performances both in jazz and classical music. His own jazz ensemble was featured on a series of concerts at the "Expo" and "Man and His World" fairs. In addition, Mr. Thomas has appeared on numerous radio and T.V. programs in Canada.

The Canadian musician will give a lecture demonstration at the 4 p.m. clinic and will dwell particularly on the origin and development of the Coffee House meeting at 2:00 p.m. Friday, October 15, 1971 in Marsh Lounge, Billings Center. Open to all.

On the evening concert, Mr. Thomas will perform with a group of local jazz musicians, doubling on many woodwind instruments, including piccolo, flute, alto flute, bass flute, soprano saxophone, alto and tenor saxophone, baritone saxophone, and an original African Water Flute.

This unique jazz event, is part of a series called the "Jazz Outreach Project." Another phase of the project presents a Jazz Band (7 members) which gives demonstration performances at public schools in the area. These performances are free and open to the public through a grant from the Vermont Council on the Arts as well as a grant from the Music Performance Trust Funds, a public service organization created and financed by the Recording Industries under agreement with the American Federation of Musicians. The grants were obtained with the cooperation of Local 351, Burlington Musicians Association.

Ralph Nader

Five thousand people—including many non-students, jammed the Patrick Gymnasium last Friday evening and attested to the stature of Ralph Nader as a leading American of his day. Nader's philosophy was perhaps best illustrated on one of his more humorous observations: If a man, relieved himself in the Detroit River, he faces the possibility of going to jail, or incurring a fine, or both. But what is the penalty when General Motors relieves itself in the Detroit River, and on than the man? Not much.

Nader also stressed that corporate irresponsibility with respect to the environment is every bit as "unpatriotic" and "violent" as a flag burning or a noisy "radical" demonstration in the nation's capital; yet for some reason Vice President Agnew refrains from issuing cute little diatribes against the corporations. In the same, former Vermont Governor Philip Hoff was correct in once describing Ralph Nader as, "perhaps, the greatest living American today."

Patzer To Host ETV Premier

by Jill Stevens

Dean of Students Roland D. Patzer this evening will host from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. the live premier of Vermont Educational Forum. The program, to be broadcast from the ETV studio at Fort Ethan Allen, is the first in a series initiated to provide a means via the media for educational exchange on the issues presently confronting U.S. institutions of higher learning. The following panel will discuss "Colleges in Financial Crisis".

Dr. William Jellema, Executive Assistant and Research Director, Association of American Colleges; Senator H. Ward Bedford, Vermont Legislator; Dr. Reuben Frodin, Program Advisor, International Division of Ford Foundation; Dr. Reed Saunders, Deputy Assistant Commissioner for Planning and Evaluation, U.S.

Peter Giuliani, Member, Urm Board of Trustees. History and background on the traditional forms of financing higher education will be developed, and a statement will be presented on the present financial condition of these institutions. The panel will propose innovative methods for facing financial crisis which are intended to apply to students, parents, alumni, and taxpayers. Dean Patzer encourages a studio audience tonight in order to provide diverse viewpoints, spontaneous responses and discussion with the panel. Additionally the panel urges active involvement of the viewing audience through ETV's statewide duplex telephone link (802) 655-1100.

The CYNIC announces the "Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest".

The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)

2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscapes, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces or landscapes.

3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.

4. The picture submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.

5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.

6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.

7. Pictures entered in the Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.

8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.

9. The board of judges will consist of Ken Poiry, Photography Editor of the CYNIC, Tim of the University Photo Service, and Bob Recupero, Assistant Photography Editor of the CYNIC. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.

10. All photographs should be placed in the appropriate box in the CYNIC office.

11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.

12. Deadline for entries will be November 19, 1971.

13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the December 2, issue of the CYNIC.

14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.

15. All questions should be referred directly to Ken Poiry, in care of the CYNIC office.

Legislators To Visit Campus

A special committee of the Student Senate PR Committee is organizing a Vermont Legislative Day to take place October 25, and has issued an invitation to all students, and particularly to Vermont residents, to lead their interest and support.

The Committee is under the co-chairmanship of Neal Smith of Springfield and Paul Barrows of Saxtons River, and has lined up a student chairman for each of Vermont's 14 counties.

The idea behind the Legislative Day is to invite each of Vermont's 150 members of the House of Representatives and 30 Senators to visit the campus for the day as a guest of a student from his or her town area.

The committee is still in need of student volunteers to serve as hosts and those who are interested are asked to call or visit the SA office in Billings, Ext. 2053 as soon as possible.

Legislators are being invited by a printed invitation to come to the campus for a program beginning with sign up at 1 p.m. in Billings where they will meet their individual host and have an opportunity to talk with students, to see the campus and to be a Dutch-treat guest for dinner in one of the dining halls or in a fraternity, sorority or perhaps in their host's apartment or home off campus.

Those who wish are also invited to be guests for their choice of the Lane Series concert that evening featuring the Sierra Leone dance troupe or the lecture and presentation by movie actress Lillian Gish.

Idea of the program is to give legislators a better and more truthful picture of what students are really like, rather than the more extreme notions it is all too easy to get from some coverage of more dramatic events involving students and their concerns.

habit and to ask questions and just get to know each other better, this will help improve the chances when President Andrews goes before the Legislature next January to plead UVM's case.

All students can help by noting the date—Oct. 25, and by being themselves that day. The committee would like the legislators to see us like we are. The committee particularly needs more Vermont residents to sign up to act as individual hosts. If you are willing to do so, please sign up without delay at SA.

The formal invitation which has been sent to each legislator is to be followed by a letter of invitation from the student from his or her town or area who will be the legislator's host.

It is not the aim of the program to try to lobby directly for the University and a larger state appropriation, but it is the hope of the committee that by extending to legislators an opportunity to see students in their natural realization and transcendence. During the coming year The Next Thing will be bringing notable practitioners involved in many diverse methods of self-transcendence. On October 18, Jean Huston (Foundation for Mind Research, N.Y.C., New York) will present techniques which can induce altered states of consciousness and the benefits that can be derived from these experiences. Other possible topics include: Bioenergetics, Biofeedback, Mysticism, Chanting, Yoga, Art. If you have recommendations of some particular person or group of interest drop or give the staff a call.

The Next Thing will be promoting educational exchange in the community. There must be honest communication and a willingness to listen non-judgmentally on the part of drug users and non-users alike. The trainees in the program will solicit meetings to talk freely about drugs in a variety of contexts, both in area schools (elementary, junior high, high, and college) and in the community (e.g., police, legislators, judges, community leaders, etc.). The emphasis will be upon freedom of exchange, openness to change, and reaching meaningful points of agreement.

The Next Thing is temporarily located in the UVM Counseling & Testing Center, at 146 So. Williams Street. Drop in and use our library of drug related materials and literature on methods of self-transcendence. Information is also available on growth centers, community, ashrams, etc. in the Vermont and New England area.

Teaching Interns

Graduate students in the special education program at the University of Vermont are working in six Vermont school districts this fall as "consulting teacher interns," working with professional teachers to develop special teaching programs for children with learning problems.

Employed by the districts on a part-time basis, the second-year graduate students are now working in the Barre, Washington, Northfield, Washington West, Chittenden South, Burlington, and Rutland-Windsor School districts.

In addition to developing individualized teaching programs for some 20 handicapped students, the interns are conducting in-service teacher workshops in education of the handicapped, training consulting teacher aides, and continuing their graduate studies at UVM under the supervision of University consulting teachers.

The consulting teacher concept is designed as an alternative to the customary "special class" for slow or handicapped students. An attempt is made to design individualized programs which enable these students to remain in their regular classrooms, and progress at the same rate as their classmates with the help of individual attention.

The consulting teacher works with classroom teachers and the parents of handicapped children to enhance the students' educational progress.

October 5, 1971

Dear Sir:

We are writing this letter, as students at UVM, in protest of the $7.5 admission charged for athletic events.

As you know a football game consists of four 15 minute quarters plus a 15 minute halftime. Essentially they have five 15 minute quarters or simply 5 quarters. Since we pay $7.5 or 3 quarters, we are being ripped off. We are paying 3 quarters for five quarters and this is essentially only getting to see 2 quarters since we give three of them as admission before we even get to see them.

Our hearts really go out to those who must pay $2.00 and end up seeing 3 quarters minus 8 quarters, or by simple subtraction minus 5 quarters. Since they are now in debt by three quarters they must pay an extra $7.5 just to get even. It has come to our attention that some persons are able to attend games for free since they have courtesy passes. These people, a small minority indeed, are able to see the whole game while the vast majority can only see 2 quarters. Is this democracy?

And what about the players? They must play 2 extra quarters which only a very select few get to see.

We think that since the school has all these quarters sitting around, they should be given out in the form of scholarships to recruit quarterbacks. May we suggest that this fund be named the Quarter-Back Fund since they would essentially be giving periods. You may ask "What can be done with these extra periods?"

As you know, the University of Maine has set up an abortion fund for their pregnant females. However abortion involves a lot of money and emotional and psychological problems. What we are suggesting is a Missed Period Fund. This fund would give girls who have missed their periods a chance to have one by merely asking for what they have paid for but never seen, thus eliminating the heartache which accompanies unwanted pregnancy. Since this would not apply directly to males, there should be a clinic set up, much like the Red Cross Blood Clinic, where males and females who do not have to worry about such things may donate the periods they have been deprived of all season.

We hope that a committee will be set up to study the gross inequities in the athletic system at UVM and the proper solutions to these problems. We also hope that this matter will be brought up before the Board of Trustees and that they impose stricter controls over UVM athletic policies. Should no action be brought up before the Board of Trustees, we are prepared to bring our case to the attention of his honor Judge Harold C. Sylvester whom we trust will understand our plight and once again defend the rights of students.

Sincerely,
Andrea Orvaschel
Pope Roscoe

More Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor

I am writing on behalf of Rep. Randy Major, Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate. I read with interest your article, and editorial in today's CYNIC. While I am not certain that UVM votes will "swing" the election, I would expect UVM's influence to be considerable. I have written you because I live in Randy's home district and because I do not know if any organization presently exists which is supporting his candidacy. The intent of the letter is to give you some background information on Randy's voting record, political stance, and personal history. RANDOLPH T. MAJOR is a forty year old freshman Democratic legislator from District 13-1. This includes the Towns of Rockingham and Athens as well as a portion of the Town of Westminster known as Westminster West in which Major makes his home. In his first year in the State Legislature, Randy was named a Freshman Representative of the Year by THE CHITTENDEN AWARDS, in themselves, mean little to me but the work Randy did impressed me very much. Randy actively worked for and supported passage of the bill to lower the age of majority in Vermont to 18. Randy supported Environmental Act 250 and the "Pay-to-Pollute" bill 252. He co-sponsored legislation to permit a representative from Vermont Veterans Against The War to address the legislature and was very much involved in House Bill No. 100 (Ban the Bottle). Furthermore, Randy has been a diligent worker for increased consumer protection and has stayed in continuous touch with his constituency. Randy Major is a Harvard graduate and throughout the state do not believe that Major can win.

wired differently and the different needs and wants of the residents make a rigid policy impractical. The policy now stands that refrigerators are allowed in students' rooms and that the specific size, voltage, and number will be decided by the Housing Office for each dorm. Each dorm must contact Mr. Newton in Room C15 of Christie Hall so that it can be determined what their unit can support and a specific policy can be adopted.

Free Movies

Ray Roberts, Vice President of Social and Cultural Affairs, announced the nine movies that IRA will sponsor this term. The movies are: "Cat Ballou," "Bell, Book and Candle," "Whatever Happened to Baby Jane?" "Wait Until Dark," "The Bridge Over the River Kwai," "Cool Hand Luke," "Ten Little Indians," "Harper," and "Psycho." The movies will be shown in individual dorms and will be free to all campus residents. The dates of showings will be announced later.

Other business included the passing of a motion to give the MAT complex $100 to help them purchase a speaker system for FM music in their dining hall. A motion was passed unanimously that IRA purchase a ping-pong table to be placed in Wicks Hall for the use of the CBCW complex. The table will cost approximately $75.00.

A motion was made and tabled to donate $100 to the Harris-Mills Dedication to help cover the cost of a luncheon honoring Miss Harris and Dr. Mills and their immediate friends and guests. A suggestion was made that IRA donate $50.00 to a committee celebrating the 100th Anniversary of Women at UVM for publicity purposes. The suggestion was referred to the Committee of Social and Cultural Affairs. The will representative asked about the possibility of installing more vending machines in Wicks Hall. Dr. Miser will look into the situation.

Dean Powers will be present at the next meeting on October 12, to discuss the pending twenty-four hour social policy.

Senator Gravel Accuses A.E.C. Of Deception

Washington, D.C. Sept. 15 (CP)—The controversial CBS documentary, "The Selling of the Pentagon," was revisited here with the disclosure by U.S. Senator Mike Gravel (D-Alaska) of a summary of Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) public relations activity during the time of the last underground nuclear test, MILROW.

The disclosures, turned up in a General Accounting Office investigation of AEC public relations activity requested by Gravel, include proof that the agency deliberately misled the public.

MILROW was exploited under the Amchitka Island, Alaska in October 1966. CANNIKAN, a test five times larger, is tentatively scheduled to be detonated this month unless President Nixon delays or cancels it.

The paper reveals that the AEC made the decision to go ahead with the test long before it was announced, and that the public was told that the agency was "determining the feasibility of Amchitka for possible use in underground nuclear testing."

Public announcement was made at the last possible moment to defuse possible opposition when major construction contracts were let.

The AEC first acknowledged "an underground nuclear detonation to determine the suitability of Amchitka Island in the Aleutians for larger underground tests in tentatively scheduled for the fall of 1969" on July 18 of that year. But the report gives evidence that the AEC had made a tentative decision about the testing in the Aleutians early as December 1966.

Another technique adopted from the Pentagon Public relations activities were junkies arranged for civic groups and politicians to the AEC's Nevada test site. As the report put it "a representative of Governor (Keith) Miller (R) was flown to Las Vegas to serve as an official Alaskan observer at JORUM (a Nevada nuclear test). The observer, Ben Hilliker of the Alaska Fish & Game Department, attended pre-shot briefings, watched the shot on closed circuit TV from the Control Point, and participated in post-shot tour of the Test Site."

"On his return to Alaska, Hilliker made a report to the Governor to continue his support of MILROW."

The report dismisses opposition to AEC programs in its summary conclusions. "The primary opposition expressed to MILROW appeared to be based chiefly on anti-testing, anti-ABM, and the anti-establishment ideology politics and a desire to get publicity. The opposition leaders contained their real motives and staged a campaign designed to promote fear... This is a type of opposition. The AEC has experienced for years and one which appears certain to continue. There appears to be no method of softening or minimizing this opposition, since for the most part those ideologically, morally or intuitively inspired to voice this opposition have their minds firmly made up, will not listen to facts, arguments or opposing views, and are determined to not let their minds be changed."

The report notes that the most vocal opposition to the test came in Canadian British Columbia, and suggests that "some agency of the U.S. Government should seek to learn the motivation for the ILROW opposition engendered there."

Gravel called the disclosures "scandalous," and charges that the AE is continuing its sales campaign for the CANNIKAN test on a much larger scale.

The CANNIKAN test will take place in the middle of October. A bomb, 250 times more powerful than the ones dropped in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, will be detonated 3,300 feet from the Test Creek Fault. It will cause a tremor, equal to 6.5 or 7.0 on the Richter scale.

UVM Dipl

by Barbara Frankle

The U.S. government has decided to send Senior Foreign Service officers to selected universities across the country. Therefore, Mr. William G. Jones is now on campus as "Diplomat-in-Residence." He will remain here until May.

According to Mr. Jones, his presence offers anyone interested "an opportunity to take advantage of my knowledge of the State Department and of foreign policy." Though he is not a specialist in any area, he has a great deal of general information based on his experiences.

He has served in a number of positions for the Department of State. From 1946-1953, he directed research done on Japan and Korea. He then became a desk officer for Korea. After entering the Foreign Service in 1956, he was assigned to Seoul, Korea in charge of the political section of the Embassy. In 1959, Mr. Jones began to study at the National War College in Washington, D.C. After finishing this course, he was assigned to the Office of United Nations Political Affairs of the Bureau of International Affairs.

UVM Diplomat

Most Desperate Men Continued

by Barbara Franklin

The U.S. government has decided to send Senior Foreign Service officers to selected universities across the country. Therefore, Mr. William G. Jones is now on campus as "Diplomat-in-Residence." He will remain here until May.

According to Mr. Jones, his presence offers anyone interested an opportunity to take advantage of my knowledge of the State Department and of foreign policy. "Through he is not a specialist in any area, he has a great deal of general information based on his experiences."

He has served in a number of positions for the Department of State. From 1946-1953, he directed research done on Japan and Korea. He then became a desk officer for Korea. After entering the Foreign Service in 1956, he was assigned to Seoul, Korea in charge of the political section of the Embassy. In 1959, Mr. Jones began to study at the National War College in Washington, D.C. After finishing the course, he was assigned to the Office of United Nations Political Affairs of the Bureau of International Affairs.

Experimental Program

Community Projects

by Linda Charles

"If we acknowledge the fact that the Experimental Program is situated in Burlington, Vt., and disregard ourselves as an island in the town but as citizens, we have a better understanding of our responsibilities to the community."

This was just one of the opening comments of Mr. William Roth, a member of UVM Political Science Department, on loan to the Experimental Program. In collaboration with Mr. Richard Sugarman, assistant Director of the program and philosophy instructor, the two have recently established a formal proposal concerning an Experimental Program Public Service Internship Program (EPPSIP).

EPPSIP has been preceded by only two similar projects. The first was enacted as a result of a student request to teach Spanish in a local elementary school. The second resulted from a request to work in a free clinic. However, the participants felt; one, the nature of these projects was too limited; and two, the projects did not directly relate to a student's true academic endeavor.

Therefore, the EPPSIP committee appointed Mr. Roth and Mr. Sugarman to establish a broader internship program. This will be done by simultaneously extending and expanding the student curriculum, rather than simply adding to it. The EPPSIP proposal is as follows:

1. Either on their own or in conjunction with a supervisory board established by the Curriculum Committee of the EP students will seek out meaningful work opportunities in the greater Burlington and adjacent areas. It will be the function of the Supervisory Board to ensure that students do not undertake scabbing of any kind and that such jobs are worthy of the time invested by students.

2. The selection of a faculty member presently working at UVM will be made by the interested student either on his own or in conjunction with the Supervisory Board. Each student will submit a written report to the faculty member under whose advice he is working. The selection of faculty members should then mirror the academic competence of a teacher to supervise such work.

3. Evaluation of the student's work will be conducted both half-way through and at the end of each semester during which the student participates in the internship program. Evaluation is to consist of an open conference between the student, employer, and faculty member at mid-semester. Otherwise usual EP evaluations will be in effect.

4. Students will receive credit for one 3 credit course upon successful completion of work internship.

He served as an advisor on disarmament, Department Director of the Office and as Director of the Office of International Conferences. Since 1967, he has been Economic Counselor in the Embassy in Nigeria where he was involved in relief for Nigeria during the civil war. He was also acting Deputy Chief of Mission on 5 or 6 occasions.

Mr. Jones was born in Montana and therefore says he "looks forward to the snow in Vermont." He is a graduate of the University of Washington and is a economist by trade. During World War II he served in the U.S. Navy in the Pacific as a Japanese language officer.

"I haven't found a single boorish or rude person since I've been in Vermont. I am quite impressed by everything I've seen so far. People here all seem to have a lot of time for everyone else, not like in the big cities," stated Mr. Jones. He is also enthusiastic about being back in a college environment. He may teach a course next semester, but this is undecided at the moment.

Mr. Jones is available to anyone who wishes to see him in his office at 214 Old Mill.

In July of this year, the prisoners of Attica presented a "manifesto" to State Corrections Department Commissioner Russell G. Oswald calling for better medical treatment, clean food, shower privileges and use of the library. There was no answer or action on this request.

On September 9, in the morning, the inmates of Attica's outblock D began taking prison guards "hostage." Within the hour, they were in control. Oswald spoke to the prisoners on Thursday and then allowed a Citizens Committee composed of individuals requested by the inmates themselves to enter Attica on Friday.

The committee, which included journalists, Congressmen and state representatives along with members to the Solidarity Prison Committee and the Young Lords, attorney William Kunstler and Black Panther Party Chairman Bobby Seale, entered the prison yard and—in a mass meeting and vote by the 1500 gathered inmates—arrived at a list of demands.

The rough list which inmate leaders had presented to the negotiators prior to the meeting was divided into a first page of five—which included the requests for total amnesty and transportation to a non-imperialistic country—and nearly 30 others labeled "Practical Proposals."

The fact that the demands were divided was scarcely noted in newspaper accounts of the rebellion and not at all by State officials in their rationale for retaking the prison by force on Monday morning. Even the demand for amnesty had been broken down into several parts and was being worked on further when Oswald broke off the negotiations Sunday night.

The rebellion at Attica was not an attempt at a prison break. The one demand dealing with transportation out of the country received even less votes than the number of men at Attica serving life terms. What the prisoners wanted was humane conditions and a guarantee that the laws regarding treatment currently on the books (and in the Bill of Rights) be enforced; the necessary changes made.

Oswald agreed to 28 of the inmates' demands including such basic human rights as adequate food, water and shelter; application of the State's Minimum Wage law to prison work; permission of religious freedom, and the right of inmates to communicate at their own expense with anyone they please, creation of a Spanish library, and provision of adequate medical, drug rehabilitation, education and legal services within the prison. He also approved the creation of a grievance committee and a prison Ombudsman and agreed to recruit more non-white guards. Oswald had not even considered these requests when they were made through channels in July, or recommended over the years in commission reports. For that, the inmates at Attica were forced to revolt, and since they had learned from the past, to request amnesty.

The Citizens Committee, which had voted at the outset to consider itself a "neutral" body, soon realized the legitimacy of the inmates' demands and the terrifying deadline against which they were working. It was understood that the State would not wait for long. They would be allowed to continue only as long as Oswald and the other New York officials thought there was a possibility of a swift and clean surrender.

Early Sunday Bobby Seale was told he would not be allowed to re-enter the yard unless he agreed to urge the inmates to accept Commissioner Oswald's terms. Seale would not, and left the prison again with a film crew and several journalists to conduct interviews with the hostages, proving their safety. The hostages stated that the inmates were giving them better care than they themselves had and several guards pleaded for Governor Nelson Rockefeller, to come to Attica, adding their own new disclosures to the prisoners' claims of inhuman conditions. The Committee itself had unanimously voted to request Rockefeller's presence the night before. When the afternoon interviews were over, it was learned that Rockefeller had definitely decided against coming, saying, "It would serve no useful purpose." The Committee met with Oswald to ask for another day.

The Commissioner refused. He told them: "A powerful Committee like this should have been able to swing that group around by now." Unable to tolerate inmate control of the facility any longer, Oswald had made his final concession which was for the prisoners to give up their hold on Attica and submit to negotiations on "neutral ground." The inmates would not and issued a statement saying the next move was up to Oswald and anything which resulted would be the product of the Commissioner's decision.

And the Commissioner was ready to move. He told the Committee in what was to be their last meeting that unless they could obtain a settlement before then, they would be ordered to leave the prison at 7 a.m. the next morning, Monday.

But all sides knew that there could be no settlement that night. The negotiations were over. When, at 7 a.m. the following day, the Committee was told to leave, its members refused and were locked in the Stewards Room of the prison with a guard at the door. They were not provided with gas masks and, based on the remarks of some of the guards and State Police, several feared that they would be killed as well.

In minutes it was over. Close to 40 were dead. As the first gunfire was heard outside the prison walls, a State Policeman shouted: "This is White Power!"

And indeed, though Oswald responded "Absolutely not" when asked just after the assault if the police and National Guardsmen could have opened fire first or possibly killed any of the hostages themselves, it became evident that both of those allegations were correct.

The final instructions given before the assault were: "Surrender the hostages. Surrender peacefully. Lie down on the ground and put your hands on your head." Obviously it would be difficult for the riflemen to see what was going on in the yard, yet the instructions were not to just put your hands over your head or allow the hostages to leave the yard. The inmates were told to drop to the ground and the first shot was fired when the police said hostages began "dropping," allegedly with their throats slit. Both the inmates and the hostages were indistinguishable from each other, all dressed in prison clothes.

Though ten hostages were slain by police fire, not one was killed by an inmate in the assault. In fact, numerous guards told of being spared by inmates who said they "did not have the heart" to murder them.

But the assault was not undertaken to save human lives. The hostages themselves had begged for no forceful action on the part of the authorities. The Citizens Committee pleaded for another day of negotiations to prevent a massive loss of life.

The prison had to be retaken, in Rockefeller's words, as "there could be no further concessions to the prisoners and still preserve the concept of law in a free society." The Governor's first reaction upon hearing that some hostages were alive and leaving the prison indicates the lengths to which he was willing to go to recapture order. Incredible that any were alive at all, Rockefeller said: "May God!" "There was definite relief on his face that even one hostage came out," his press secretary was later to say.

Clarification of the facts involved in the Attica uprising continues to be made public. But inside the prison, the gates have closed again and whether the lives of so many people will make any difference in the way this country's prisons treat its inmates is doubtful indeed. Immediately after the assault, Rockefeller put through a call to President Nixon and received his complete support. Nixon was especially pleased with the Governor's refusal to give in on amnesty or to further prolong the negotiations. There wasn't any other way, he said, for the State to preserve order.

Apathy

by Andrew Gilbert

Many people are finding the Cynic to be a dull paper. The main reason for this seems to be the ground it covers is too narrow. In other words it is not as far reaching or appealing enough to many interests of the students.

It must be remembered that a student newspaper is a reflection of the student body. That is not to say that the student body at UVM is dull. But the apathy concerning anyone else's interests is prevalent.

There is a simple solution to this problem, as the staff is not big enough to handle every item that comes up, a student who feels something would be interesting can write it himself. Also one can just leave a note-saying you feel such and such a topic should be covered.

The key is obviously more student input. If the Cynic can have this input in the future, perhaps the paper will become exciting and dynamic.

Not every football game, or any other sports contest, can be stripped down to a specific turning point. Some games are lost simply because one club is superior to another, and some games are won on a lucky break (conjuring up memories of Bucknell). However, sometimes there is a certain situation, a certain play that has the magical quality of changing the whole picture, not so much up on the scoreboard, but in the eyes of the team itself.

Last Saturday's contest with the Rhode Island Rams had a very definite turning point. Even though it didn't come until the fourth quarter, it did change the whole picture. The point was that set of downs at the one yard line which were fought so hard, but had no score to show as a reward.

The explanation of the loss lies in the minds of the team members on both sides. Call it morale if you wish. It was not what happened out on the field which did so much, but by how it was taken, and it was taken as one would expect. The Rams were given an incentive, and the Catamounts were left with understandable discouragement.

There is really no blame to be placed but rather both teams deserve a lot of credit. URI put up one of the finest goal line stands I have ever seen, and I give the Catamounts credit for bouncing back from such a disappointing set-back. The rejuvenation didn't take long, but it was long enough for a psyched Rhode Island club to pounce and score a quick succession of two touchdowns to put the game on ice.

I admit that there is a lot of speculation in saying that one debatable call by a referee, who denied that the goal line had been crossed, was the main reason behind another loss. Whether he was tight or wrong, I still have faith in the Catamounts, and believe they can make a fine showing if not come out on top in the Yankee Conference. I believe that if they have faith in themselves, this dream can become a reality.

Baseball Is Not Dead

By Peter Niebur

There will be a meeting Thursday, October 21 at 8 PM in Billings to determine if once more the famous bird can arise from the ashes of its grave. This time which was shot down rather abruptly last spring, the victim of deep financial burden and academic woes.

The history of this particular Phoenix has been a rather proud one. At the University, it was the oldest varsity sport on campus. During the team's long history (79 years) several players have gone on to play ball in either the minor or major leagues. UVM has won the Yankee Conference I, time and traveled to the NCAA Regionals. More important than the historical perspective is what baseball means to UVM and the state of Vermont today. Baseball and Basketball are the only two major sports which are played by almost all Vermont High Schools. Thus the program has not had to allocate huge sums of money for out of state prospects. The talent for the team has come basically from Vermont. The Centennial Field Complex and Lapointe Field House give the University one of the finest baseball facilities in the East. (The stadium and its surroundings which one gets if he asks what will happen to Centennial Field should there be no baseball are most interesting.)

Last spring the baseball program was cancelled. According to Dean Patzer, the decision was the result of a combination of two factors: The University was (and is) in deep financial trouble. An increasingly tight academic schedule combined with an expanded Yankee Conference was forcing the team to play 17 games in the last 17 days of the school year. Last spring UVM played a 30 game schedule. Included in this was a ten game "southern swing" and 15 game Yankee Conference schedule. The total budget was $30,774 which may be broken down as follows: operating budget $9,912, Insurance $612, Officials $700 Centennial-Field $9,100, The Coach's salary $10,400, and Miscellaneous $50.

With regard to any spring baseball program, a Yankee Conference schedule for this year is impossible because scheduling commitments. After talking with Mr. Lambert, Dean Patzer, and grounds-keeping, it might be possible to have a baseball club which played a ten game in state schedule for a

Thus, the purpose of the meeting will be twofold: 1) to determine the amount, if any, student support for a baseball program and 2) to determine the type of baseball program that should exist and entertain suggestions for financing this program.

Baseball has been a big part of my life. I don't like to think of the possibility of spending my last two years at the University without the opportunity to play a sport. I have to believe that baseball is important to enough people on the campus to warrant some type of program. The administration has indicated that as result of the financial problems of the University and the ill will which surfaced when the program was cancelled, it can not at this time actively promote the re-establishment of the program. Perhaps true, but let's not forget that as students of the University and supporters of baseball can actively promote the program. We must work together to convince both ourselves and the administration that there is a way to keep baseball alive and that enough people care to try.

This must be a grass roots movement. This is not to suggest that an ultimatum or anything similar be issued to the administration. It is rather a means of showing the baseball on campus is not dead and that a viable alternative to the financial problems and scheduling hassle does exist.

So, if you have an idea for some type of baseball program, if you might know how to raise some money if you are a girl or a guy, but most importantly if you are interested in a great game—Come to the meeting, October 21, 8 PM, Marsh Lounge in Billings Center.

Help!

The Sports page needs writers. We are in desperate need, not only of those who wish to cover some of the fall sports, like soccer and cross country, but we are now looking ahead to the winter sports, such as basketball. If you wish to help out in any way, as in editing, layout, writing, or anything else that you can think of, please contact Ken Whitaker, Sports Editor, by leaving a message in the Cynic Office in Lower Billings, or by calling 656-1283. Any help would be greatly appreciated.

See Saw Battle Breaks Open As Cats Fall To URI 34-22

By Ken Whitaker

When both teams in a football contest score before two minutes have ticked off the clock, you know that this is not going to be an ordinary game. It is a fair observation to say that last Saturday's contest with the URI Rams was by no means ordinary as the Catamounts dropped their third straight loss of the season by a score of 34-22.

This loss represents the first Yankee Conference defeat for the Catamounts, and they will attempt to stay in the race as they journey to the University of New Hampshire next Saturday. This will also be the first away contest for the Catamounts this season.

When the Rams and the Vermont Club locked horns at the beginning of the battle, one was reminded of a comedy of errors. Bad mistakes were made on both sides of the gridiron. The first came from Rhode Island as the opening kick-off was bobbled and recovered by Barry Viven of Vermont. Four plays later, Earl Olson threw to Steve Coon in the endzone to draw the first blood.

Then, it was the Catamounts turn to be caught flatfooted as the Rams ran the very first play from scrimmage for a 65 yard score to even up the contest. The URI club used an end sweep which they utilized effectively all day, but the attempted kick followed the Vermont example and went wide of the uprights.

Last week's contest was a see-saw battle all the way, as the lead was traded several times before the Cats met with the disastrous fourth quarter. The Rams went ahead late in the first stanza by seven points, but the Catamounts followed right on their heels in the same period.

UVM started on their own 38 and marched up to the goal line in 10 plays where Bob Rodger took it over. The kick was good.

The Cats regained the lead midway in the second period as they started on their own 20 and moved to the URI 7 before getting hung up. Kicking specialist Paul Jakubowski was called to the rescue and made good a 24 yard field goal attempt. This set the Cats ahead by 16-13, and the picture stayed the same as the both clubs hit the locker room at the half-way mark.

The lead only stayed in the hands of the Catamounts a short time, as the team from Rhode Island took it over again about midway into the third quarter. The Rams drove from their own 11 yard stripe and made good the touchdown effort. The successful kick set the Cats back 20-13 and they were never to see the lead again.

The following minutes were the most exciting, and the most discouraging of the entire afternoon. Taking the ball from the home 31, they moved it down to within the ten, and disaster struck. Vermont had three sets of downs within that crucial ten yards (due to two very lucky pass interference calls) and were unable to cash in for six points, even though Gary VanDecar looked as if he had it ones.

The Rams took over possession on the one, and marched all the way down field to set the Cats back still another seven points. The kickoff, and a Vermont fumble set URI up on the 35 to allow still another score. It is as if the failure of the goal line attack had demoralized Vermont, and the game was truly put out of reach.

In the closing minutes of the contest, the Catamounts mounted another offensive attack, and despite its futility on the final outcome, they did manage to bring it in for the score. Gary VanDecar was the man to cross the goal stripe.

Bob Rodger was the offensive standout of the day. He probably put in his best and most exhausting effort in well over a year. He carried the leather 30 times to contribute 19 yards to the total of 178 on the ground. His downfield running and the second effort he showed all day is well deserving of praise.

Another man to be congratulated is flanker Peter Hicks as he was the most utilized receiver of the day. Hicks often came through in third down situations to contribute crucial yardage, as did Rodger, as he caught a total of 8 passes for 122 yards.

The third offensive standout of the day was Earl Olson, who held down the signal caller's role. Olson came back strong from the ankle injury which he laid him out during the past two weeks, as he completed 14 passes out of 24 for the total of 216 yards.

There were, of course, the defensive stars of the day as well, even though they were having their difficulties in stopping the Rhode Island machine. Charlie Russo continued to be one of the mainstays of the front wall, and Steve Lippe, Fran Prondecki, and Kevin Lynch all put a lot of pressure on the Ram quarterback.

The final statistics for the contest look a little lopsided when one realizes that it was the Rams and not the Catamounts

Strong Second Half Attack Not Enough

Last Saturday, The University of Vermont Soccer Club met with the Rams of Rhode Island, and almost came up with the win due to a very strong second half attack. The Catamounts came up with what was probably their finest offensive effort of the season during the final two periods, but were still unable to pull the game out of the fire. The final score showed the Cats the underdogs by a score of 3-1.

The UVM boosters now post a 1-1 Yankee Conference record, and a 4-2 record overall. Rhode Island drew first blood in the first period, and added another tally to the total in the second. Despite a rather obvious hand ball in the UVM penalty zone, the referee failed to call it and the Rams went ahead by two points.

The third score for the Rams also came in the second period, which they clearly dominated along with the first. This score came as a result of a penalty which was converted into a score to the foot of Vic Ganser.

The Cats made several very successful adjustments during the second half, and got it together to put an extremely strong attack against the Rams. Dave Hartley, being overshadowed by the play of Jim Kistner, the Vermont goalie, had his work cut out for him as he made save after save. The offensive play of Bob Russell, Ron Mason, Peter Bernhardt, and Peter Breen almost succeeded in gaining the win, but the Ram defense also proved superb.

The lone Vermont score came as a result of a scramble in front of the Rhode Island net. Mason took a pass from Jack Shea and placed it nicely in the open side of the net.

Two UVM Soccer men team up to place it nicely in the corner of the net for a score.

The number of East Pakistani refugees who have crossed over into India is now over 2,000,000 - and they continue to arrive at the rate of 40,000 a day. Meanwhile, 60,000,000 of their compatriots still inside East Pakistan face an almost immediate threat of famine. The rainy season is on and the monsoons and floods further complicate problems of shelter, sanitation, and disease.

UNICEF's assistance in this emergency is an integral part of the overall United Nations relief program - with special responsibility for the children and mothers who constitute almost half of all victims. VPIRG

by Arlene Eriksen
Last Saturday great strides were made in the organization and the implementation of Vermont's Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG). Meeting in Middlebury College's Monroe Hall, the interim leaders of VPIRG discussed the objectives, the structure and the ongoing public participation of the catalyst body for state reform.

Of Vermont's seventeen colleges and universities, Bennington, Castleton, Goddard, Middlebury, Norwich, St. Michael's, Trinity and UVM were represented. Interested community and high school leaders were also present.

Seeking to ameliorate long-term aspects of decisions affecting the public interest, VPIRG's interim leaders adopted five general areas in which to work for change within the legal and political system. The proposed project areas are services and utilities, consumer protection, tax laws, environment and ecology, and welfare and health care.

Besides establishing long-range goals, VPIRG adopted a formal statement of purpose and formal organizational plans.

"VPIRG will undertake to identify and evaluate issues involving public decisions including social and institutional control and system of individual rights which affect substantial numbers of people. VPIRG will determine the 'alternatives' available, in order to determine what course of action VPIRG will take to bring about corporate, governmental, or other institutional changes that are necessary to further the public interest."

"Action taken by VPIRG will consist of a coordinated

Last spring the baseball program was cancelled. According to Dean Pater, the decision was the result of a combination of two factors: The University was (and is) in deep financial trouble. An increasingly tight academic schedule combined with an expanded Yankee Conference and poor weather forced the team to play 17 games in the last 17 days of the school year. Last spring UVM played a 30 game schedule. Included in this was a ten game "southern swing" and 15 game Yankee Conference schedule. The total budget was $30,774 which may be broken down as follows: operating budget $9,912, Insurance $6,127, Officials $700, Centennial Field $9,100, the Coach's salary $10,400, and Miscellaneous $50.

With regard to any spring baseball program, a Yankee Conference schedule for this year is impossible because scheduling commitments. After talking with Mr. Lambert, Dean Pater, and grounds-keeping, it might be possible to have a baseball club which played a ten game in state schedule for a

Thus, the purpose of the meeting will be twofold: 1) to determine the amount of student support for a baseball program and 2) to determine the type of baseball program that should exist and entertain suggestions for financing this program.

Baseball has been a big part of my life. I don't like to think of the possibility of spending my last two years at the University without the opportunity to play a sport. I have to believe that baseball is important to enough people on the campus to warrant some type of program. The administration has indicated that as result of the financial problems of the University and the ill will which surfaced when the program was cancelled, it can not at this time actively promote the re-establishment of the program. This is perhaps true, but let us not forget that we as students of the University and supporters of baseball can actively promote the program. We must work together to convince both ourselves and the administration that there is a way to keep baseball alive and that enough people care to try.

This must be a grass roots movement. This is not to suggest that an ultimatum or anything similar be issued to the administration. It is rather a means of showing the baseball on campus is not dead and that a viable alternative to the financial problems and scheduling hassle does exist.

So, if you have an idea for some type of baseball program, if you might know how to raise some money, if you are a girl or a guy, but most importantly if you are interested in a great game—Come to the meeting, October 21, 8 P.M., Marsh Lounge in Billings Center.

See Saw Battle Breaks Open As Cats Fall To URI 34-22

By Ken Whitaker

When both teams in a football contest score before two minutes have ticked off the clock, you know that this is not going to be an ordinary game. It is a fair observation to say that last Saturday's contest with the URI Rams was by no means ordinary as the Catamounts dropped their third straight loss of the season by a score of 34-22.

This loss represents the first Yankee Conference defeat for the Catamounts, and they will attempt to stay in the race as they journey to the University of New Hampshire next Saturday. This will also be the first away contest for the Catamounts this season.

When the Rams and the Vermont Club locked horns at the beginning of the battle, one was reminded of a comedy of errors. Bad mistakes were made on both sides of the gridiron. The first came from Rhode Island as the opening kick-off was bobbled and recovered by Barry Vison of Vermont. Four plays later, Earl Olsen threw to Steve Coon in the endzone to draw the first blood.

Then, it was the Catamounts turn to be caught flatfooted as the Rams ran the very first play from scrimmage for a 65 yard score to even up the contest. The URI club used an end sweep which they utilized effectively all day, but the attempted kick followed the Vermont example and went wide of the uprights.

Last week's contest was a saw-saw battle all the way, as the lead was traded several times before the Cats met with the disastrous fourth quarter. The Rams went ahead late in the first stanza by seven points, but the Catamounts followed right on their heels in the same period.

UVM started on their own 38 and marched up to the goal line in 10 plays where Bob Rodger took it over. The kick was good.

The Cats regained the lead midway in the second period as they started on their own 20 and moved to the URI 7 before getting hung up. Kicking specialist Paul Jakubicki was called to the rescue and made good a 24 yard field goal attempt. This set the Cats ahead by 16-13, and the picture stayed the same as the both clubs hit the locker room at the half-way mark.

The lead only stayed in the hands of the Catamounts a short time, as the team from Rhode Island took it over again bout midway into the third quarter. The Rams drove from their own 11 yard stripe and made good the touchdown effort. The successful kick set the Cats back 20-13 and they were never to see the lead again.

The following minutes were the most exciting, and the most discouraging of the entire afternoon. Taking the ball from the home 31, they moved it down to within the ten, and disaster struck. Vermont had three sets of down within that crucial ten yards (due to two very lucky pass interference calls) and were unable to cash in for six points, even though Gary VanDecar looked as if he had it once.

The Rams took over possession on the one, and marched all the way down field to set the Cats back still another seven points. The kickoff, and a Vermont fumble set URI up on the 35 to allow still another score. It is as if the failure of the goal line attack had demoralized Vermont, and the game was truly put out of reach.

In the closing minutes of the contest, the Catamounts mounted another offensive attack, and despite its futility on the final outcome, they did manage to bring it in for the score. Gary VanDecar was the man to cross the goal stripe.

Bob Rodger was the offensive standout of the day, as he probably put in his best and most exhausting effort in well over a year. He carried the leather 30 times to contribute 19 yards to the total of 178 on the ground. His downfield running and the second effort he showed all day is well deserving of praise.

Another man to be congratulated is flanker Peter Hicks as he was the most utilized receiver of the day. Hicks often came through in third down situations to contribute crucial yardage, as did Rodger, as he caught a total of 8 passes for 122 yards.

The third offensive standout of the day was Earl Olsen, who held down the signal caller's role. Olsen came back strong from the ankle injury which has laid him out during the past two weeks, as he completed 14 passes out of 24 for the total of 216 yards.

There were, of course, the defensive stars of the day as well, even though they were having their difficulties in stopping the Rhode Island machine. Charlie Russo continued to be one of the mainstays of the front wall, and Steve Lippe, Fran Pronecki, and Kevin Lynch all put a lot of pressure on the Ram quarterback.

The final statistics for the contest look a little lopsided when one realizes that it was the Rams and not the Catamounts

The Sullivan (87) leaps high in the air to grab an Olsen pass as a URI defender closes in.

Strong Second Half Attack Not Enough

Last Saturday, The University of Vermont Soccer Club met with the Rams of Rhode Island, and almost came up with the win due to a very strong second half attack. The Catamounts came up with what was probably their finest offensive effort of the season during the final two periods, but were still unable to pull the game out of the fire. The final score showed the Cats the Underdogs by a score of 3-1.

The UVM boosters now post a 1-1 Yankee Conference record, and a 4-2 record overall. Rhode Island drove first blood in the first period, and added another tally to the total in the second. Despite a rather obvious hand ball in the UVM penalty zone, the referee failed to call it and the Rams went ahead by two points.

The third score for the Rams also came in the second period, which they clearly dominated along with the first. This score came as a result of a penalty which was converted into a score to the foot of Vic Gosper.

The Cats made several very successful adjustments during the second half, and got it together to put an extremely strong attack against the Rams. Dave Hartley, being overshadowed by the play of Jim Kelly, the Vermont goalie, had his work cut out for him as he made save after save. The offensive play of Bob Buzzell, Vince Massaro, Peter Bernhardt, and Peter Breen almost succeeded in gaining the win, but the Ram defense also proved superb.

The lone Vermont score came as a result of a scramble in front of the Rhode Island net. Massaro took a pass from Jack Shea and placed it nicely in the open side of the net.

Two UVM Soccer men team up to place it nicely in the corner of the net for a score. Steven Frowenfeld

Last Saturday great strides were made in the organization and the implementation of Vermont's Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG). Meeting in Middlebury College's Monroe Hall, the interim leaders of VPIRG discussed the objectives, the structure and the ongoing public participation of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group.

Of Vermont's seventeen colleges and universities, Bennington, Castleton, Goddard, Middlebury, Norwich, St. Michael's, Trinity and UVM were represented. Interested community and high school leaders were also present. Seeking to ameliorate long-term aspects of decisions affecting the public interest, VPIRG's interim leaders adopted five general areas in which to work for change within the legal and political system. The proposed project areas are services and utilities, consumer protection, tax laws, environment and ecology, and welfare and health care.

VPIRG will undertake to identify and evaluate issues involving public decisions including social and institutional control and manner of individual rights which affect substantive members of people. VPIRG will determine the alternative solutions available, in order to determine what course of action VPIRG will take to bring about corporate, governmental and other institutional changes that are necessary to further the public interest.

Judge Sylvester Declares UVM SA Fee Is Unconstitutional

Judge Harold Sylvester... declared UVM's Student... Association Fee unconstitutional... on Friday, October 15, 1971. The... decision is based on his... findings of fact issued by... Judge Sylvester on September 13.

Judge Sylvester decrees: "That the mandatory assessment... of the so-called Student Activity... fee, or Student Association fee, by the Defendant, The University of Vermont and State... Agricultural College, against... each of the Plaintiffs herein in... the amount of Twenty-One and... 50/100 Dollars ($21.50) and... paid by each of said Plaintiffs... for the right to matriculate at... said Defendant University, and... the manner and method of... expending and disbursing these... fees as found, reported, and set... forth in the Finding of Facts... filed September 13, 1971, is hereby declared to be a violation... of the due process clause of the... Constitution of Vermont and the... Constitution of the United... States by the Defendant... University, and will continue to... be such a violation so long as the... present method of supervision, control, and responsibility for the... expenditure and disbursement of said Student Association fees shall continue."

The judge further added that "The Trustees of the Defendant University, and State Agricultural College shall assume the responsibility, control, and supervision of the said Student Association fees and the expenditure and disbursement of said fees for such uses and purposes as in their sound practical judgment will contribute in the greatest degree to the educational, cultural, social, and recreational support. Frederick Fayette is... representing the seven UVM... Defendant University campus... community."

A group of seven UVM... students initiated the lawsuit six... months ago. The group... contends the SA Fee is used for... activities which they feel they... shouldn't be required to Both the Administration and... the Student Association at... UVM were surprised with the... judgment order. President... Andrews issued a statement... which appears below. According

The final decision was left by... Jeffords up to the Boards of... Civil Authority.

It is believed because of the... kind of questions asked by the... Colchester Board of Civil... Authority on a special form... they require that they will be... very hard on people they... consider questionable. According to Burlington City... President's Statement:

President Andrews is disappointed with Judge Sylvester's decision.

The University naturally is disappointed with the Judgment... Order issued by Judge Sylvester on October 15 regarding its... student activity fee.

It feels that supervision of the fee, under the authority and... control of the Board of Trustees, has been both Constitutional... and proper; that the fee has been used in a balanced and equitable... manner; and that due process is in fact observed in formulating the... budget of the Student Association and in making expenditures... under the approved budget categories.

The institution attempted to demonstrate these things in Court... but evidently failed to communicate them persuasively. As a... result, we plan to appeal both Judge Sylvester's "Findings of... Fact" (September 15), with much of which we cannot concur, and his Judgment Order of last Friday.

Operational criteria for the expenditure of fee receipts by the... Student Association are and have been: 1. Funds shall be... expended for purposes which are educational, cultural, social, or... recreational in nature. 2. Funds shall be expended to support... activities that are lawful. 3. Funds shall be expended only if their... allocation conforms to the democratic processes established for... the Student Association. 4. Accounts shall be audited annually by... an independent, public accountant.

To suggest that the fee has not been properly used is wrong first... of all because we feel that the record shows that our students have... sought conscientiously to use fee receipts in accordance with the... above criteria, as well as to achieve a balanced program responsive... to the diverse legitimate interests of members of our student... bodies from year to year.

Secondly, we feel it is wrong because it reflects upon the wide... variety of speakers and activities brought to or encouraged on the... campus under Student Association auspices, for example... educationalist Arthur Chickering, poet Anne Sexton, former... State Corrections Commissioner Larry Bernbach, Governor Deane... Davis, Representative Ester Cohen, U.S. Senator Abraham... Ribicoff, Reid Benson of the John Birch Society, columnist Frank... Hankiewicz, Cleveland civil rights leader Stanley Tolliver, Ralph... Nader, and Stewart Alsop, to name a few; also student volunteer... service throughout the community; and such programs as those... of the Council for Environmental Action, the UVM Band, University... Players, Gymnastic and Swim Clubs, and Fishing... Jiffies, among others.

Statements of University policy provide a widely... appropriate framework for the use of some of the Student... Association's funds to make possible the expression of views of... educational and social significance which may not have universal... acceptance. I have principally in mind the statement on... "Philosophy and Objectives" of the University which appears... each year on the opening pages of its official Bulletin; a "Policy... Statement on Campus Dissonance and Disruption" which was... adopted by the Trustees in December 1970 and is also published... in the BULLETIN; and a statement on academic freedom in... higher education adopted by the University's Senate in 1954 and... printed in the current University Officers Handbook.

These statements refer to such things as full educational... development; commitment to the principle of free speech; and the... need for both advocacy and dissent in the educational process... which "must be dynamic even if fought with controversy." In... short, among other exemplary sentiments, they say that to be true... to its mission the University has an obligation to create an... atmosphere of openness, lively debate, critical discussion, freedom... from intimidation, and mutual respect and tolerance.

No less a body than the President's Commission on Campus... Unrest has said that "The University should be an open forum... where speakers from every point of view can be heard. The area of... permitted speech and conduct should be at least as broad as that... protected by the First Amendment."

In this context, the University's administration has always... taken the position that it is important to provide students with an... opportunity to make program and activity decisions in the... conduct of their affairs of campus. We believe decision-making... and the opportunity for trial and error are part of being educated. It is also our premise that a diversity of opportunity in student... programs (as in a platform of outside speakers) is fundamental to... the educational process. As I have pointed out, examination of the... record shows a wide range of diversity in speakers brought to the... campus with the assistance of the Student Association or its... component groups in past years. Indeed, much effort has gone... into achieving both balance and variety in speaker selection.

Attempts at censorship - for example to prevent the discussion... of controversial issues, the appearance of controversial speakers, or... the presentation of unpopular positions we feel must be... rigorously resisted. If such attempts succeed, then the free flow of... ideas on our campus cannot succeed.

In the last analysis, students learn from the totality of messages... both society and the University transmit and not from isolated... points of view. To assume otherwise would be an affront to the... intelligence and good sense consistently shown by the very great... majority of our student bodies over many years.

Illiteracy

In The South

A recent government report shows that more than one million people in the South are unable to read or write at all. Another study said that about one million others are so limited in language skills that it is practically impossible for them to understand the written word.

Although big steps have been made toward wiping out illiteracy in other parts of the country, it continues to thrive in the South. One reason for this has been that white Southerners resist efforts to reach black people with reading programs; they consider this an attempt to involve blacks in civil rights activity, the report said.

IRA Accepts

by Jeri Corey

The Winter Residence Association held its meeting October 19, at 6:30 in the Harris-Mills Conference Room. The major issue was the adoption for submitting to the Dean's Office a formal proposal for the repeal of an obligatory curfew for freshmen women.

At the October 5th meeting a proposal was made and discussed before the Council drawn up by a committee of freshmen women. This proposal was reviewed by the Welfare Committee of IRA and rewritten. The proposal reads as follows:

"The regulations of the residence halls at the University of Vermont presently subject

Meditation Classes

Every Friday evening starting October 22 at 7:30, meditation classes will be held in St. Anselm's Chapel, Redstone Campus, University of Vermont. The Teacher has been appointed by the Venerable Chogyam Trungpa, Rinpoche of the tail of the Tiger Meditation Commune, Barnet, Vermont. There will be several teachers and a number of other members from the Tail of the Tiger at each class. The teaching will focus on individual instruction. The series of classes are open to the public and are free of charge.

freshmen women to a curriculum during their first semester of residence. The curfew was intended to give the freshmen women the opportunity to adjust to a college environment, anticipating that they would devote more time to academic studies. This rationale has not been borne out conclusively, since the second semester averages of this group have been higher than the first semester averages in the past few years. This curfew also discriminates between women and men since male freshmen are not subject to the curfew. In light of the increased responsibility accorded by the lowering of the age of majority in Vermont, freshmen women, feel this curfew inhibits the development of their sense of personal responsibility.

"Freshmen Women's Curfew Discriminates Against Women, denies the exercise of personal responsibility in contrast to the increased demands for responsible behavior demanded of them, and no longer serves the educational goal of promoting more study habits. Therefore, the latter Vermont Association, on behalf of the freshmen women, be accorded the same freedom and responsibility upturned women in residence halls."

This proposal was unanimously accepted by the Council. It will be submitted with a letter and a page of statistics on the marks of freshmen women to Dr. M. H.

Social Hours Policy

1. All University residence halls may want to participate in the Social Hours Program. This program provides the opportunity for members of the community to visit in University residence halls.

a. The residence hall is the basic unit. Conducational halls may also develop separate programs for the men and women residents.

b. Each hall shall develop its own policy.

c. Within the hall it is possible to get up individual floor policies.

II. Before a living unit may participate in the Social Hours Program, the procedure below must be followed:

a. At the beginning of each semester the living unit government presents the program to be considered by the residents.

b. The program must be posted in several locations in the unit for at least 3 days prior to the vote.

c. The vote shall be by secret ballot requiring 75% majority of the residents of a unit for passage.

d. The secret vote shall be posted.

e. The officers of each living unit shall be responsible for the accurate implementation of the program.

f. The program must be posted in several locations in the unit for at least 3 days prior to the vote.

III. To initiate a new vote on the Social Hours Program in the living unit:

a. A majority of the members of a unit's legislative body may initiate a new vote.

b. 20% of those residents governed by a certain policy may petition the unit's legislative body to initiate a new vote.

IV. The Social Hours Program shall not be operative at the beginning of the academic year until a formal vote is taken. Thereafter, any time a vote is pending during an academic year, the previous unit plan is operative.

V. The government of a living unit must post, in several locations, within the living unit and in public areas, the hours the Social Hours Program will be operation in that unit.

VI. Security in Student's Halls:

a. The following security procedures shall be in effect from 12:00 a.m. - 6:00 a.m. Sunday through Thursday

1:00 a.m. - 6:00 a.m. Friday and Saturday

1. For a male to gain admission:

a. He must be escorted by a resident of that hall.

b. After closing hours there will be no way for a female resident to be notified of a male guest, therefore arrangements for male guests must be made prior to closing.

2. Female guests will have the same privileges of the Social Hours Program as male guests.

VII. Protection of Rights:

a. When a resident of a given floor determines a certain guest is harassing by over extending his or her welcome, he or she can bring up the complaint in front of the unit judiciary.

b. The unit judiciary shall determine appropriate action for such complaint.

c. Both the host or house and guest will be held accountable for any infraction of the rules.

The social procedures for the Social Hours Program will be reviewed by the Inter Residence Association Social Hours Policy Committee biannually starting with December 1971, to active recognition that each living unit further study and establish procedures which will insure the safety, welfare, privacy, and individual rights of all members of that respective living unit.

Editorial A Biased Decision

Judge Harold Sylvester's "Findings of Fact" and subsequent Judgment Order are both a disservice to the Vermont legal system, and an unlawful infringement on our academic freedom. Although a judge should not base a decision on his personal creeds and emotions, Judge Sylvester is indeed guilty of this. He has taken the objective facts and he himself has played the game of "lawyer" with the evidence, twisting and misconstruing it in order to seemingly justify his decision.

The "Findings of Fact" contain numerous fallacious interpretations of the facts as well as factual errors. The Judge found as fact that a two-third majority vote of the SA Senate is needed for a student to speak if he is not a member of the Student Association Senate. The fact is: a student need only be recognized by one senator to speak. Judge Sylvester states the transfer of funds from the University to the SA accounts is not supervised, except with respect to bookkeeping procedures. In fact, however, a number of signatures of both advisors and University officials is required to validate a purchase order.

Judge Sylvester found as fact that neither Leonard Weinglass, Edward Jamball Joseph, Herbert Aptheker, or Dick Gregory have contributed anything to the University Campus that could be termed "cultural, educational, or recreational." It is obvious that Mr. Sylvester's personal beliefs dominate his legal mind; it is unfortunate that our legal system permits this to happen. In essence, Judge Sylvester is seeking control over the speakers that are presented at UVM. The United States Constitution does not tolerate this form of censorship. The appeals court must now apply its authority.

The motives behind Judge Sylvester's decision are no longer important. It is important, however, to realize that Judge Sylvester has taken a law, and has misconstrued the evidence to fit the law. As one of Charles Dickens's characters once said, "If the law supposes that," said Mr. Bumble, "the law is a ass - a idiot."

Vermont Archeological Society Meeting

Walter Zacharchuk, Head of Underwater Research in the Canadian Government's Department of Indian Affairs, will describe the raising of a French gunboat from the waters of the St. Lawrence as one of the features of the fourth annual meeting of the Vermont Archeological Society. This year's one day conference at the Bolton Valley Lodge will begin with registration at 9 a.m. on Saturday, October 23. The morning session will hear Darrell Casteel evaluate his summer 1971 program in archeology at Lyndon State College.

After viewing Mr. Zacharchuk's motion picture presentation on underwater archeology at the 2 p.m. session, members will conduct their annual business meeting, which will include the announcement of the election of new members to the VAS Board, the presentation of officers for 1972 by the Board of Trustees, and the vote on the adoption of several amendments to the By-laws. The principal change to be considered by the membership is the provision for establishing regional chapters. If approved, the Vergennes Chapter, originally organized by Richard Adams, will be the first to petition for such status.

A dinner meeting will follow the social hour at 7 p.m. and will feature a talk on the Arctic period in the Northeast by James A. Tuck, Assistant Professor in Anthropology, Memorial University, St. John's, Newfoundland. Reservations for the dinner meeting are required and may be made by calling or writing Dr. H.N. Muller, College of Arts and Sciences, University of Vermont (656-3344).

Non-member amateur and professional archeologists are welcome to register and attend any part of the annual meeting.

Everything You Always Wanted To Know About Snails, But Were Afraid To Ask

by Wallace Lamberditt
In recent weeks, small bulletins in various periodicals have noted that the Giant African Snail, which was accidentally introduced into the Florida ecology some years ago, is gaining rapidly in population, and that authorities are trying to curb this potential "menace." Why?

Before discussing the situation, I would like to make the issue with the word "menace." Giant African Snails are among the friendliest and most useful molluscs that Mother Nature has ever blessed mankind with. A Giant African Snail has never been known to attack any human being, man or woman. In fact, in Africa they are used as a kind of "watchdog" for family gardens and, if well trained, they are extremely effective.

Now then, the fact is that whenever two Giant African Snails of the opposite sex meet, they make love to each other, procreating usually resulting. Under normal conditions this occurs about once every 19 months, the reason being that Giant African Snails are excruciatingly slow of foot. These facts are fairly well known.

But, what is NOT well known (outside of Florida) is that Giant African Snails are the most erotic and passionate lovers in the entire animal kingdom. The actual sex act is never seen, as the two lovers always join their shell openings and to end for that. It is the foreplay that is most erotic and exciting to witness. The description is saved for Part II: suffice to say there is much oral-genital contact and use of the antennae.

A friend of mine in Florida has revealed to me the reason for the increase in the Snail population: It seems that a good number of people capture some Snails of both sexes, and then let them perform later at private parties of Bacchalian intentions. There is already an underground "black market" for Snails. Many of the aberrant and sexually deprived citizens keep some Snails for private viewing. Sometimes a man will wrap up his date by showing her his Snails. The Snails put on such an impressive performance that they are seldom, if ever killed. The males are kept as studs and the pregnant females are released and replaced (they will no longer copulate). Thus the population increases.

Government officials are well aware of the reputation of these Snails. That is why they (continued on page seven)

Marijuana Causes Baldness In Rats And Hippies

Recent studies by a prominent professor in experimental psychology, Herman Dimwip, at Hoover State Teachers College, clearly relate new findings about grass (cannabis sativa) and its effects.

In the first study twenty white rats were injected with 5 milligrams of THC (synthetic marijuana) to compare their performance in maze tests with the performance of "Normal rats." Nineteen of the injected rats not only refused to try the maze, but purposely seemed to defecate in the experimenter's hands when picked up. One person stated: "the rats liked this type of deviant behavior so much, they were useless in later studies."

This time the researchers tried proving a loss of hair caused baldness, especially when the stimulated marijuana user's heads were shaven clean first. Injected rats (5 milligrams THC for seven months) had hair heads completely shaven. After a week no sign of hair growth and as long as injections were administered regularly rats grew no hair.

From these significant findings Professor Herman Dimwip concludes "It is evident prolonged use of marijuana (over 35 joints a day for seven months) as proved by experiments with rats, can be detrimental to behavior, i.e., causes uncontrollable fits of diarrhea, or having a good time in the wrong place, loss of direction in life and a chance of eventually becoming a recluse."

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:
How people forget. History repeats itself but only in ignorance. In 1946 Richard Nixon ran for Congress in California against a liberal Yale graduate, Jerry Voorhis. Mr. Nixon won by the tactic of rebalancing his opponent. The same thing happened in 1950 when he ran for the Senate against Helen Douglas. Only with this experience Richard Nixon was chosen to be the Vice-Presidential candidate with one of the most generated American heroes of our time Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Let's take a good look at the record. He was always above party politics and Mr. Nixon was always in the thick of political dirty work. This is worth nothing as Spiro T. Agnew, Mr. Nixon's vice president, brings around the country doing the same job of destruction.

Nixon's spectacular maneuver to the Presidency was ignored by Eisenhower and the establishment of the Republican Party. Agnew seems to be taking the same course as the President did, so productively.

The scheme is simple: gather your own experts and technicians, travel to keep your contacts open outside the country, speak at dinners to solidify your position with the rank and file Republicans; and perfect an approach to politics directed always at the electoral vote.

I doubt if this coming year people will see the last of Spiro T. Agnew. Lawrence A. MacLean

The Radical Student Union Speaks Its Peace

Judge Sylvester says you should not be allowed to read this. Why don't you decide for yourself?

WHO GOES?

A year ago Walter Lippmann noted how, the rich the powerful, the influential, the intellectual and the well-connected were getting out of service in the current war - as in most past wars. "Congressional Quarterly" discovered how many of the 234 draft evaders of the 535 members of Congress have been involved in the war in Viet Nam.

One senator now has a son in Viet Nam. Five representatives have sons or grandsons there. Since 1965 the sons of 49 members were in uniform but were not in Viet Nam. The offspring of 28 members did see service in Viet Nam. None has been killed or listed missing. The son of one congressman was wounded twice in a leg.

"That is the closest any of the 535 members of Congress has come to personal grief as a result of the war," says the New Republic.

Nineteen members of Congress reported sons or grandsons who "new combat." The circumstances were not told. No member of the House armed services committee has a son or grandson who is doing or has done duty in Viet Nam.

Student deferments have gone to the sons or grandsons of Senators Almon, Church, Ellender, Fannin, Fong, Griffin, Hart, Harke, Holloman, Javits, Muskie, Pearson, Pell, and Proxmire.

Other sons and grandsons have occupational deferments, mental deferments or flunked the physical. Maj. Gen. Barry Goldwater's son, Barry, Jr. is doing alternate service. He is a U.S. Congressman.

Rennie Davis Considers Eviction Of Nixon First Step In Ending War

Editor's Note: Last Tuesday Rennie Davis spoke at the University concerning the future of the anti-war movement and described the future strategy of the "People's Coalition" in effecting change. The following is a statement by Rennie Davis describing the platform foundation of the "People's Coalition."

We are reminded of this sober truth at a time when many of us are going through considerable head change. This summer has been a time of reflection and examination of basic assumptions for work and struggle. We are inadequate if not self-defeating. Our rhetoric and "revolutionary" style has created obstacles to communicating with people. We see that a movement unable to relate to tens of millions of Americans who are angry and frustrated and want change is a movement that is out of touch with its own country and time.

We are coming to acknowledge our shortcomings, our thoughtlessness and shallow vision. But none of this makes it easier to know how to move. We are drawn to the woods and sky. Some feel rampant confusion and a breakdown of the movement. Others see a new strength and patience to build a genuine people's movement from the bottom up that would involve millions instead of thousands.

In our desire to avoid the pitfalls of endless demonstrations, mobilizations and actions, we must move now to develop new

by David Buskley

This weekend the "People's Coalition" kicks off the beginning of an "Evict Nixon" campaign. It appears that their strategy is for hundreds of demonstrators to meet President Nixon at every point along his campaign route. In an attempt to add some legitimacy to this movement, October 22 the "Coalition" is convening a "People's Grand Jury." The purpose of this mock legal event is to document and charge Nixon with all crimes and injustices which are a product of or perpetuated by his administration. A look at the proposed topics and speakers indicates the "Coalition" will go to great lengths to form accusations which the voters will believe.

One of the main tactics of the "Evict Nixon" campaign appears to be the attendance and disruption of the primaries in New Hampshire and Oregon as well as the Republican Convention in San Diego. On a smaller scale, the "Coalition" hopes to be heard at all other pro-Nixon gatherings and campaign events.

When Rennie Davis spoke on campus last week, he denied that the "People's Coalition" resembled a third party force because their goal is not to support some other candidate for President as an alternative to Nixon. The extent to which the "Coalition" identifies with the electoral process, therefore, only goes as far as a democratic removal of present elected government officials.

This political stance is not as radical as it might sound. Several years ago the "Vermont Independent Party" played a major role in unseating a Republican governor for the first time in over a hundred years, clearing the way for the election of a Democrat, Phil Hoff.

How successful this strategy might be on a national scale is very questionable, but Davis may be correct in his assumption that it is easier to dispose of mediocre officials than to replace them with better ones.

Despite the "Coalition's" denial of third party identity, they have many characteristics of another party also trying to evict President Nixon, the Democratic Party. They are using as their platform a well organized mock legal event, the "People's Grand Jury." They are going to the primaries and a convention as a third force. And finally, they are going to go into the grass routes of America, campaign style, and appeal for support from all the voters.

It seems only too obvious, whether admitted or not, that the "People's Coalition" in effect is aligning themselves with the Democratic party. If their goal is served, Nixon will not be the next President, and Muskie most probably will be.

Has it not been said that the American news media was a major impetus behind Lyndon Johnson's decision not to run again? Thus, again it is worth repeating: what the "People's Coalition" is attempting really is not that radical. Despite the rhetoric they chose to use, it might, therefore, be politically educating in coming months to watch the Democratic Party and see to what extent they take advantage of the anti-war sentiment which the "People's Coalition" movement. For that matter, if the analysis is correct, it might also be educating to keep an eye on John Mitchell's Justice Department.

NIXON EVICTION PHASE ONE

How do we relate to an election that will engage the vast majority of the people in this country in a process that has consistently proven its bankruptcy? How do we relate to the forms of participation that can integrate the slow base building that must go on with national perspectives and national actions that concentrate our power and communicate our signal of love and solidarity to people?

Popular opposition for Richard Nixon, the individual, when we know that individual personalities and changes in administration do not alter the fact that it is a system that must be transformed? The past five Presidents have employed American technology to wage war against non-white people in Asia, what-ever the "mandates" they got from the voter.

We make the following assumptions: (1) the value of defeating Richard Nixon cannot be underestimated; and it is the people Nixon has attempted to intimidate, malign, brutalize and repress that should lead the campaign for his eviction. (2) that the most effective way to convince the next President to get out of Vietnam is not to work actively for the Democratic choice, but to create a climate in the United States that drives Richard Nixon from political power as Johnson was forced out in 1968; (3) that the Evict Nixon campaign must be grounded in a solid political analysis about power in this country and that the local organizing that is done from now until San Diego must help people to understand that the problems of this society run much deeper than the particular personality of Richard Nixon.

'People's Grand Jury'

On October 22, an historic People's Grand Jury will be convened in Washington, D.C. At a time when grand juries are meeting in Washington, Detroit, New York, Seattle and other cities to represent opposition to the government, a People's Grand Jury will begin its investigation of the government of the United States. Jurors will be well-known mothers, ex-prisoners, students, blacks, Chicano, factory workers, government employees and Vietnam veterans. They will proceed on the authority of the Constitution itself, particularly the 26th amendment which recognizes the ultimate sovereignty of the people against the government. They will call witnesses who can lay the factual basis for deception and criminal activity as it has operated in high places of power. The first session - from October 22 to October 25 - will help give definition to the idea of a People's Grand Jury and work out the direction and procedures for an objective and thorough investigation, capable of producing a report that names names both of individuals and corporations whose power over people's lives should be taken away. Probably no indictment would come from the People's Grand Jury until the first state political primary.

The People's Grand Jury will put on public display its exhibits and documents, by asking communes, tribes, food co-ops, collectives and organizations to bring to Washington their own depiction of life in America under Richard Nixon. These exhibits will be displayed on the Ellipse, directly behind the White House on Monday, October 25.

Throughout the weekend of October 22-25, workshops will discuss ideas for an election year strategy - the national political conventions; local organizing; projects; political primaries; Republican fund raising affairs, etc.

On behalf of millions of Americans who accept these terms, we will declare this October 25 PEOPLE'S ARMISTICE DAY and declare that we are at peace with the people of Vietnam. Then, to dramatize what is required to end the war, we will march in candle light procession to the White House.

PHASE II

On Tuesday, October 26, we plan a demonstration that will serve as an international call for world wide demonstrations at the time of the San Diego Republican National Convention. We will arrive at the White House at 7:30 a.m., marching from churches and universities throughout the city towards Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the Executive Mansion. There we will gather in a large square service of mourning for the victims of atomic war.

China, San Quentin and all other places where courageous people have lost their lives in their resistance to the crutch of this system. We will serve an eviction notice on Richard Nixon and, if possible, for our service should be denied, we will engage in massive non-violent civil disobedience. Our first action is to serve notice that we are going to organize in thousands of communities as opposition that cannot be ignored or denied and that will make a powerful presence throughout the election period wherever Nixon travels.

Finally, we will use this national action as a mechanism for our own participation in the planning and developing of Phase II of this election year strategy. Our hope is that with each new stage more and more people can become involved in the decisions that will continue the workshops of the weekend that will bring the perspectives of many communities into a process that will build from where we are towards what we want to become.

QUESTION: Since the beginning of this term I have fallen into the habit of taking 2 to 3 hour naps during the course of a night rather than sleeping straight through for seven or eight hours. This multiple but shortened method of sleeping conforms better to my study, eating and other habits. Is there any physical harm in this, as I do get a total of seven to eight hours sleep? Some people criticize me for my sleeping habits, but I say that if my dog and cat can do it, I can too.

ANSWER: Ignoring your test provocative comment for a moment, there would not appear to be anything harmful in your sleeping habits. During an uninterrupted night's sleep, a person tends to cycle between shallow and deep sleep about every hour and a half to two hours. It is also not unusual for a person to come very close to awakening or, actual awaken several times during the night. During the more shallow episodes of sleep, dreaming tends to occur. There appears to be a need for both types of sleep in man and if he is deprived of either for any length of time, his function during the waking state is severely affected.

Some people tend to be more alert when they wake from a short nap and you may be finding this to be the case. Eating also seems to follow some sort of cycle during the waking state. Extending this waking, sleeping pattern of yours over too long a period of time would seem to risk interfering with the usual pattern of socialization among human beings. In this sense, what works for your dog and cat may be less appropriate to you.

QUESTION: I believe my sister to be under the false hope that tripling or quadrupling the normal birth control dosage for three to five days immediately after intercourse will bring about her period and thereby avoid any conception which might have occurred. She borrows some friend's pills for this. Also, she has considered taking the "morning-after" pills. Is there such a pill? She has never been on the pill.

ANSWER: Your sister's creative pill taking will do nothing to prevent pregnancy. Birth control pills are effective only when taken each day as directed. The hormone content of the pill is not sufficiently high to enable it to be used as a morning-after pill. There is a morning-after pill which consists of very high doses of a particular hormone taken several times a day for a few days. To be effective it must be begun within two to three days (preferably earlier) following intercourse. The use of the morning-after pill is not widespread. It appears to be effective, but some physicians are worried about potential hazards. Since your sister is having intercourse, you should insist that she use adequate contraception regularly.

QUESTION: How efficacious is hypnosis in the treatment of obesity? How long would treatment last, approximately?

ANSWER: Hypnosis alone is not an effective treatment in obesity. Attempts have been made through post hypnotic suggestion to discourage a person from eating. The desire or need to eat is a greater stimulus than the suggestion so the whole process breaks down rapidly. Eating during hypnotherapy sessions is unusual and the treatment usually lasts from one half an hour to an hour.

QUESTION: My girlfriend and I have noticed a certain phenomenon during intercourse. If we continue motion after the reaches climax, she suddenly experiences an uncontrollable tickling sensation in the vagina. If I don't withdraw immediately, she goes into hysterical laughter. What causes this? (This is really on the level.)

ANSWER: Following orgasm, there can be changes in the perception of stimulation received by the sexual organs. Sometimes continued stimulation results in an intensely uncomfortable feeling somewhat akin to pain. Men are especially susceptible to the latter occurrence. The odds are that your girlfriend's response is due to something inherent in the nerve supply to her vaginal area rather than anything attributable to you. Since sexual intercourse should be something that is enjoyed by the participants, your friend's post-climax seems entirely appropriate. I'm sure that the many people who find that sex is unpleasant will be reassured by your query.

Spirit In Flesh Disappointing

The "Spirit In Flesh" commune rock band made an impressive arrival at Memorial Auditorium last Friday night; and then succeeded in putting on a sloppy show for a small but unenthusiastic audience.

The concert began over a half hour late, and the music was marred by a combination of blaring amps, feedback and microphone failure. In general, the "Spirit In Flesh" band did its own thing. Melodious; guitar, drum, organ and vocal ensemble more or less meshed together into something that sounded very amateur.

Perhaps due to the group's religious conviction, (the group induced the audience to new dimensions of reincarnation), the members could not concentrate on keeping their parts in the music.
One thing is for sure, they could not keep their audience - many left.

Because the concert was for the benefit of Shaker Mountain School the spending of $2.50 was supposed to seem less like the ordinary "rip off." However, judging from the audience that attended the concert, it is possible that $2.50 to some was still a lot of money.

Was Carnegie Hall pleased when "Spirit In Flesh" did their thing there?

Movie Review Vampires and Spacemen

By Steve Pando

THE RETURN OF COUNT YORGA

2001: A Space Odyssey
Directed by Stanley Kubrick
Story by Arthur C. Clarke

This is one film you see either going to love or hate. I have not yet found anyone who had no strong feelings one way or the other about the movie. If you dislike it, you will wonder what anyone can see in it and if you like it, you will wonder what anyone can see in it and if you like it, you will wonder what anyone can see in it.

The movie has one major weak point and that is the plot. Unfortunately, unless you know what is going to happen and also the later Arthur C. Clarke is working with before you see the film, following the plot will be almost impossible with confusion certain as a result. This is due mostly to the obscure nature of the black monolith and to the failure to explain the purpose of the mission to Jupiter until near the end of the mission. Unless you are prepared for the final section of the film this part of it will also throw you.

The movie is about man's first encounter with extraterrestrial life. The almost-human space explorer (played by Gary Lockwood) finds the same monolith buried on the moon. The monolith has been placed on the moon to alert the aliens to the status of man. Thus, upon the moon to alert the aliens to the status of man. Thus, upon the moon to alert the aliens to the status of man. Thus, upon the moon to alert the aliens to the status of man.

It is with the visual aspect that the film achieves its excellence. Unfortunately, most science fiction films go heavy on the fiction and very light on the science. This film is a marvelous display of plausible scientific advancements in the near future. Over two million dollars were spent on the special effects and it shows. Visible are some of the best space sequences ever produced on film. The photography is superb; and the transition scene between the spinning bone and a spaceship is magnificent showcasing a very effective use of the art of the film.

The music adds tremendously. The playing of the Blue Danube while the spaceship approaches the moon-landing is hauntingly beautiful. The star of the film is HAL, the perfect computer. Although Stanley Kubrick and Arthur C. Clarke have created a unique film, one of the truly great efforts of the Sixties. To date the film has grossed about 18 million dollars.

The latest vampire flick is from American International, the American equivalent of England's leading horror studio, Hammer. Better than MURDERS IN THE RUE MORGUE, also made by American International, this film owes everything to the original DRACULA, made in 1931. The two plots are similar as are the characters represented in each. This new film is reasonably well done and better than many horror films.

The film's chief asset is, of course, the classic story of vampires by Bram Stoker, based for the original DRACULA. The shot where Cynthia cuts her finger on a glass bottle of Count Yorga's blood is taken directly from the 1931 DRACULA. There are many well-conceived puns in the film, most of them occur in the costume party in which the director creates a visual pun by outfitting characters in a vampire costume. He wins first prize for Count Yorga who is also present. While a group at the party discuss vampires, Yorga claims that one has lived as long as he has only because in both cases, also, when asked how he got to the party with the bridge washed out, Yorga says he flew. Yorga raises his cape to cover himself when the reverend takes a picture. These are all classic vampire scenes.

Yorga is more advanced than his predecessors, however. Not only does he drive an expensive car when he doesn't want to fly but also he watches vampire movies on TV with Spanish dialogue yet (the movie takes place in San Francisco). Even vampires must change with the times.

The film is well photographed throughout with the good color that is characteristic of most of American International's pictures. The dream-like sequence where shot in pale red, as every dream sequence in MURDERS IN THE RUE MORGUE. The music reinforces the horror and is quite effective in some places. Some of the shots are a bit bloody, but this is to be expected in films made today.

The ending, while not outstanding, is more than adequate to carry the film. Several scenes, filmed using dissection lenses, add to the horror, especially during the chase through the seemingly endless house. The ending is a shocker and well done. On the whole the film is good and a cut above many horror films made today.

Opening Event of Lane Series Is Enjoyable But Light Drama

George B. Bryn
Leonard Genie's (Butterflies Are Free) is not great drama, but it is good theatre. A play is good if it does what its author shaped it to do. If Genie planned to marshal a laughable, commercial array of devices calculated to please the proverbial "tired businessman," he succeeded admirably and justified the New York critics' reception of the play as a pleasant relief to the usual Broadway buff. Likable characters, caustic wit, ludicrous sight gags, a smattering of psychological motivation, and relaxed attitudes toward sex are all present in good measure and constitute an entertaining evening in the theatre.

Dramatic artistry, on the other hand, is based on a playwright's ability to manipulate incidents and characters with skill and imagination. Genie managed the former but is disappointing in his treatment of the characters of his drama. At first glance, the play seems to be well-organized with each incident following the preceding one in logical order—no mean accomplishment. Growth accompanies the development of each of the main characters, and when the crisis of the drama occurs, each character is well on the way to learning something about himself and the others. In fact, what the major characters learn is is spent trying to "help" the son. These characters, then, are acted upon mainly by external forces, but there is very little dramatic deliberation and choice, which is the material of internal motivation. The forces of heredity and environment, rather than the characters' choices, are the real determinants of their actions. Jill's mother had been married four times; Jill grows up unable to commit herself to anyone. Don's mother is victimized by her society's conception of the proper way to live; she conforms and expects her son to do likewise. At his mother's side, Don was a hesitant, frightened dependent, but his former girl friend's influence and environment endowed Don with confidence. Thus, the characters are somewhat limited and unable to initiate probable action from within.

Dialogue is dictated by the characters in drama. Who they are determines what they say, and each character ought to speak differently. In this play, nearly any line, except those about blindness, could be spoken by any character. The dialogue is indicative of an over greater fault of construction though.

In the first act, forty-five minutes are devoted to the exposition of prior events, questionable construction to say the least. But the author has filled this time with repartee, jokes, puns, and other self-conscious devices of fiction as it is An embarrassing moment in Leonard Genie's play, "Butterflies Are Free," from left to right John Spencer, as the blind boy, Pamela Gilbreth as the hooky actress and as the dominating mother, Jan Sterling. His arrangement of the action, Genie acquires himself in a commendable manner. But somehow his accomplishment is unsatisfying. Something unrecognized caused Clive Barnes to remark that the drama seems hollow, and that something has to do with the way Genie conceived his characters. This hollowness derives from a feeble understanding of what constitutes dramatic characterization. The people of the play are not drawn as multi-dimensional agents, responding to both internal and external motivations. Don, the central character, blind, received his confidence to adapt to the sighted world from a former lover. Jill, Don's paramour, was married for six days and realized at the altar that she was not capable of the usual emotional commitment attendant upon married life. She let herself be persuaded that she was unable to call off the wedding. The mother, the best-drawn character of the lot, is a suburbanite, the personification of the worst traits of Momism but not unreasonably selfish. Her life

Ragtime Concert and Commentary

This Friday evening, October 22, at 8:00 p.m. in Billings Center North Lounge, Rick Winston will give a concert with commentary of "classic ragtime," featuring works by Scott Joplin, Joseph Lamb, and James Scott.

Ragtime, the musical phenomenon that swept the nation in the late 1890's, created an impact probably not again equaled until the rock music of our own time. Its immense popularity lasted only until the end of World War I, when it gave way to, or rather was absorbed by, jazz.

Scott Joplin (1868-1917), known as the "King of Ragtime," was a serious artist who elevated ragtime from a purely venacular music of the honky-tonks and sporting houses to the status of a valid art form. Although he observed the conventional formal restrictions of ragtime style, Joplin's creative flow of melodic, poetic, and rhythmic inspiration, and his meticulous and elegant workmanship, place him in a unique position not only as a composer of superb ragtime, but as an important figure in American music.

A resident of Adams, Vermont, Rick Winston is a recent graduate of the University of California at Berkeley and a former instructor of psychology at Goddard College.

The Sierra Leone National Dance company of 34 dancers, singers and musicians will perform in the Lane Series on Monday, 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

Tickets: $6, $5.25, $4.50, and $3.75. Available in the Lane Office, 234 Water Street, and from the company, tel. 636-3434.

The company will perform traditional dances by native artists in a representation of the culture of Sierra Leone.

The programmed dances include the Mende traditional tribal dance; "The Sultans"; Baboon Dancers; the Bressa Dance; the Witch Bird; a Kurank Dance; Sathish Barrie, acrobatic dance; and a dance.

The Troupe is making its first return to America, after having performed at the New York World Fair, followed by appearances in the Sullivan Show.

The group was established nine years ago by the Sierra Leone Ministry of Social Welfare to perpetuate the development of the culture and to attract tourism to Africa.

The Troupe is now a permanent member of the directorship of the Mounting-Graden, and has been throughout the world for the excellent performance. The Troupe is encamped outside of Freetown, Sierra Leone, training twice daily.

The Troupe performs both for local overseas engagements. Locally it performs important national celebrations.

realized that nothing was happening and that this lack of action had better be disguised by clever lines. What surfaces after examining the structural links of the drama is a fairly good resemblance to a nineteenth century social problem play in modern dress. That it is executed in fairly satisfactory terms makes the drama worth seeing, especially with the cast which appeared in Burlington. The company is headed by Joe Sterling, a respectable movie actress of supporting role. Miss Sterling looked lovely and combined in her portrayal of the mother both the blind and the concern which are required. Her voice, sadly, seemed not to be adapted to the demands of the stage. It was poorly supported and at times quite strained. The roles of the young people were acted admirably. The impression which remains is one of time spent quite pleasantly but which could have been more profitable if the drama were shorter by half and contained more artfully drawn characters.

Sierra Leone National Dance Troupe

The Sierra Leone National Dance Troupe, a company of 34 dancers, singers and musicians, appears on the Lane Series on Monday, Oct. 25, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

Tickets, $6, $5.25, $4.50, and $3.75, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations and information, tel. 656-3418.

The company will perform traditional African dances by native artists in a theatrical representation of the culture of Sierra Leone.

The programmed dances include the Gborio, a Mende traditional ritual dance; a sketch, "The Suitors"; Baboon Dancers; the Mambo or Breast Dance; the Witch Bird; a Kuranko Solo War Dance; Satineh Barrie, acrobatic dancing; and a rope dance.

The troupe is making its first return tour of America, after having performed at the New York World Fair, followed by appearances on the Ed Sullivan Show.

The group was established nine years ago by the Sierra Leone Ministry of Social Welfare, both to perpetuate the development of the country's culture and to attract tourism to Africa.

The troupe is now a permanent institution under the directorship of Mr. John Hastings-Graden, and has been acclaimed throughout the world for the excellence of its performance. The troupe is encamped in the outskirts of Freetown, Sierra Leone, where it trains twice daily.

The troupe performs both for local and for overseas engagements. Locally it performs on very important national celebrations, such as

Independence Day, on visits of foreign Heads of State and for tourists from all over the world. As a result of this the number of tourists to Sierra Leone has continued to show a steady increase since Independence. Generally, tourists come from Western Europe, America, and Eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union. Apart from individual tourists, cruise liners have called at the Port of Freetown with thousands of foreign visitors entertained by the troupe.

This unique folk dance troupe imposed vivid images of Sierra Leone on the minds of thousands of Americans when it took the New York World's Fair by storm in 1964 and where, in the final analysis, it was voted the best dance ensemble at the fair and was presented with a gold plaque. For the American press the performance of the troupe was "a triumph of artistry, exciting, exhilarating, but above all, authentically African."

In London's vast Albert Hall in 1965 it outshone Limbo dancers from Ceylon in the Commonwealth Grand Gala. After the London Festival the troupe visited other British cities and a year later went on a European tour which included the Spoleto Festival.

The next attraction on the Lane Series, Ike and Tina Turner, will be presented on Nov. 3. The Lane Office stated that there is a possibility that this concert will be postponed to early December; ticket-holders are advised to watch for announcements. Only 25 tickets at $6 and $5.25 remain on sale at this writing in the Lane Office.

"Ike and Tina" will be followed by Gordon Lightfoot on Nov. 15; this concert is sold out.

'Collaborations' Present New Techniques In Graphic Art

There's a new show at the University's Fleming Museum—a very new show. In size, it's modest—10 lithographs hung in the Lounge Gallery, but in every other aspect, it's gigantic. These ten prints, shown together, are the work of seven artists, employing techniques unprecedented in the history of graphic art.

Bill Davison, head of the Graphic Arts Program in the Art Department, has adapted mechanical offset lithography and letterpress equipment, such as that used by commercial printing firms, to create fine art prints.

Unframed lithograph by David Higgins of the UVM Art Department.

With the financial support of the University and the Vermont Council on the Arts, and above all, with the aid of the craftsmen at the George Little Press in Burlington, Davison has developed the technique over the past two years. Now only have his investigations "become" "collaborations" in the work of seven artists, employing techniques unprecedented in the history of graphic art.

print. Infinite numbers of colors can be employed. Images can be printed on materials other than paper. In addition, the individual—each—can be more, less expensive and more available. "Art and technology have become symbiotic, to each other."

Early examples of Davison's work in this new technique were included in his one-man show at the Fleming Museum last October. His present show represents his collaboration with the Museum, who at his request commissioned this series of ten prints from four other members of the UVM Art Department—Francis Hewitt, Daniel Higgins, William Lipke and Edwin Owe, and two visiting artists—Isaac Witkin of Bennington College and Marilyn Davis of U. Mass, inviting them to make their own artistic demands on the technique. In this way Davison was able to pose a multitude of new problems to the method. Each print in the "Collaborations" exhibition has been done in an edition of 30; each is for sale at $30, at least half of what it would cost if done by hand or were sold in a commercial gallery. Money realized from the sale of these prints will be applied toward continued experimentation.

Davison's method is working toward a new definition of the nature of an original print. The work of art is no longer strictly the private output of one person. The images presently hanging on the Museum's gallery walls are the summation of one artist's imagery (frequently involving found images as well as drawn ones), another artist's technical investigations, and the skills of a number of industrial craftsmen. "Collaborations" may be seen at the Fleming Museum through October 28th.

Album Review

by Doug Collins

In a relatively short time, Leon Russell has become a rock 'n' roll legend. From work as a session musician for such disparate figures as Frank Sinatra and the early Byrds, he's done work in his now-famous home-made Skyhill recording studio, toured with Delaney and Bonnie, written and produced for Joe Cocker (including acting as ringmaster of Mad Dogs & Englishmen) and done his own classic super-sensation album LEON RUSSELL. More recently, he's toured with his own band, The Shelter People, recorded with Bob Dylan and appeared at the Bangla Desh benefit at Madison Square Garden. Such a legend could easily become just history if Russell weren't the extraordinary singer, musician and composer that he is. His voice and piano are almost immediately identifiable and his songs, much like Neil Young's, echo each other in such a way that, on hearing his tunes, you soon realize you're listening to the compositions of a true artist.

Although LEON RUSSELL AND THE SHELTER PEOPLE places the final coronation on Leon's style, it's not as consistent as the first album in which each and every tune was a joy. The new album's highs are higher than anything on the first LP, but the presence of low points keeps it from being far and away a superior effort. The Ballad of Mad Dogs and Englishmen, for example, while perhaps suitable for playing over movie credits is not really worth including here; I'm sure Leon could fill up four minutes in a much better way. And the hymn to Little Richard, "Crystal Close Queen," is little more than mediocre.

The rest however rates very high; gentler and more laid-back than most of the first album, it's down home and funky as only Leon Russell is. "She Smiles Like a River," chugs along easily, one of those tender love songs that Russell writes in addition to stuff like "Alcatraz," which is a good rock 'n' roll, period. "A Hard Rain's Gonna Fall," and "It Takes A Lot To Laugh, It Takes A Train To Cry," are done up in fine fashion. But it's "Stranger In A Strange Land," and "Home Sweet Alkatraz," two magnificent songs that make the album so valuable. Each has a depth and majority I've heard only on NEW MORNING and the Band's second album and they more than make up for the previously mentioned short-comings.

'Every Picture Tells A Story' And 'The Shelter People'

There's not many people making such righteous rock 'n' roll as Leon Russell.

One of those few is Rod Stewart. His GASOLINE ALLEY is one of the few albums I have that I would unhesitatingly call great. While not a concept album, everything jells perfectly; all the songs, whether Stewart originals or not, sound at home next to each other and the musicians play in a way that gives you the satisfaction of hearing exceptional music, but leaves you just slightly hungry for more. Such combinations are minor magic, so it's not harsh criticism to say that EVERY PICTURE TELLS A STORY is not equal to GASOLINE ALLEY. It is, however, like a breath of fresh air at a time when it seems so one can avoid sounding like something we've all heard somewhere before.

Rod Stewart is his own man and all his albums, including this one, show it. His hoarse, gravelly voice captures emotion like no other rock 'n' roll singer, perhaps even including Joe Cocker. In such hushed times as these, it's not often one hears lyrics such as those in Dylan's "Tomorrow Is Such A Long Time" sung so honestly and convincingly. Or take "I'm Losing You," which in Stewart's hands becomes an aching appeal to his woman instead of a gimmicky, pseudo-soul single as heard last year on Top-40 radio.

Unfortunately, only "Maggie May," "Mandolin Wind," and the title cut were penned by Rod himself. Full of the wistful sadness and optimism that marks many of his tunes, they're three of the most splendidly beautiful songs I've heard since—well, GASOLINE ALLEY.

Aided and abetted by the same crew of rollicking rock 'n' rollers, Rod Stewart has produced an album that is not only fine music, but, for my anyway, is like a special gift from a real friend. God Bless Rod Stewart.

are trying to eradicate them; they want, somehow, to control the sex lives of the American people. But they don't want to publicize it. The President of the United States calls them "pests" in public, while privately branding them "a menace to the moral ideals of America."

But take heart, Vermonters—you can still order Giant African Snails from some biological supply houses (although a ban on them is pending). If you purchase some, keep them warm and moist but completely separated from each other. They should not even see each other as they will then resort to masturbation, out of frustration. Use them wisely and they will perform well for you and your friends. (A hint, they love black lights!). If, however, you are unable to purchase some, any species of land snails are good lovers and to watch them is a satisfying experience. It is their size and inventiveness that makes the Giant African Snail so desirable.

 Rome and Marianne Productions, Paris. Rated R.

The plot to assassinate a college professor in Paris just before World War II is the basis of this Italian-French film. The film makers have produced an excellently constructed story of a man determined to be normal at any cost. His efforts result in marriage, membership in the Fascist party which he really doesn't believe in, and assassination of other Fascists when Mussolini falls from power.

This excellent film suffers from one flaw: the plot is rather hard to follow because of the use of flashbacks; it took me about the first half of the film to properly orient myself in terms of story-line. Except for this, the film is well done throughout with good music, good dialogue, and best of all good photography. For it is with the photography that the film excels.

Excluding all other aspects of cinema, the film is a visual feast. The color photography of Vittorio Storaro is superb as he presents you with varied images that flow from the screen with such profusion that one is hardly absorbed before another takes its place. Whether the shot be a long, winding, slow motion, Storaro does it with such versatility and talent that it cannot fail to make an impression. The stillness of a man in a car lighting a cigar as seen through the rain-spattered window or the wild terror of the final chase scene shot with a hand-held camera are just two examples of the quality of his work. The photography is the film's strongest asset.

The acting is not outstanding in all cases but virtually all of the characters perform quite well with, perhaps, the exception being the professor. Somehow the role just does not come off at living in and also upon the time. Trintignant realizes this and when Mussolini is overthrown he is quick to denounce two of his friends as Fascists.

In all this is an excellent film one that deserves more than one viewing. The music adds to the film and the film as a whole is unified with all its elements working together to make the film far above average.

Catamount Clippings

You can only hold your faith so long before you start asking questions, before you start to open your eyes and start taking things at face value. My eyes are slowly opening in regard to the football club.

It has been a nice, pat formula, as far as I have been concerned. It was a bad day against Lehigh, a bad break against Bucknell, and a bad call in the contest against the Rams. Now, the formula doesn't seem quite as logical as it did before.

The Catamounts lost their fourth straight game of the season against UNH last Saturday, making their 17th loss out of the last 18 attempts. Those facts are awful to argue against.

We have been luckier than last year. This year we have at least, the Connecticut game to fall back upon, providing a rationalization for hope, making us feel as if we were justified in our optimism.

But, you've got to remember, that the UConn game was a long time ago, and the excuses are beginning to lose a little of their validity. Maybe it's just that my patience is beginning to run out.

Indeed, there was a bad break in last Saturday's game, as the best power on the team suffered a painful injury. However, it's awful hard to pass still another loss off on bad circumstances, to swallow the facts without doing some thinking.

All we can do is look ahead to next week, but with a little more reservation than we had before. The faith is beginning to fade. But, I'm willing to stick by the club because I feel they have a lot more than they're showing. I hope, or should I say I will see it next week with some hope.

Cats Claw Wildcats in Overtime Period

Vince Mameau, who has put in a consistently fine performance during the Catamount soccer tour so far this season, really outdid himself last Saturday against the Wild Cats of New Hampshire. Mameau led the UVM Soccer team from a 2-0 deficit to come out the victors in a 3-2 decision, cardiac variety. The kicker from Hyde Park, Vermont, scored two goals and chalked up an assist on the other, one of the goals coming in the overtime period to bring the contest to a quick, but pleasant end.

UNH took a hard fought lead in the second and third quarters as novice goalie, Brad Gregory, could not stop the strong attack against him. Despite his fine performance in this crucial Yan Con contest, two goals managed to slip by.

The first Vermont score came within the first minute of the final period as Bob Buzzell nudged it into the corner of the net, on a set-up by Mameau. Mameau then got the tying score midway into that period as the final buzzer rang with the scoreboard showing a tie.

Ed Cymerly assisted for the winning goal as Mameau suddenly appeared and headed the low shot to the goal up into the far right corner without even breaking stride and giving the opposition goalie no chance.

The Vermont record now stands at 5-2 overall with a 2-1 record against Yankee Conference opposition.

The Kicking Catamounts held the definite edge in the statistics, outshooting the Wild Cats 40-19, posting a total of 22-9 in the first half.

Vince Mameau proved the star of the day against the Wildcats.

FALL TO UNH 28-7

Cats Drop Fourth Straight

The University of Vermont Catamounts had still another setback last Saturday as they dropped their fourth straight loss of the season to the Wildcats of New Hampshire by a score of 28-7.

Saturday's loss put the hopes of finishing on top in the Yankee Conference far in the distance, if they can be seen at all. However, next Saturday, Vermont will take a little break from YanCon competition as they journey to Hempstead, N.Y. to meet Hofstra University. The Catamounts will be playing under unfamiliar conditions as this will be their first night game.

There were very few points in last Saturday's contest from the Catamount standpoint. The defense which looked so promising during the season opener failed to live up to the expectations as they allowed the Wildcat machine to run up four touchdowns, three of which occurred in the first half.

before the Catamounts ever made a mark on the scoreboard.

The offense had what was probably their worst showing of the season. The passing attack upon which Vermont has put so much faith in the past suffered almost a fatal blow as aerial expert Earl Olson suffered a bad knee injury in the first quarter, hindering his accuracy for the rest of the contest. Olson was only able to complete 6 of 24 passes and also suffered two interceptions, the first of the season for the Catamounts.

The defensive secondary, which has been trying to get it together since last season, had another tough day as they allowed 8 completions for 191 yards and a score. The Vermont club was able to net only 84 yards in the air and 144 on the ground. The Wildcat machine drove for slightly over 200 yards on the ground.

The team from New Hampshire drew first blood for the contest, and held that lead to the final buzzer, at no point in the contest being in danger of losing it. The first score came in the first quarter, as the ball was taken to the UVM six on the second play from scrimmage. A short dash to the scoring zone lit up the scoreboard.

The Wildcats added another 14 points to their score in the second quarter before the Catamounts finally managed to break the shut-out. Steve Coon took the punt on the UVM-5 and scampered, with the assistance of some fine downfield blocking, all the way to the other end of the field to chalk up the lone Vermont score.

The third quarter proved scoreless for both clubs, and the final blow came in the fourth quarter as the UNH club contrived the final 7 points to bring the final score of 28-7.

It looked as though the Cats were to add another tally to their credit as a pass from Olson to Dan Leber looked like a touchdown all the way before going off Leber's fingertips.

Despite the rather disappointing effort by his team, Bob Rodger put in still another fine performance, keeping up the consistency he has shown all season. Rodger ran for 105 yards on 24 carries, bringing his yearly total to 446 yards. A 93.3 game average.

Tim Sullivan regained his position as prime receiver for the club as he hauled down five passes for 49 yards. Flanker Peter Hicks contributed another two completions and Dan Leber added one.

Both clubs suffered two lost fumbles, one of which proved very costly for the Catamounts. Rodger bobbled the ball on the opposition 25 to abruptly stall a possible Vermont scoring drive.

Still the fact does exist that the Cats failed to get within the 20 except on the scoring run by Coon.

Trackmen Off to Slow Beginning

Cross country is an individual sport and doesn't have much appeal except for the participants and the people closely related to them. If you are in a quiet mood and want to see some action that I think is quite gratifying, come see a cross country meet. Better yet, go out and run until you are breathless, hot and dizzy. In moments like those your body feels what the mind constantly tries to reveal. Words can not keep up with the heartbeat of a runner so you must try it yourself, alone, late tonight or early in the morning to understand what I mean.

The team is getting off to a slow start this year. With captains Don Baker and Peter Blaset accustomed to chasing the better seasons last year it is difficult to be out front passing. Ole Anderson and Rex Gravel are back from last year, but the rest of the team is new. Charlie Arnold, a midwesterner, has had the best performance so far. Rusty Feldman is coming on strong, losing some of that stale air most of us accumulated over the summer. Mike Berry, a runner from Burlington who is accustomed to running 2 1/2 mile courses, is learning the new rhythm of the five mile pace. Clay, the pace man for the first two miles, lets others pace him for the remainder of the race. He has cramp problems and must learn to run with less upper body movement.

There are other members of the team as well. Greg Bobbin, the anchor man, Bob Sargent, who is training for the spring, Ralph Lynch, who is trying to stay healthy and is one of the best runners at Vermont and third in the Junior Nationals. Charlie Baldwin, his orange shirt always ahead in the races and the "give a damn" patch on his back.

At UNH we did poorly with an 12,13,16,17,19 and 20th place. Rusty ran well. In Amherst, Clay and Blaset went out too fast and died in the apple orchard. Charlie Arnold with his controlled pace came in first for the team with a 12th.

The rest of the club did not put in a very fine performance. The following day we had a meet with Middlebury and St. Michael's. Still tired from the UMass meet, we nevertheless did quite well. Don Baker, in the last 200 yards, passed two Middlebury men to help in the win. Charlie Arnold put in a fine performance for a 4th place, and Blaset contributed a 5th. Rusty Tiedeman and Ole Anderson were right behind.

The best way to win is by attitude. The final score was UVM 37 and the Panthers 32. St. Michael's chalked up a total of 69 points. These numbers getting better but seem to control the logic of victory.

Yesterday we left for Troy, and Saturday we journeyed to Maine. Next Saturday we head to Storrs, Connecticut for another Yankee Conference meet, and we reach the New England meet in Boston on November 8.

With the patience of our coach Bill Neddings, let's hope we can do better in our next race.

The Inter Residence Association held its weekly meeting Tuesday, October 20, in the conference room of Harris-Mills. Topics discussed included plans for a new dorm to be built, the Women's Centennial Celebration, and Winter Weekend.

Margaret Tetrick, Vice President of Welfare, reported that the Welfare Committee had been shown the plans for the new residential complex scheduled to be built. Construction is due to start November '71 and completion will be in July '73. The complex will include both residential and academic space. There will be shops and a photo lab. The estimated cost is $5.2 million.

In answering a question about the need of a new dormitory when existing dormitories are not yet filled to capacity, Dr. Mizer, Director of Housing, said that even though expected enrollment will not increase, it is hoped that the new dorm will help to attract more residence students. It is also possible that some existing residence buildings (the old Childs-Buckham-Willis complex) will no longer be needed as residence halls.

A representative from the Women's Centennial Celebration Committee presented the Council for a vote next week. The committee will be commemorating the hundredth anniversary of women at UVM. On whole issue of the Cynic

"Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest" - Deadline: November 19, 1971 - Rules on page 2 of this CYNIC

VPIRG Solicits Support

by Arlene Erdman
With a time parameter of December 2 set for the completion of petitioning, the Vermont Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG) is now actively canvassing the campus and community for public support of its organization.

VPIRG is essentially a research and public education group. In seeking to represent broad areas of public concern in the decision making process, VPIRG will operate as a problem solving group working for change within the legal and political system.

Its general areas of concern will include consumer protection, resource planning, occupational safety, protection of natural resources and environmental quality. Other areas of concern are racial, age and sexual discrimination; landlord-tenant relations; delivery of health care and similar matters of urgent or long range concern to the welfare of the people in the state of Vermont.

As soon as it is firmly established, VPIRG will consist of a group of lawyers, scientists and other professionals working full-time under the guidance of a student board of directors. It will concentrate on representing student and citizen causes before the courts, the legislature and the public. VPIRG will be financed primarily by student funds raised and allocated by students.

Most of the seventeen colleges and universities in Vermont have shown an active interest in VPIRG. Participation in VPIRG programs will be open to all state and private colleges, universities, junior colleges, graduate colleges and other schools that adopt the VPIRG financing procedure. The participating schools will have the right to select one or more student representatives for service on the State Board of Directors.

petitioning their Boards of Trustees to assess the regularly enrolled students at the participating schools $3.00 per semester per student or $2.00 per tri-semester per student. The collection of funds will be assessed through a special student fee. Students who choose not to participate in VPIRG will be entitled to a full refund during the third week of each semester from the local offices of VPIRG.

One of the innovative aspects of Vermont's Public Interest Research Group is the involvement of high school students and community members. In other states which have established VPIRG's such as Oregon, Minnesota and Iowa, the VPIRG has been solely supported by students on the college level. The high school students and community members will also be assessed a membership fee, the minimum being $5.00 per year.

The main advantage of VPIRG is its wide range of possibilities. VPIRG can provide a focus for the expression of those values held by large numbers of the community. It will bridge the continuity gap created by classes, vacations and exams and will prevent large movements once begun in the Spring from dissolving into the summer vacation. Most importantly, it will provide the needed expertise and therefore, an effective means for change within the framework of the established legal system.

October 28
March 1st - 6:30 pm
2nd - 7:00 pm
March 4th - 6:00 pm
March 5th - 6:00 pm

38 Legislators Visit UVM

by Jill Stevens
UVM witnessed on Monday an innovative one-day program designed by University students to narrow the communications gap between Montpelier legislators and themselves. Vermont Legislative Day, as it was called, was planned by a Student Senate Committee and headed by Springfield Junior Neil Smith, and Paul Barrows, a sophomore from Saxton's River.

The Student Senate Committee and its co-chairman invited student hosts from the several legislative areas of Vermont to act as guides for the 38 Senators and Representatives, who attended the meeting, convened at Billings Center with introductions and the first public showing of UVM's new public relations film. Following a campus tour, legislators were invited to dinner in private homes or in one of the various dining halls, and wound up the evening in the audience at either the Lane Series concert or the Lillian Glush lecture.

Chairman Neil Smith noted that of 180 formal invitations sent to each member of the House and Senate, 27 responses were received. With further pressure from students through telephone contacts, there were eleven additional verbal affirmations. Smith observed that for the most part, legislators were not apathetic but begged off because of previously scheduled classes, Veterans Day appointments, or travel plans. The Committee's aim was not primarily political, said Smith, but rather "a good idea" to give Montpelier officials a first hand look at the University, how it is run from day to day, and in particular, its students. It was the feeling of students that certain campus events were likely to lead legislators to draw conclusions about students that are not entirely objective; the aim of Legislative Day was in this respect both preventive and educational.

Students Respond To 'Centrex' Warnings

by Lisa Charles and Mary Jo Dahlstrom
Many students are unaware of the financial difficulties involved in the University's telephone exchange. In an effort to clarify and inform the student body of past experiences which have placed UVM in debt, the CYNIC interviewed Mr. Proctor Lovell, head of the University telephone exchange.

December 1971 marked the installation of "Centrex," our present telephone system. Prior to this time, all long-distance calls were placed through a University switchboard. As the student population increased, the switchboard operators were overloaded with an abundance of long-distance calls. Consequently, University lines were constantly in use, while frequent complaints arose from students and parents. In addition to the difficulty of placing calls, students and parents objected to the time consumption of such indirect contact.

It took approximately three years for the University to install our present exchange. This system allows a student to place a call to another dorm, a local call, and to receive a long-distance call. Centrex is not designed for a student to accept collect phone calls.

However, many students have accepted collect calls and contributed to monthly telephone bills charged to an entire floor. Mr. Lovell stated that some dorms were charged up to $700 a month during spring semester of last year. All incoming calls are recorded on IBM print-out cards. Therefore, the telephone company maintains a record of the number calling a dorm, and automatically if the number is readily identifiable as being connected with a particular student on the floor, then the bill for the call originally charged to the phone in the dormitory is presented to the student believed to have made the call.

Cynic Interview:

Dr. Ansbacher Comments On Student Attitudes

by Colleen Leach

Dr. Heins L. Ansbacher acquired his Ph.D. at Columbia University in 1937 and came to UVM in 1946. He has taught General Psychology, Statistics, Personality, Social Psychology, and Tests and Measurements. Dr. Ansbacher is a known authority on the theories of Alfred Adler and on the subject of suicide and some of his books on those subjects are The Individual Psychology of Alfred Adler, Superiority and Social Interest, Readings in the Psychology of Adjustment, and Journal of Individual Psychology. We asked Dr. Ansbacher some questions about changes in student interest and activities over the years he has been at UVM.

Cynic: Were students at all active in current events when you first came to UVM?

Dr. Ansbacher: Not

Cynic: Are students more interested today?

Dr. Ansbacher: They are certainly more active in that respect.

Cynic: What would you attribute that to?

Dr. Ansbacher: Partly it was the Vietnam war, but it's more than that because it occurs all over the world. We tend to regard it as a national phenomenon but it is international and we must regard it in the light of that. Students are more active because we have reached a step in our advancement where we must change ourselves to just living on this limited earth. We cannot indefinitely expand, not economically either, and that will be a painful process.

Cynic: Are you encouraged by the fact that students are interested in using our advanced technology to help solve some of these problems, for example, to help stop pollution?

Dr. Ansbacher: Of course! The adjustment is nonconformity because through conformity we just stand still and continue in the same wrong direction. So it is just a problem of redirecting the youth's nonconformity into the most constructive and promising channels.

Cynic: How would you redirect it?

Dr. Ansbacher: They should not be nonconformists for themselves but with an eye to manhood, because this is the only way you can give value to your actions. All these revolts and nonconformities may eventually lead to something constructive, but the whole thing requires some social and cooperative steps.

Cynic: So you are emphasizing cooperation rather than isolation?

Dr. Ansbacher: Yes. There is too much isolation in this present humanistic movement, but we are only individuals to the extent that we cooperate, because there are no isolated individuals. The isolationist elements only harm themselves. Cynic: So you feel that youth is lacking direction, lacking and ideal?

Dr. Ansbacher: Yes, and I don't blame them for that. The world has advanced to this point and we have to reconsider our values. In any revolution there should be an ideal which is shared by everyone, and things would be better, but the present protest movement's weakness is that if everyone would do things that way, things certainly would not be better. Demonstrations are not very effective. They are, unfortunately, not mass demonstrations. They are demonstrations by much smaller groups. The most effective way would be to start a political party. The ideal of course would be that a great leader come along and show us the way.

Cynic: Have you found a difference in the older generation's attitudes toward youth, relative to those demonstrations?

Dr. Ansbacher: Well, yes; with regard to the excesses, and we must realize that there are excesses. Not much is accomplished by this sheer destruction. Sometimes destruction is justified but there has to be much more constructive organization, not just isolated destruction. We are in the predicament of being rich men's children, and youth feel that all that is left is to devalue what the previous generation has done. Everything is done for us and nothing is real anymore. One major change I have noticed in students is their attitude. Their pretended poverty is actually very expensive and if we thought they were forced to walk around like that, then it would be a real revolution! This way there is some dishonesty about it because pretending poverty voluntarily is acting as if you had somebody to accuse. Eventually you people may come up with something constructive.

Cynic: Do you believe that his increasing youth interest can develop into constructive patterns in spite of the interest

Herbert Aptheker, a known advocate of communism. He was paid the sum of five hundred ($500.00) dollars of Student Association funds. Dick Gregory, he was paid the sum of twelve hundred and fifty ($1,250.00) dollars of Student Association funds. Few would seriously contend these four particular speakers contributed anything to the University Campus that could be termed cultural, educational, or recreational.

The Student Association Speakers Bureau (or as it is now known, SA Speakers) was created in the fall of 1969 to meet a need on campus for an organized, funded series of speakers. The goal of the Speakers Bureau was to provide for the wishes of the Student Body—to bring to the campus a serious, carefully chosen, group of people who would interest the student body, entertain them, and help educate them as well. One of the main points of the Bureau is that it is run by students for students with help from SA advisors.

The SA Speakers has maintained an effort to provide a balanced group of people: while we did have Dr. Herbert Aptheker, the very next week we had Reid Benson, a lecturer obtained from the John Birch Society. While we have had men like Jamball Joseph and Jon Frownt, we have also had men like Gov. Deane C. Davis, Frank Mankiewicz, Stewart Alsop, and Chief Justice Warren Burger. Selective Service

Colonel William J. Burke, Vermont State Director of Selective Service, announced that Random Sequence Number 125 would be the calling for induction into the military for Vermont registrants in the 1971 first priority selection group. This group included born in 1951 or earlier who received lottery numbers in 1970 and or 1969 and are available now for induction.

The Department of Defense announced that 10,000 men would be needed to fill induction calls for the remainder of 1971 with 6,500 of these men to be delivered during the period November 1 through the 15th, and the remaining 3,500 during the period November 29 through December 9. Vermont will furnish 10 men in November and 5 in December as its share of the National Call.

Colonel Burke pointed out that the uniform National Call provision of the new draft law assures every young man in the 1971 group who is 1-A and qualified with REN 125 and below that he will receive an induction notice in the weeks ahead. He said, that some of these men will be inducted in the Army in January, February and March of next year because of the extended liability provisions of the Selective Service regulations.

Under the new draft law, freshmen's inductions may be delayed only through the first semester, and they are subject to call after that time. Members of other classes remain eligible for deferment.

of those behind the technology to continue to expand and advance?

Dr. Ansbacher: Yes, we are all in the same spaceship, so to speak. Life will be more socialistic, more like living in the family where you have to arrange yourself. For centuries the earth seemed unlimited and now things have been relatively settled for 100 years. In the end we will have to be more neighborly and more concerned with our fellow man. Therefore, we cannot be isolationists. We live with other people and the only real advancement is through the actions of people working together. Progress in itself is positive, and it is very clear that we will have to come up with something new, but we have been clever enough to overcome other troubles and I believe we will overcome this one too.

SA Offers Apology

NOTICE: SA Films wishes to apologize to all those who have been attending the Greta Garbo series on Saturday evenings. Two weeks ago the series showing was to have been CONQUEST and THE KISS. Instead MATA HARI was shown. Last Saturday we were to have shown all three films, but instead only MATA HARI again. This cannot be remedied and SA Films apologizes. This Saturday we will return to the publicized schedule of GRAND HOTEL and CAMILLE.

Cynic Photography Contest

Deadline Nov. 19

The CYNIC announces the "Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest."

The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are members. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)

2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscapes, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces or landscapes.

3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 1/2 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.

4. The pictures submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.

5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.

6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.

7. Pictures entered in the Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.

8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.

9. The board of judges will consist of Ken Perry, Photography Editor of the CYNIC, Tim, of the University Photo Service, and Bob Recupero, Assistant Photography Editor of the CYNIC. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.

10. All photographs should be placed in the appropriate box in the CYNIC office.

11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.

12. Deadline for entries will be November 19, 1971.

13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the December 2 issue of the CYNIC.

14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.

15. All questions should be referred directly to Ken Perry, in care of the CYNIC office.

Poyer To Speak

L'AMICULE FRANCAISE is presenting Monsieur Jacques Poyer, sous-prefet du departement de Gers, France, as a speaker at their November 3 meeting. The meeting is open to the public and is scheduled for 8:00 pm. in Memorial Lounge. M. Poyer will speak in French about the relationship to the French people with their state. Questions can be asked in English.

Wrestling Club

Anyone interested in wrestling is urged to join our club. Experienced and non-experienced persons wanting to wrestle as a part of the club should contact: Mike Bayles-307 Marsh-655-2907. This newly started club is coming on strong and needs more participants in all weight classes. All are welcome.

Former Israeli Consul General To Speak Nov. 4

Mr. Yohanan Cohen will speak in the North Lounge of Billings Center next Thursday, November 4, at 8:00 pm.

A former member of the Israel Parliament (Knesset), where he served between 1957 and 1959, he is familiar with the United States. His most prolonged stay in this country was between 1965 and 1968, when he served as Consul General of the State of Israel in Boston.

For most of his adult life he has devoted his time to public service. In 1945, on behalf of the Haganah (Pre-state Israel defense force), he went to Poland to organize the mass exodus of the surviving Jewish Community. During the one year of his stay in Poland 125,000 Jews departed that country for new lives in Israel.

With the outbreak of the Israel War for Independence he joined the Israel Army and served in the First Infantry Brigade.

Just before the outbreak of the war he became one of the founders of Kibbutz Tel Yitzhak in Sharon Valley and served in the Haganah and the Jewish Settlement Police while a member of the Kibbutz.

During the State of Israel's (1948-49) he commanded an infantry battalion and held the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He is now on the staff of the Israel Ministry of Foreign Affairs and deals with European matters.

THE ALLMAN BROTHERS BAND AT FILLMORE

EAST: After two critically, if not financially, well-received studio LP's and almost non-stop touring, the Allman Brothers Band seems to be on the threshold of an enthusiastic mass popularity. Because it sometimes has adverse effects on the artist as the recording end, I'm not sure such acceptance is something to wish for them. But I digress, because any talk of the Allmans must be of their music or of them as musicians. They have no pretensions otherwise.

Not since the Grateful Dead, have I heard a band play like this one: each of the six individuals helps in his own way to give direction to a music that flows along like a river: strong, sure, and at times very sweet, but always smooth and powerful. Four of the seven cuts on this double LP are stone-cold blues, performed in a manner faithful to a blues tradition that is misused all too often. The remaining are original tunes which are interwoven with the same intricacy and subtlety into an extremely coherent whole. The shorter tracks are as tight as you can imagine, while the long performances build on delicate improvisation to absolutely breathtaking climaxes. Throughout them all, the band functions like a well-oiled

"THE HIRED HAND"

Cast: Peter Fonda, Warren Oates, Vera Bloom, Robert Pratt, Never Darden, Produced by William Hayward/Directed by Peter Fonda/Written by Alan Sharp/Director of Photography Vilmos Zsigmond/A Universal Picture. Rated GP-93 minutes.

This film is the latest cinematic effort by Peter Fonda and establishes what I suspected all along: he is a better director than he is an actor. He was terrible in "Easy Rider," spending most of his time standing around looking like part of the set. His acting is much better in this picture, in fact it's good. His directing is even better, however, and he has produced an interesting film that is worthy of a couple of viewings.

The plot concerns Peter Fonda's decision to stop the trip he is making with two friends to California and the Pacific Ocean and instead, return to his wife.

Photography Contest

The Vermont Cynic announces the "Second Semi-Annual Photography Contest."

The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are sophomores, juniors, or seniors. Those people who do not support the contest by taking pictures.

The pictures will be divided into three categories: landscape, nature, and other. The category of other subject will include pictures not included in the categories of landscape or nature.

All photographs will be black and white and approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit on the number of photographs that each person may submit. The pictures submitted will be the property of the Vermont Cynic, which will have the right to publish them in the magazine.

The Vermont Cynic has the right to use the pictures in any way it sees fit. The pictures may have been taken at any time or place.

Pictures entered in the Second Semi-Annual Photography Contest could not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the Cynic.

Photographs will be judged on print quality, composition, and originality by a panel of judges.

The board of judges will consist of Ken Cynic, Photography Editor of the Cynic, Tim, of University Photo Service, and Bob Rogers, Assistant Photography Editor of the Cynic. The board will be responsible for entering the contest.

All photographs should be placed in the appropriate box in the Cynic office.

The photographer's name, address, and phone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.

Deadline for entries will be November 19.

One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the November 2 issue of the Cynic.

The winner in each category will receive a cash prize.

All entries should be referred directly to the Cynic office.

THE WHO: GREAT AGAIN

by Doug Collette

THE ALLMAN BROTHERS

BAND AT FILLMORE

EAST: After two critically, if not financially, well-received studio LP's and almost non-stop touring, the Allman Brothers

Band seems to be on the threshold of an enthusiastic mass popularity. Because it sometimes has adverse effects on the artist on the receiving end, I'm not sure such acceptance is something to wish for them. But I digress, because any talk of the Allmans must be of their music or of them as musicians. They have no pretensions otherwise.

Not since the Grateful Dead, have I heard a band play like this one: each of the six individuals has his own way to give direction to a music that flows along like a river: strong, sure and at times very sweet, but always smooth and powerful.

Four of the seven cuts on this double LP are stone-cold blues, performed in a manner faithful to the blues tradition. The remaining are original tunes which are interwoven with the same intricacy and subtlety into an amazingly coherent whole.

The shorter tracks are as tight as you can imagine, while the long performances build on delicate improvisation to absolutely breath-taking climaxes.

Throughout them all, the band functions like a well-oiled machine, with a deep feeling for the music as its fuel.

I had never heard anything by the Allman Brothers when I saw them last Winter

Weekend, but they won me over almost immediately. They didn't dance around on stage or play up to the crowd; they just stood there and played. In their case, it's more than enough, because hearing the Allman

Brothers Band is truly a rewarding experience.

WHO'S NEXT/The Who: Well,

the Who were in quite a predicament when it came time for a new album. "Tommy" had gathered them the wide-spread acclaim they deserved as the most offbeat, inventive rock 'n' roll band to survive not only the English Invasion of '64-'65, but the ravages of time as well.

Besides that, it cost the band, and Pete Townshend, in particular, as artists with something profound to say, a terse, "wooden" style that anyone. However, Townshend, clever one that he is, simply decided to create The Who Live

At Leeds, an album of such high-energy proportions that, if The Who on stage didn't happen to be as much fun to see as to hear, that record probably would have triggered the Apocalypse.

So Townshend fooled 'em

again, but they still persisted in their quest for a new sound.

What's the new sound?

It should have been obvious:

The Who's entire stage show was now on record in near document form and, since repeated performance for over two years had nearly elicited them incredibly anyway, the next step was...

Who's Next in which Peter

Townshend, Roger Daltrey,

John Entwistle and Keith Moon

prose themselves to be no collective flash-

in-the-proverbial pan. Daltrey shows Robert Plant that you can shriek and scream without cracking glass and still be able to sing. Moon is the complete madman drummer and one of the few who beats the skins like a good rock 'n' roll drummer should. Entwistle, besides playing an imaginative but always dependable bass and contributing the occasional song (in this case the nifty ditty

"My Wife"), provides the touch of quiet intensity the group needs to keep it on the ground.

And Pete Townshend? He may just be a full-fledged genius.

Besides being able to keep the Who's Next in the manic, on Who's Next he turns a few tricks that have defied the greatest minds of our time. First, he makes extensive use of a synthesizer, but not as a gimmick and not for pseudo-spacey sound effects.

Rather, the synthesizer serves as an instrument that, whether as background or in providing musical fills, is a valuable part of the arrangement. Second,

Townshend is equally proficient in composing songs which are either high-energy, rhythmic rock 'n' roll like "Bargain" or lovely and, melodic as in "Behind Blue Eyes" or (and this is the hard part), a non-incongruous juxtaposition of the two: "Song Is Over."

With such music Townshend couple lyrics which are never preachy, didactic or obscure, but always sharp, sensitive and clear. To top it all off, he hasn't sacrificed or even compromised

the inimitable Who style.

Every cut of Who's Next is supremely impressive, but

"Won't Get Fooled Again" is magnificent, a masterpiece of a track. With its hypnotic spinning organ, the razor-sharp, crashing chords that only Pete

Townshend can play, and a realistically perceptive

summary of the present state of the Revolution, it is the greatest song of this rock 'n' roll

In fact, Who's Next is the greatest rock 'n' roll album I've heard this year; it even leaves

Sticky Fingers in the dust. With it, The Who are firmly established as one of the bands and more than that, they're now my favorite rock 'n' roll band.

Support VPIRG

College students are probably the most vocal yet least effective political groups in the United States. Endowed with tremendous energy and idealism, students have often demonstrated deep concern over problems like environmental pollution, race and sex discrimination and corporate irresponsibility. However, traditional student political activities—demonstrations, sit-ins and picket lines—seldom reach solutions to these pressing problems. Furthermore, summer vacation, exams and holidays interrupt student efforts and compartmentalize activism into predictable time periods.

A group is now being organized statewide to help Vermont students overcome these difficulties. Known as Vermont's Public Interest Research Group, its goal is to form an organization in which students can employ a professional staff to implement changes and reforms effectively, legally and non-violently.

The VPIRG plan is to combine the energy, the campus base and three dollars per student per semester to build a powerful action organization. The unique feature of VPIRG is its student financed and student directed staff of professionals, people who will represent year-round the public concerns of both the students and the community.

All students are strongly encouraged to support VPIRG and to sign the petitions which will be circulating within the next month. Remember—VPIRG will probably provide the most operative means for us students to partake in the decision making processes that shape the quality of life.

Beaudoin's Answer To Sylvester

All major speakers (i.e., those judged by SA Speakers to have a widespread reputation or those whose speech would be of interest to a large segment of the campus) are well-advised to the campus and to the surrounding community. SA Speakers also makes an attempt to contact area colleges to inform them of the speakers presence on campus. At all times, a speech sponsored by the SA is opened to any and all who wish to be there. No attempt may be made by anyone to close the speech to a select few. As part of SA Speakers policy, all speakers are to answer questions from the floor for a reasonable amount of time. SA encourages this because asking questions is an aid to the student in determining the validity of the speaker's point of view.

There has "never" been a disturbance of any kind at an event sponsored by SASpeakers, even at events where speakers supposedly call for "violence and rioting." (Although the charges of such were either exaggerated out of context or misreported.)

Finding of Fact No. 20 states: "The Court finds Student Association fees have been used and expended for the purchase of revolutionary films." The Student Association has never purchased or rented any revolutionary films. Also the only revolutionary films known to have ever been or that are on campus are those used in Professor Noll's revolutionary film course.

The next question that would come to my mind arises about the University of Vermont's, a public institution, policy of concern are best expressed in two quotes from policy statements of the University of Vermont.

The first is from the philosophy on the protection of the functions of the University. (Written by Mr. Peter Giuliani and adopted by the Board of Trustees on May 16, 1969.)

"The University of Vermont is a place to learn and to teach. It is not a chamber—it does not live in a vacuum. It is both in the world and of the world. Its mission is to educate people for leadership in society.

The second is from the faculty handbook and addresses the topic of academic freedom.

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

We have just read some of the most welcome news to come along in a long time: the SA has been reconstituted. This is welcome news for all students who are tired of being forced to pay for a tax government dominated by self-serving hypocritical creeps. The SA has out its own throat and has only itself to blame for the mess that it is in. For years the organization has funded and sponsored any radical revolutionary with a cause to expose, without any attempt to present differing viewpoints from responsible individuals. Every year we are treated to the same dreary procession of Dabbs, Spence, Appleton, Chicago 7, etc. Gregory, Pandemon, Marxists, then, for good measure, are allowed a

John Birch society member to "balance" the speakers program.

The Cynic refuses to print news with which it does not agree, i.e., anything moderate or pro-government. Cynic editors have long used the paper for their own personal political causes and selfish purposes. The columns by disgraced freaks and crazies are amusing to a large percentage of students but this does not bother the Cynic staff. Or at least not until now.

Perhaps now student organizations will be set up the way they should be. If a group wants to belong to a specific organization, let them organize and pay their own dues and bills. If someone wants to go somewhere and sign a "peace" treaty, let him foot the bill. If a student newspaper is desired, let it pay for itself by advertising and sales, not with money that is received for free.

Now that you have been declared unconstitutional, SA, we hope that you will accept the following recommendation: pack your bags and report to Pine Street to be RECYCLED. Sincerely yours, Ad Hoc Committee to Reconstitute UVM Student Association Sheldon Judson, Chairman

Editor's Note: Upon checking with the student directory with the Waterman Operator, the Cynic found that "Sheldon Judson" is not listed as a student at the University of Vermont. The Cynic would appreciate the names of the other students on the "Ad Hoc Committee."

Centrex System

For example, if a call is made to second floor Simpson from Waltham, Mass. and there is only one student on the floor from Waltham, then the student from Waltham would be given the call. Furthermore, the number in Waltham from which the call was made is the home phone number of the Waltham student, then it is inevitable that the student will be responsible for payment of the bill.

In response to these debts, the University Housing Department sent representatives to each floor, offering three alternatives. First, if individual students acknowledged their participation, they alone paid the bill. Second, if no one admitted to participating in the call, the entire floor was asked to collectively pay. And third, if neither alternative resulted, the IRA was responsible for the payment.

In any event, the policy is that if the bill is not paid, then the phone is to be ultimately removed. There have been no instances in which a phone has been removed. The policy of removing phones went into effect with the initiation of Centrex in early 1971.

Fortunately, there have not been any similar difficulties this semester. Mr. Lovell sincerely extends his appreciation of the present student cooperation. In response to student requests for individual room phones, Mr. Lovell and the Dean of Students concur that the present financial situation of UVM prevents immediate installation.

Melvin A. Dyson, Vice President of Business and Financial Affairs, indicated that problems connected with floor phones will possibly become obsolete in the proposed living-learning center. Private phones in each room of the center may be instituted. This practice of having a telephone in each student's room has proved satisfactory in institutions such as the University of New Hampshire, Middlebury College, and the University of Vermont.

It is not likely that the system of private phones will be utilized on the UVM campus in the near future. All of the newer dorms are being built with conduits capable of being connected to individual phones. However, the older dorms are not at the present time fitted with the necessary wire to institute the procedure of placing phones in every room.

Mr. Lovell estimated an excess of $100,000 to install the conduits necessary for room telephones. He also stated that the New England Tel and Tel does not presently have the capacity in the cables running from the residence halls to Winocski, to carry any more than the floor lines. A twelve month notice is required for such a cable change.

However, both Dean Patiser and Mr. Lovell expect the University to eventually install individual room telephones. This, of course, is based on a long ranged expectation presently impeded by UVM's monetary difficulty.

An 'Unofficial American' To Speak On Nov. 1

On November 1, 1971 at 8:00 p.m. in North Lounge Billings, SASpeakers will present Russell Johnson who in September, 1970, returned from a four month fact-finding mission to Asia, Africa and Europe. The Asian visits included India, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, South Vietnam, Philippines, Singapore and Indonesia. Each of these countries he has visited a number of times since 1961, as an "unofficial American."

This was his eleventh visit to South Vietnam. In Laos he talked with refugees from large-scale American bombing, and in Cambodia witnessed the transformation of that hitherto "peaceful kingdom" into an arena of war. He experienced the growing militancy and anti-Americanism of students in the Philippines, where in the Manila slums and on Negros Island he observed the increasing gap between rich and poor. He noted also the new prominence of the military in Filipino life. In Indonesia he found that under President Suharto's New Order, the US presence is growing while basic social and economic injustices make likely a resurgence of the outlawed Communist party. Violence between Hindus and Moslems, massive unemployment, and conflict between landlords and the landless threaten in India, to which he returned after residence there in 1961-1965.

The African tour of the journey took him to western-oriented Kenya, to Zambia where president Kaunda extols humanism in the face of growing conflict with his southern neighbors, and to Tanzania for a month of travel and interviews, assessing the attempt by President Nyerere to build socialism and self-reliance along a non-aligned, non-violent path. Ten days in Yugoslavia were spent examining the unique synthesis of socialism and western business practice being attempted there.

In October, 1969, Russell Johnson made a four-week visit to Cuba, traveling through the six provinces to observe the effects of the Revolution on education, agriculture, housing, industry, and medical and other welfare services. He discussed political, economic and social problems with key individuals in "factories, schools, farms, government organizations, the Communist Party and the churches."

Russell Johnson, in mid-January, 1968, returned from a six-week visit to Southeast Asia: Cambodia, Thailand and South Vietnam. In Phnom Penh he visited the Cambodian Prime Minister, the Chairman of the International Control Commission, the Ambassador of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and the Representative of the N.L.F., among others. In Thailand he talked with a wide range of persons including editors, university teachers, etc. about the widening crisis there. In South Vietnam he visited Hue, Quang Ngai and Saigon, where he remained during the first ten days of the NLF "Tet" offensive.

From September 5 to 12, 1967, Russell Johnson participated in a series of discussions with Vietnamese from North Vietnam and the N.L.F. of South Vietnam in Bratislava, Czechoslovakia. Mme. Nguyen Thi Binh, now

Citizen Service Corps Helps Finance Adult Education

PHILADELPHIA: The new citizen service corps ACTION will provide Philadelphia-based Opportunities Industrialization Center, Inc. with $300,000 in financing to establish center city adult education programs in Boston, Washington and Dallas and to expand programs in Philadelphia.

Announcement of the grant was made here today at a joint news conference by Joe Blatchford, director of ACTION, and the Rev. Leon Sullivan, founder and board chairman of OIC.

The ACTION grant will be used to recruit and provide subsistence allowances for volunteers selected to instruct, counsel and enroll adult students from inner city neighborhoods.

The funding will permit expansion on a pilot basis of OIC's Adult Armchair Education program. "Armchair" derives its name from the technique of utilizing inner city private homes as classrooms for training adults who reside in the neighborhood.

Fifty "Armchair" volunteers, 15 each in Boston, Washington, and Dallas and five additional volunteers in Philadelphia, will be recruited by OIC.

"At ACTION we have watched, and been impressed by, the 'Armchair' program in Philadelphia. We now want to assist OIC in expanding the program and evaluating the results to determine if this approach to adult education can be utilized on an even wider scale, either through ACTION or through other programs directed toward community development through adult education," Blatchford said.

OIC, a non-profit

Philadelphia-based organization with a record of success in the field of job training, will provide nearly $50,000 in funds and in-kind contributions to supplement the $300,000 ACTION grant.

"Armchair" was created to involve inner city residents in adult training and employment opportunities. Basic instruction and counseling are provided to demonstrate to residents how to use the system to their advantage. The confidence and new direction given the students is utilized by referring them to other educational and training opportunities that can be a springboard for further individual and community development.

Approximately one-third of the grant will go toward the recruitment and training of the volunteers, with the remaining funds to go toward their support for a one year tour of service.

OIC will begin recruitment immediately, through its office in each of the respective cities, the emphasis being to attract, as volunteers, residents of the communities to be served.

"Armchair" staff will train these persons in Philadelphia over a three month period, before returning them to their communities where, under the supervision of OIC, they will recruit, counsel, and teach adult students.

Court Upholds Ban On Homosexual Marriages

St. Paul, Minn. (CPS)—Same-sex marriages are forbidden by Minnesota law and such a prohibition is not unconstitutional, the Minnesota Supreme Court ruled unanimously last Friday.

The court upheld the Hennepin County clerk in refusing to grant a marriage license to University of Minnesota student body president Jack Baker and James McConnell.

Baker and McConnell contend that since the law does not expressly prohibit same-sex marriages, the Legislature must have meant to authorize them. They say that, if not, any restrictions made because sex was a violation of the fourteenth amendment right of equal protection of the law.

The court, in an opinion written by Justice C. Donald Peterson, could find no support in any supreme court decisions that their rights were violated.

Peterson described marriage as "a union of man and woman uniquely involving the procreation and rearing of children within a family."

Baker and McConnell are planning an appeal.

The two recently participated in a program at the University of Nebraska that was challenged by the Board of Regents and a court case that arose out of their scheduled appearance.

Ithaca Students Hold Dope Raffle For Furniture

Ithaca, N.Y. (CPS)—Sometime during this summer, an article of furniture was stolen from one of the Ithaca College dorms. The college refused to appropriate funds for the replacement of the much used article so the dorm decided to raise funds and buy a new one for themselves.

One of the best ways to raise money on a college campus is by selling things or by holding a lottery. Besides selling food, this dorm decided to raffle off dope as well. Raffle tickets were sold for fifty cents a piece and the drawing itself was held in the dorm. The prize was a brand new mattress. All proceeds (minus whatever the health was purchased for) went towards the purchase of their piece of furniture.

The profit the form made was not disclosed nor the name of the winner of the lottery.

First Waterbed Fatality Reported In Arizona

by Tom Miller Tucson, Ariz. (CPS)—Malcolm Coon, a University of Arizona grad student in economics, is apparently the first fatality of the waterbed fad sweeping non-scientific hippies this year.

Coon had been watching a late-night talk show on his tiny Sony television, which had frayed electrical connecting wires. The set fell into a puddle—the result of his cat darning at the waterbed—and he was electrocuted. The electrically charged water seeped up and surrounded his body before he could reach safety. Malcom would have been 23 today following the accident.

Ironically, Malcom had just completed writing a paper for his "Economics and Culture" class on the waterbed price war. The paper, entitled "Price and Quality Factors Affecting Cost of Liquidated Mattresses: A Ten City Sample," had been sold to Lyle Stuart Publishers of New York. They had planned to release it this winter under the title The Sensuous Waterbed. The publishing house has made no comment on its plans now that the author had died.

Coon's economics professor, Cynthia Kessler, said the price war on waterbeds, which began in Los Angeles and spread to virtually every metropolitan area in the country, is really no different than practice used daily by large aerospace and steel concerns. In fact, the Coors, paper documents a curious parallel between hip-capitalists selling waterbeds and stockbrokers trading defense industry shares. The appendix to the paper, said Cynthia, is a description of the waterbed's effect on the user's psyche, sex, and thought patterns. Evidently it is this part which will comprise the bulk of the Lyle Stuart book.

Coon (no relation to the brewery family of Golden, Colo.) had purchased his waterbed for $24.95 at Hydro-Flex Unlimited in Tucson about four months ago. Since then the price has dropped five dollars. The manager of Hydro-Flex, Phil Scott, disclaims responsibility for the accident saying, "I told him when he bought it to put a pad over it for just that very reason. Anyway, we have a five-year guarantee on all our beds. What's that a burner thought I mean, Zap, he's gone you know?"

Scott said he'd give a new waterbed without charge to Coon's girlfriend Aaron, with whom Malcom was living at the time. Aaron escaped injury—she was up getting a roach-clip when the accident occurred.

Informers

An undercover agent for the Los Angeles Police Department has leaked word to the underground press about a bomb plot that would terrorize the 1972 Republican National Convention that the President would declare a National Emergency, rounding up radicals across the country.

POLICE AS INSTIGATORS

The agent, Louis Tackwood, said the plot calls for police squads to trigger explosives inside the San Diego Sports Arena during the convention. The full plot calls for the planting of provocateurs in crowds outside the convention to fan the hysteria. Alternative Features Service, a national alternative press media collective, learned details from San Diego underground Douglas Porter. Tackwood named Daniel Mahony, of the Criminal Conspiracy Section of the Los Angeles Police Department, and Ed Birch, of the FBI, as directors of the squad of provocateurs. First details of the plot were published in the San Diego underground newspaper, THE O.B. PEOPLE'S RAG.

After revealing the plot to Los Angeles activists Marilyn Rosenbaum, Robert Dugan, F.B.I. began a series of about two weeks. Reportedly influenced by Daniel Ellsberg's Pentagon Papers leaks, Tackwood decided to publicize his experiences as an informer and provocateur.

He supplied tapes and statements of his past activities to Katz and Dugan during a series of secret meetings over a period of several weeks and agreed to a scheme to trick his superiors into believing he was really spying on Katz and Dugan; this provided a several justification for their meetings. Corps Helps Adult Education

Philadelphia-based organization with a record of success in the field of job training, will provide nearly $50,000 in funds and in-kind contributions to supplement the $300,000 ACTION grant.

"Armed" was created to involve inner city residents in adult training and employment opportunities. Basic instruction and counseling are provided to demonstrate to residents how to use the system to their advantage. The confidence and new direction given the students is utilized by referring them to other educational and training opportunities that can be a springboard for further individual and community development.

Approximately one-third of the grant will go toward the recruitment and training of the volunteers, with the remaining funds to go toward their support for a one year tour of service.

OIC will begin recruitment immediately, through its office in each of the respective cities, the emphasis being to attract, as volunteers, residents of the communities to be served.

(Armed) staff will train these persons in Philadelphia over a three month period, before returning them to their communities where, under the supervision of OIC, they will recruit, counsel, and teach adult students.

The manager of Hydro-Fix, Phil Scott, the decision saying, "I told him when he bought it to put a pad over it for just that very reason. Anyway, we have a forever guarantee on all our beds. What's that a bumper thought? I mean, Zap, he's gone you know?"

Scott said he'd give a new waterbed without charge to Corn's girlfriend Aurora, with whom Macdon was living at the time. Aurora escaped injury, she was up getting a machete when the accident occurred.

Informer Unmasks Political Bomb Plot

An undercover agent for the Los Angeles Police Department has leaked word in the underground press about a bomb plot that would terrorize the 1972 Republican National Convention, that the President would declare a National Emergency rounding up radicals across the country.

POLICE AS INVESTIGATORS

The agent, Louis Tackwood, said the plot calls for police squads to trigger explosives inside the San Diego Sports Arena during the convention. The full plot calls for the planting of provocateurs in crowds outside the convention to fan the hysteria. Alternative Features Service, a national alternative press media collective, learned details from San Diego underground Douglas Porter. Tackwood named Daniel Mahony, of the Criminal Conspiracy Section of the Los Angeles Police Department, and Ed Birch, of the FBI, as directors of the squad of provocateurs. First details of the plot were published in the San Diego underground newspaper, THE O.B. PEOPLE'S RAG.

After revealing the plot to Los Angeles activists Marilyn Katz and Robert Duggan, Tackwood disappeared for a period of about two weeks. Reportedly influenced by Daniel Ellsberg's Pentagon Papers leaks, Tackwood decided to publicize his experiences as an informer and provocateur.

He supplied tapes and statements of his past activities to Katz and Duggan during a period of several weeks and he agreed to a scheme to trick his captives into believing he was really spying on Katz and Duggan; this provided a justification for their meetings.

Just before his disappearance, Tackwood had agreed to get Katz and Duggan a copy of the official plan for what he referred to as "the San Diego Project." Later, he called Katz and Duggan to tell them he had succeeded in getting it and was coming over. For the next two weeks, he could not be located. According to Porter, the O.B. PEOPLE'S RAG staffer, Tackwood was being held by police and was shuttled from jail to jail.

TACKWOOD - INFORMER

THE NEW YORK TIMES, which Porter said plans to release an account of the plan next week, reportedly has already confirmed several facts pertaining to Tackwood. His police record contains several entries for which the penalties meted appear inordinately light. Notations accompanying the record describe Tackwood as a valuable informer; his probation file terms him "schizophrenic" and notes that "this makes him perfect for infiltration as an informer."

Tackwood has worked for the L.A.P.D. Criminal Conspiracy Section, the L.A.P.D. Special Identification and Investigation Unit, and the F.B.I. since 1962. His career began in that year when he was arrested for the transportation of stolen cars from California to Mexico. He was offered immunity in exchange for becoming an undercover agent.

In August of 1965 at the request of the L.A.P.D., he claims he was asked to call the police and inform them that arms were being stored in the L.A. Muslim Mosque. This call justified a raid on the mosque which included the firing of several rounds into the building. No weapons were found in the mosque.

In 1968, he worked with the U.S. Organization, a black nationalist group based in Los Angeles. Tackwood asserted that the group was paid by the Criminal Conspiracy Section of the L.A.P.D. to stop the spread of "blackism" by any means necessary. The Criminal Conspiracy Section supplied US with weapons.

BLACK PANTHERS

Tackwood reportedly was assigned to surveillance of the Black Panther Party in Los Angeles. While there, he was engaged in encouraging the use and supply of weapons and explosives.

While infiltrating the Black Panther Party, Tackwood met Melvin Smith, better known as "Cotton." Cotton is the chief witness in the L.A. Panther trial.

According to Tackwood, Cotton has been an L.A. police informer since 1967. Cotton's link with the L.A.P.D. is allegedly through Sgt. R.G. Farwell. Cotton was supposed to have had the specific assignment of planning the December 8, 1969 raid on the Black Panther Party's Los Angeles Headquarters.

In 1970 and 1971, he was assigned to the Angela Davis and Soledad Brother's Defense Committee. While there, he is said to have planted electronic listening devices, stolen files, and co-operated in the suppression of evidence which would acquit Angela.

LATE DEVELOPMENT

Spokesmen for Tackwood said tonight (Thursday October 15) that he had been arrested by investigators from the District Attorney's office.

Palm Reader Specializes In Lost Objects And Missing Persons

by Andrew Gilbert

Kyrie, mediums and all members of the occult are being sought out more and more frequently. In today's modern world, one of the more popular aspects of the occult is palm reading. In Marshfield, Vermont there is a palm reader who specializes in missing articles and is widely known throughout the state.

Last Thursday myself and a friend drove to Marshfield to have our palm's read. This was to be the first time my friend had ever had her palms read. Although I had had my palms read by the same lady a year previously, I was curious to see if she remembered me and if not whether her reading would be the same.

NO OCCULT MYSTIQUE

When one first arrives they may be expecting to find crystal balls and velvet curtains and all sorts of occultic symbols and charms. These people will be disappointed. One is greeted at the door of a simple Vermont farmhouse by an almost overwhelmingly friendly couple. The woman is in her fifties with silver hair and rosy cheeks. She seems to be very healthy and is very outgoing.

She has lived in Vermont all her life. While living in the East Montpelier-Plainfield area in her early teens she became interested in clairvoyancy. This stemmed from hearing stories of a rather legendary woman who had lived nearby and went into trances and had revelations many of which occurred. She then began looking at hands and reading everything about palmistry which she could find. At the same time she discovered she was very good at locating lost objects and missing persons. At first she did it mainly as a game but by the time she was seventeen she and many others were taking her abilities and talents quite seriously.

Her reading consists of a 20 minute reading part of which is devoted to an in depth explanation of your character, with agrees it is amazingly accurate. The rest is devoted to telling your future. This is very specific but seems to generally cover the same area such as a description of who you will marry, how many children you will have and where you will live most of your life, etc. The remainder of the reading consists of her answering six questions which you must have written on a piece of paper before arriving.

Once in the house she took both of us separately. We both agreed that our character readings were excellent. It is impossible to disprove something in the future so my friend was impressed with her reading. But there were some conflicts with the specifics on my reading as compared with last years. It is true that one thing could be happening and another at the same time which I had not been told about before. Yet there is a definite clash between having two children and having three of living in Vermont and living in Oregon. Despite these inaccuracies many of the things she said to me the first time have come true during the past year and I remain quite impressed.

We were both rather disappointed in the answers to our questions. They were answered in a very general manner and the answers were not very meaningful. My friend also felt extremely that there was not a prayer of a chance of some of the answers ever happening the way they were described to her. Also she asked about a missing watch and the clairvoyant not only described it wrong but did not even come remotely close to the place in which it was found. This may have been only a fluke or possibly there are many other unknown inaccuracies. Every other report I have heard has been very positive as to her finding missing items. People have "bailed from as far away as North Carolina and California for her assistance in these matters."

If you ever have some time and $4. to spend I would encourage you to take use of this interesting and unique experience.

Two POW's Tell The Story

HANOI (CPS) — FROM: John A. Young S/Sgt., Special Forces, United States Army.

I have served in Vietnam and in doing so I was wounded, like so many other Americans that have served in Vietnam. I was wounded three and one half years ago and am still in Vietnam today. Yet, Mr. President, I have been captured by the Liberation Armed Forces of Vietnam. Mr. President, I like so many Americans have fought for your policies and your predecessor's policies. Policies that I and they never really understood. Well, Mr. President, for a long time now, I have had my own ideas of why the administration is involved in Indochina. And those ideas are: The U.S. government is trying to dominate the world; the U.S. is trying to obtain its goals by stepping on any country and by killing anyone who gets in its way.

This is American democracy according to the administration and the monopolies that prop it up. This is something that I do not support. I no longer want to fight for you or anyone like you. In fact, I won't ever again fight for your kind of American democracy. I will, and I mean, I will fight for my own American people and country, not you, Mr. President, because you don't represent the real America.

If you wholeheartedly believe in your own policy, come to Vietnam, Mr. President, and take my place. I'm not going to support you or your policies, Mr. President, according to the Constitution, I have the right to speak out against you and your policies if you and they are leading our country astray. And for sure, you and your policies have led our country astray. The Vietnam war is just one proof of what I have just stated.

Mr. President, I am setting on what I have seen, and what my conscience has told me to do. I can no longer support the killing of innocent Vietnamese men, women, and children, or the destruction of their beautiful country. My conscience tells me it is wrong to kill. The Bible tells me it is wrong; the laws of the United States say it is wrong. I have killed innocent people and I have helped to destroy the country that they love so much. I am ashamed Mr. President, so ashamed that I can no longer call myself an American. I have shed my blood for your completely wrong policies. Mr. President, I would like to talk to you personally, but because of you and your Administration's policies of repression and persecution, I would never get the chance to exercise my civil rights that are guaranteed to me under the Constitution of the United States. It's a fact you or one of your followers would have locked me up because I am doing the right thing according to the Constitution and my conscience.

Do you think it's right for me to fear my own government? Do you think it's wrong to try and end an unjust war? Especially when it goes against the American people's will? When it only benefits a few rich people. You know what I am talking about now. Your war is only benefiting a few people in the U.S., like so many other captured servicemen, have taken it unto myself unilaterally to help bring an end to this war. Because of the pressure and influence that you have exerted on your followers, I would be tried under the unconstitutional military laws.

However, we love our country and people and I think we love them more than you do. That is why I have chosen to fight on until our country is set straight again.

Editor's Note: These are two open letters from soldiers captured in Vietnam. Both men are now desperately trying to bring their stories to the attention of the public and the people responsible for their personal tragedies.

HANOI (CPS) — FROM: Harold "Stubbs", M.D., Captain, Medical Corps, United States Army Reserve, 02320775.

I am an American POW.

I came to Vietnam as a 26 year old army flight surgeon. I was happily married to a lovely wife with a wonderful family and the world was mine. Now I am a 30 year old POW.

Of course my opinions about this war are prejudiced by the fact that I want to go home; to return to my loved ones and the practice of a gratifying profession. This, despite my unenviable position, I deeply believe that this tragic war is the most detrimental event in our history since our civil war.

For the first 5 months of my capture, I refused to make any public statement against the war despite numerous "interviews" with and without NEI cadre. I felt that it was not in the interest of my country to do so. Now I ask for the opportunity to make statements and write letters. I have been brainwashed. Not by any physical torture, or abuse, or psychological methods, but by a confrontation with actual evidence, and most of it originated in the USA. I have been brainwashed by the 1954 Geneva Accords, by LIFE magazine, by NEWSWEEK, by American documentary films of demonstrations, of the Winter Soldiers Investigations, by statements from senior statesmen like Fulbright, Mansfield, Harriman, Clifford, and so forth. The recent disclosure of the secret Pentagon report by a conscience-stricken defense analyst was the last of a long series of laundry agents.

It is incumbent upon you our citizenry to take firm and positive action by every means to pressure the administration into an admission of the dismal failure of its policy, and a total withdrawal from Vietnam. Then we may begin the task of rebuilding our image, our honor and our ideals. In the years to come, Vietnam will be remembered as the place where America paid a high price to learn that it could not do anything it wished. It will be remembered as a tremendous waste of our money and blood. If the tragedy of Vietnam is to have any redeemable feature, it will be that here finally, the will of an enlightened American citizenry, forced power to yield and conscience and reason to finally prevail.

Ice Cats Organize and Start Practice

With less than a month to prepare for the season opening at the St. Lawrence Thanksgiving Tournament, Nov. 25-27, the University of Vermont hockey team opens its practice sessions Monday (Oct. 25) with over 40 candidates trying for a varsity berth.

Heading the veteran list is All-American defenseman Ted Yeates, this year's captain. Eleven other lettermen will join Yeates in an attempt to regain the ECAC Division II championship which they lost to Bowdoin last year. Vermont won the title in 1970 with a decisive 4-1 win over Bowdoin.

For the first time ever, the ECAC has granted permission for all schools to use freshmen in varsity programs and, because of this, Vermont will not have a freshman program. Head Coach Jim Cron expected close to 15 to join upperclassmen for the in 1969-70. Vermont began its pre-season scrimmages Nov. 6, with the last Green-White game, featuring the varsity against the freshmen. The series, dating back to 1967, is scheduled at two games each. This year's "rubber" game will terminate the rivalry since freshmen are now eligible for varsity competition.

The Nov. 6 clash, the hockey team will host an amateur hockey team from Montreal, Nov. 13, a game sponsored by the University's Centennial Club.

In addition to Vermont and St. Lawrence, Clarkson and Colgate have entered the Thanksgiving Tournament at Canton, N.Y. (Nov. 25-27). Vermont will play all three schools in the round-robin tournament.

A lot of action around the Vermont net as Dave Reese, last year's Vermont superstar, puts up a fine defense.

last season, Monday (Oct. 25).

Assisting Cron is last year's freshman coach, George Kreiner, an All-American defenseman for the Catamounts.

UVM Kickers Close In On Yankee Conference Crown

The Soccer picture in the Yankee Conference appears to be once again coming down to the wire as the Catamounts and the Redmen square off against each other. This rivalry, which has existed for the past three years, has seen the Catamounts pulling it out of the fire two years ago, by losing it last year as the Redmen took the crown.

So far this season, the kicking Catamounts have suffered one loss to Yankee Conference competition, while the University of Massachusetts has managed to go unbeaten for that decision. A loss next Saturday by the Catamounts would end the dream abruptly, but a win would bring the crown down to a play-off contest, and allow the Vermont club the revenge for last year's defeat.

The Cats have shown the third score, and Ed Cymery themselves to be in-line shape, and appear to be getting tuned up for the "big one" as they easily rolled over the University of Maine last Saturday by a score of 4-0.

Chuck Davis, who had been scoreless this far into the season, brought home the first score for the Catamounts early in the first period, as he took a beautiful pass from Vince Mameau and put it quickly past the confused Maine goalie. Dick Taylor set up another fine pass to Peter Breen in the second period as the Cats were ahead by two at the half-way mark.

The third period proved scoreless despite the strong attack put on by the Catamounts but the fourth allowed the Vermont club the points. Taylor himself took it in took a Breen pass to end the scoring of the day.

The Soccer men met the Cadets of Norwich on Wednesday afternoon at Archie Post field, but the results of the contest were unavailable at press time.

The Sports information office at the University of Massachusetts has announced the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players of the week for last week in the Yankee Conference. Even though the University of Vermont did not receive any of these three top positions, they were honored with three nominations.

These nominees were Steve Coon, Halfback, Bob Rodger, Halfback, and Doug Bull, Linebacker.

Drop Fifth Straight To Hofstra Gridders Lose By Slim Margin

If any coach or football player were to be asked to describe the most frustrating moment in football, the answer would undoubtedly be the unsuccessful attempt to bring the ball into the scoring zone when you are only a few inches or a few feet from paydirt.

The Catamounts seem to be having more than their share of frustrations as for the second time of the season, they marched to within feet of the goal stripe, but were halted by a very strong and effective goal line stand. The failure of this final push caused the Cats to suffer their fifth loss of an already discouraging season. Vermont fell victim to the Flying Dutchman of Hofstra by only a three point margin, the final score being 13-10.

Vermont drew first blood for the contest, but the lead was changed several times before the final buzzer. The Catamounts took the opening kickoff and marched over 40 yards to bring it down to the opposition's 25. Paul Jakubielak sent it flying through the uprights to bring the score to 3-0.

A stalled Hofstra left the Catamounts in excellent field position, and a pass interference call brought the ball down to within two yards of the scoring zone. Yet, three attempts failed to chalk up six more points for the Catamounts, and all hopes were abruptly shattered as the ball was bobbled on fourth down situation.

Hofstra then really got things together as they marched all the way to the opposite end of the field to take the lead way from the Cats, and so the picture stayed all the way into the third quarter until the Vermonters once again broke through for another score, this time as Gary VanDecar dove over the line from one yard out. The score came as a result of a 65 yard drive in 17 plays with Earl Olson taking charge of the signal calling role.

However, the picture was to stay that way for long, as the Hofstra club came off the blow they suffered and drove 58 yards for the final score of the evening, and the fatal blow the Catamount hopes.

Senior spenster Bob Roger did not see much action at all, his contribution being limited to the final period, since he apparently is being bothered by a sore leg. However, the backfield duties were well taken care of by Steve Coon and Gary VanDecar. VanDecar had, by far, his best performance of the season, and led the best offensive showing of the Catamounts since the Connecticut contest carried the ball the amazing total of 32 times, and contributed over 120 yards to the ground game as a result.

Also, two freshmen, Larry Onley and Stu Jones saw a great deal of action in the defensive backfield, an really earned their stripes by putting in a fine performance. Earl Olson and Yurica doubled in the quarterback slot all day. The first half showed no completions to the Catamounts credit, but in the second half Olson completed 5 aerials out of 9.

The game unfortunately proved costly for the Catamounts as several valuable men were placed on the casualty list. Peter Trono went limping off the field with strained knee ligaments, while Rich Rostowski suffered a severely damaged wrist and may have to sit it out for the rest of the season.

The defensive club—for Vermont seems to be slowly regaining their momentum. Wayne Bulman came back strong after sitting out the last two games with a wrist injury, and Fran Prondicki and Doug Bull gave their finest showing to date. Kevin Lynch seems to be having a great deal more success with the blitz as he hounded the Hofstra quarterback all evening.

The Catamounts play the Redmen from Massachusetts next week as they journey to Amherst. The Redmen have not been beaten by the Catamounts since long ago in 1957, but by all indications, it appears that Vermont has their best chance in years to vindicate some of those losses.

Rugby Club Prep For Final Home Contest

The UVM Rugby Club scored its second shutout of the season last Saturday by soundly thrashing Albany Law by a score of 15-0.

The victory ends the rugger record at two wins and two losses. The defeats were suffered at the hands of Springfield and Dartmouth, both by slim margins and the victories came at the expense of Concord, New Hampshire.

UVM fullback Bill Davis nearly had a perfect day, converting three out of four penalty kicks, and two points after a try run in by Gerry Glassey from ten yards out late in the game.

The Vermont forwards

turned in another crunching effort, mixing up with Albany at every opportunity. Among the scrum standouts were Jack Kenney, Tony Feicher, and Mark O'Connor.

This Saturday, the Rugby Club has its last home contest against Westmont, a Canadian club, with a "B" game to follow. Game time is not established as yet, but will probably be around 1:30 P.M. or 4:00 P.M. If you have never seen a Rugby match, here is your last opportunity this fall to watch the very sharp UVM team play, an unusual rough and tumble game.

Matches are all played at Archie Post Field behind the field house.

Presenting

Pierre Salinger

Former Press Secretary to 2 Presidents and U.S. Senator

Pierre Salinger was Press Secretary to Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson, and served as a member of the United States Senate when he was appointed in 1964 by Gov. Edmund G. Brown to serve out the term of the late Senator Clair Engle of California.

Salinger was born June 14, 1925 in San Francisco. He was graduated from the public schools of that city and took his Bachelor of Science degree in history from the University of San Francisco. He left a position as copy boy at The San Francisco Chronicle to enlist in the Navy in World War II. He became commanding officer of a subchaser (SC 1368) and won the Navy and Marine Corps Medal for heroic action.

In 1959, Salinger became Press Secretary to then Senator John F. Kennedy. Salinger was in charge of press operations for Kennedy through the long and vigorous campaign and became the presidential Press Secretary in 1961. In this office, Salinger was present at conferences between President Kennedy and other world leaders, including the historic meeting with Khrushchev in Vienna in 1961.

Following the close of his Senate term, Mr. Salinger became Vice-President of the National General Corporation. He resigned that position to become Vice-President of the Continental Airlines, Inc. Continental Air Service, Inc. In spite of his busy schedule, he found time to write the recent best-seller, "With Kennedy."

Experience Marks Vermont Courtmen

Led by captain-elect, Ray Ortiz, the University of Vermont basketball team opens its practice sessions Friday (October 15), as they begin preparations for the season opener against Middlebury, December 1.

Head coach Art Locke begins his seventh year at Vermont.

With only two lettermen gone from last year's 9-15 club and a bundle of promising sophomores, Locke believes he has one of his strongest clubs since coming from New York University in 1965.

Returning regulars include: Earl Olson, a 5'10" guard who averaged 14.7 points a game; junior guard Jim Duery, the team's playmaker who became one of the steadiest players on the squad at the end of the year; center Mark Miller, a 6'6" leaper who was the club's leading rebounder (9.5 per game); John Delbert, a 6'9" forward who is returning from a knee injury that kept him out of action for most of the campaign and Greg Ashford, a 6'3" guard-forward who performed well in reserve.

include: Neil Hermann, a top playmaker; Mike Brown, Larry Beck and George Peadar.

Sophomores expected to see considerable action include: Fred Zimmermann, a 6'3" guard-forward who averaged over 20 points a game for the 7-4 frosh last year; 6'3" Tyrone Minor, the leading rebounder (over 15 per game) for the '70-'71 frosh; Dave Kaskulinen, a hustling guard who averaged 15.8 points a game and Burlingtonian Bob Stafford, a 6'2" forward.

Also expected to aid Locke's cause this year are junior college transfer, Nate Reeves, a 6'3" forward, and Bruce Fields, a top scorer on the 1969-70 froshman squad, who has returned to school. Fields is a 6'3" forward. Following the opening game with Middlebury (December 1), the Catamounts' quietest move to Massachusetts, December 4, rebounder (9.5 per game); John Delbert, a 6'9" forward who is returning from a knee injury that kept him out of action for most of the campaign and Greg Ashford, a 6'3" guard-forward who performed well in reserve.

GOLFER MAKES ECAC'S

Scott Griffin will be the one representative of the University of Vermont golf team at the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) Championships at Cooperstown, N.Y., this Saturday (October 16).

Griffin qualified last Friday at the ECAC Qualifying Round at his University's home course, the Burlington (Vt.) Country Club. He fired a 74 to join nine others from this one qualifying site. Three other sites were set up last Friday, making it a total of 40 collegians who will be vying for the ECAC individual crown.

In addition to the individual title, a team champion will be crowned. Eight teams, including New England's representative, Central Connecticut, will go after the team championship.

Vermont's Director of Athletics, J. Edward Donnelly, director of the qualifying round in Burlington, is one of the coordinators of the ECAC Golf Championships at Cooperstown. Griffin is a native of Bennington, Vermont and is now living in Yorktown Heights, N.Y. He is a junior at the University.

UVM Budget Crisis Discussed ; No Definite Solutions In Sight

by Jill Stevens

Along with innumerable colleges across the nation, the University of Vermont this year bears a weighty financial burden. When final enrollment figures were received for the fall semester, it was discovered that upwards of 800 students would not be returning to school, a drastic drop which has contributed in large part to a $1.5 million budget deficit for the 1972 fiscal year. Administrators and economic advisors are faced now with the problem of producing funds to cancel the gargantuan debt.

Projections made last year by the institutional studies committee indicated an undergraduate enrollment for the fall which failed to materialize. Earlier this semester, President Andrews attributed the drop to several factors—the tuition hike, unwillingness to take out loans, easing of the Vietnam situation, and a growing trend among college students to "drop out" of school and drop back in after a break of a year or so. Such a "national phenomenon" is not peculiar to UVM, which is now experiencing first-hand the resulting monetary pinch. In addition, Governor Davis has reasoned that with fewer students, expenses should be lower and thus has been cautious in appropriating sufficient funds from Montpelier. However, since the resident/non-resident ratio has been weighted in favor of the former, such reasoning has proved invalid.

Seeking the method for solving the dilemma, the CYNIC spoke with Vice President of Financial Affairs Melvin Dyson and Budget Officer Norman A. Blair. Dyson noted that beginning in the spring semester, admissions policy toward transfer students will be eased. The Office of Admissions presently is recruiting non-resident upperclassmen transfers, a move which will contribute approximately $150,000 toward dissolving the debt.

Mr. Blair stated that the debt is not yet completely covered but pointed out several general sources of income. The greatest of these sources is a general reserve fund which has available about $500,000. Economy moves and other means of raising revenue are being looked into, Blair said, although he was not able to pinpoint what areas are being considered. Various committees and agents are researching the successful revenue-raising methods of other schools in hope of discovering some suitable for UVM. A main priority is avoidance of tuition and fee hikes.

Another question arose concerning the whereabouts of the monies appropriated for faculty and staff salary raises before President Nixon's wage-price freeze. Blair replied that the funds are still in a separate account. Authorities are awaiting possible lifting or continuation of the freeze before definite plans are made whether to disburse it for its original purpose or to reassign it to some other category. Presently, there are no plans to use the appropriation in easing

Telford Taylor To Speak Nov. 11

Telford Taylor, soldier, lawyer, government official and Columbia University professor, began his distinguished legal career as a law clerk in the U.S. Circuit Court in New York in 1932.

The next year he became an assistant solicitor in the U.S. Department of the Interior and rose through various government posts to become general counsel to the Federal Communications Commission in 1940.

After the outbreak of World War II, Professor Taylor became a military intelligence officer in the European Theater. In 1945 Professor Taylor, then a colonel, was named associate counsel of the U.S. staff at the Nuremberg war crimes trials in Germany.

He was promoted to Brigadier General in 1946 and was named to succeed Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson as chief of counsel for war crimes.

Professor Taylor remained with the Office of United States Military Government from 1946 to 1949. He was the administrator of the Small Defense Plants Administration in 1951-52.

In New York City, he has served since 1960 on the Major's Advisory Board on Public Welfare. He was the board's first chairman from 1960 to 1963.

He has been a professor of Law at Columbia University since 1962. In 1969 he was an Overseas Fellow of Churchill College, Cambridge University, Cambridge, England.

Professor Taylor has written many articles on political, legal and military subjects. His books include "Sword and Swastika," "Grand Inquest," "The March of Conquest," "The Breaking Wave," "Two Studies in Constitutional Interpretation," and most recently, "Nuremberg and Vietnam: An American Tragedy."

The Morgan Horse :

Vermont's Pride

by Kirby Kirkpatrick

Grace and prideful bound steps carry his strong short body with long fore arms. Large, intelligent eyes complement his distinctive arch-shaped neck draped with a thick mane. The well dispositioned Morgan horse, one of its kind in style and beauty, is the first breed of horse developed in America. One hundred eighty years in Vermont, the first Morgan horse began its line of contributions to the development of most other American breeds, such as the American Saddle Horse, the Standard breed and the Quarter Horse. The state horse has the home of UVM Morgan Horse and Weybridge Research Center in Weybridge, Vermont; nearly 1000 acres of lush meadows, pastureland and woods. Originally the United States Government owned the farm but turned it over to the University of Vermont in 1951 for further breeding and research by the Department of Animal Sciences. Along with the Morgan horses, livestock production is also being carried out.

The breeding of Morgans has become an educational facility along with an attraction center for over 60,000 visitors all over the world. The actual teaching of horses is carried out at the UVM barn on Spear Street but the breeding and training occur on the Weybridge Farm. Students' interest in horses is encouraged and discussion is underway in the Department of Animal Sciences for the

by Jeri Covey

At the Tuesday, November 2, meeting of the Inter Residence Association, Steve Rice, President of IRA, announced that the obligatory curfew for freshmen women had been abolished.

The abolishment of the curfew went into effect

Tuesday night. The system of security guards in the dorms after closing hours will remain in effect, and anyone coming in after closing must have his ID card.

The process of abolishing the curfew started at the September 28 meeting of IRA. Freshmen representatives of Wright, Harris, and Patterson presented petitions for the removal of the curfew. Their main point was that with the lowering of the age of majority to 18 students are now legally adults and cannot be forced to obey a curfew.

A preliminary proposal was read to the Council at the following meeting on October

5. The final draft of the proposal was approved by the representatives at the October 19 meeting and sent to the offices of Deans of Women and Students. The proposal asked for the abolishment of the curfew on the grounds that "Freshmen Women's Curfew discriminates against women, denies the exercise of personal responsibility in contrast to the increased demands for responsible behavior demanded of them, and no longer serves the educational goal of promoting more study."

A copy of the averages of freshmen students showing an increase of the second semester grades over the first semester grades was included with the formal proposal.

A letter was read at the October 26 meeting from Dr. Miser informing the Council that the proposal and a letter of recommendation from Dr. Miser had been sent to Dean Patzer. Dean Patzer signed the proposal abolishing the curfew into effect this week.

Will Jeanne Mance Survive?

by Jim Judd

This question has been on the lips of almost every girl who now resides in Jeanne Mance. Since the word got out last week. And needless to say the reaction to this statement was viewed with much disbelief and hostility by the residents or the dorm.

Just how the word got out about this possibility is unsure, but from all that could be discovered it seems as if the word was brought to Jeanne Mance by IRA representative Kay Robertson. Jeanne Mance had wanted to construct a skating rink on their tennis court, so the approval of Mr. Mailloux, a Business Administrator of the Medical Center of Vt. which owns Jeanne Mance, was needed. His reply to the situation was that he won't send anyone down to check out the possibility of a skating rink, because we aren't sure whether or not Jeanne Mance will still be a UVM dormitory for second semester.

The reason for such action is apparently that the University took the contract with hopes of being able to fill Jeanne Mance, but as there was somewhere in the area of 700 fewer fall enrollments than expected, Jeanne Mance was not filled to capacity, as were other girls dorms. As it stands it has a capacity of 145 girls and there are 135 girls living there now. Vice President of Financial Affairs, Dyson, has written the hospital and asked (if second semester enrollments and transfers dropped considerably) whether the University would be able to get out of the contract. This was done on a purely speculative basis to see if the budget could be cut. This was no indication that Jeanne Mance would be closed down.

To get to the bottom of the rumor it was necessary to speak to Dr. Miser whose reaction was that there was only a very slight possibility of closing down Jeanne Mance. Dr. Miser stated that every action is being taken to prevent its closing down as a residence hall. He said that many alternatives are being considered. One of them is the incorporation of two floors, which he said is possible, and use the empty floor to rent out to various conferences, for housing. This way the University could use available space to make money. He also suggested that since Jeanne Mance was such a valuable building that girls from various University owned dorms would be moved in to fill Jeanne Mance. It was also mentioned that the infirmary might be relocated in Jeanne Mance. This he stressed is all purely speculative.

When asked if Jeanne Mance residence would get priority as to where they wished to live, he replied: If worse comes to worse and the girls will most likely not be moved they will be given priority, and girls will most likely not be held to their housing contracts, so if they wished they could find private housing.

Parent's Fund Enjoys Accelerated Growth

The Parents Fund continued its steady growth in 1970-71 under the chairmanship of Saul Robbins of West Orange, New Jersey. An expanded committee along with greater regional emphasis were noted as important factors in this growth.

A comparison of the Fund of the four years of its existence provides dramatic evidence of growth.

"The figures" said 1971-72 Parents Fund Chairman Walter Coupe of Chesham, Rhode Island, "reflect a growth which gives sound hope that in 1971-72 the Parents Fund goal of 900 donors and $50,000 will be reached."

The State of Vermont supports the University to the extent of approximately 20%. Although this is far below other state supported universities, the state's contribution represents a much higher percentage of General Fund Appropriation for higher education than most states. Consequently the

Debate Team Has Successful Start

The UVM debate squad has kicked-off its '71-72 season with a bang. First the four-man novice team of Nancy Roberts, Dan Mulcahey, Jeffrey Potash, and Karen Olio came away from the Dartmouth Novice Invitational tournament with first place and an undefeated 6-0 record.

The following weekend UVM varsity debaters tripped to Washington and Jefferson where the team of Phil Maniatty and Jan Murray won third place over-all in the tournament.

The novices, attending their first tournament of the year, amazed everyone as they not only won the tournament with an untied, undefeated record, but ranked outstandingly as individual speakers. Dan Mulcahey was declared the second best over-all affirmative speaker at the tournament, as Karen Olio was awarded second place negative speaker honors.

At the Washington and Jefferson tournament the two man team of Maniatty and (continued on page six)

Governor's Committee Explains Voting Rights

As of July 1, 1971, Vermont's voter residency requirements have been altered to allow more Vermonters a more equitable share in determining their governmental representation, legal responsibilities, and civic financial commitments. Due to special Congressional elections on January 7, 1972, it was requested of the Youth Opportunity Project of the Governor's Committee on Children and Youth to research the new residency requirements and to inform the public on the procedures that individuals must take to become eligible to vote in that election. We hope that a brief description of those procedures will be helpful not only to new residents and to 18 year olds but also to older residents who have never voted.

The law requires that a voter be a resident of Vermont for 90 days prior to this election and that he has reached the age of 18 by the day of the election.

At anytime from the first day of your residency, you can visit your town clerk to declare residency (no fees charged) and to apply to the Board of Civil Authority to be included on the voter checklist. At this time, it is wise to remember that this law may still be unclear to many potential voters as well as town clerks. Patience and understanding on both sides could be helpful. Since proof of residency is a very subjective issue, the town clerk might ask you for supportive evidence of your "intent to remain" a resident after the election. This is done to help you, since you must be prepared to answer any objections posed by the Board of Civil Authority at a later date. The town clerk has no authority to officially object to your reasons for declaration of residency.

The next step is to appear before the Board of Civil Authority at their special hearings to take an oath on the validity of your residency and then to be included on the voter checklist. You will be required to show evidence of your "intent to remain" in Vermont as a resident. This can be demonstrated with examples of financial independence such as a steady job, payment of taxes, rental of apartment, or by showing that you are married and settled. Intent to remain is important, since the people who remain in residence have to live under the results of any election or school bond vote.

The Board of Civil Authority must give public notice of their hearings at least six days before they begin. These hearings must begin at least 23 days prior to the election and the Board should meet with anyone wishing to be heard until 12:00 o'clock noon on the Saturday before a Tuesday election. You need not be 18 years old or be a resident for 90 days before your Board hearing, but must be able to prove that you will fulfill these requirements by the day of the election.

By becoming a resident of Vermont, it makes addition an absentee ballot is available upon your legally responsible to pay poll taxes IF YOU ARE A RESIDENT OF VERMONT ON APRIL 1, 1972. This assessment is not retroactive to April 1, 1971, and cannot be assessed against you as a prerequisite for voting.

If you are a college student from another state but wish to become a Vermont resident, your residency begins on the day you began living in Vermont, not on the first day of the fall semester—the law says nothing about STUDENTS, just RESIDENCY. If you maintained no legal residence in Vermont over the summer, your residency ended whenever you gave it up before the summer and begins anew when you return.

For anyone planning to visit another state during Board hearing time, arrangements can be made with the Board of Civil Authority to include you on the checklist without a face to face hearing, or in special group cases by advancing hearings to a date earlier than 23 days before election. In addition an absentee ballot is available upon written request.

POLLUTION RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TECHNOLOGIST?

If you are frustrated with the condition of the environment and desire to become familiar with possible solutions to pollution, pre-register for the following Spring Semester Course.

TECHNOLOGY 52 TECHNOLOGY AND THE ENVIRONMENT

(Tentatively scheduled for 11 MWF in Votey 209. Prerequisites: one year of chemistry or permission of instructor.)

The objective of this course is to describe in non-technical language air, land, and water pollution and to outline the ways of solving these problems with present and future technology.

The teaching faculty have experience not only as instructors and researchers in environmental engineering but also as practicing consultants to communities and large industries.

University Takes Lead In Environmental Programs

How real is the so-called environmental crisis? This question came under consideration by the Deans of the Colleges in a three-day conference during the summer of 1970. It was concluded that the increasing public concern over a deteriorating environment is well-founded and that the quality of life, indeed, possibly man's survival, is at stake. Clearly, the University must assume some responsibility for creating awareness of the causes, implications and possible solutions of environmental abuse among students, faculty and the community as a whole.

In view of his own personal commitment to environmental quality, and encouraged by the unanimity of opinion shared by the Deans, President Andrews appointed a committee comprised of faculty and students to explore how the University might respond. The recommendations of this committee provided for the establishment of a University Environmental Program concerned with academic study, research and community service.

Today the Environmental Program at UVM is a reality. It is all-University in the sense that it is not housed in a single department or college. An Executive Committee and task forces made up of faculty and students are attempting to develop an academic program which is truly interdisciplinary, community service which is meaningful and effective, and participate in such off-campus activities; many are doing so now.

The Environmental Program is presently conducting a nation-wide search for a full-time Director who will coordinate its academic and research programs and provide liaison between the University and off-campus groups. Over two hundred candidates, many experienced in various aspects of environmental concern, have expressed an interest in the Directorship. A final selection by the Search Committee is anticipated later this year and installation of the Director by the summer or fall of next year is projected.

As is true with the establishment of any new program, there are a number of obstacles which must be overcome before full-scale implementation is possible. The Environmental Program is still in its initial stages of development and welcomes critical appraisal and suggestions from faculty and students. The Program by its very structure can function effectively on the UVM campus only if it can establish support and cooperation among the various segments of the academic community.

Dr. John Craighead of the College of Medicine is serving as the Acting Director. The Environmental Program office is located in Clement House (194 So. Prospect Street). It is hoped that many members of the University community will continue to provide input into this exciting new University program.

Cynic Photography Contest

The CYNIC announces the "Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest." The rules are as follows:

1. The contest is open to all students of the University of Vermont who are amateurs. (Amateurs will be considered those people who do not support themselves by taking pictures.)
2. The pictures will be divided into the three following categories: faces, landscapes, and other subjects. The category of other subjects will include any picture not included in the categories of faces or landscapes.
3. All photographs will be black and white and will be approximately 8 x 10 inches. There is no limit to the number of photographs that each photographer may submit.
4. The picture submitted will be the property of the VERMONT CYNIC, which will have the consent of the photographer to publish them in the newspaper.
5. The VERMONT CYNIC has the right to request the photographer to submit a subject release form signed by those people who may appear in the photograph.
6. The pictures may have been taken at any time, past or present.
7. Pictures entered in the Second Semi-Annual CYNIC Photography Contest should not have been entered in any other photography contest sponsored by the CYNIC.
8. Photographs will be judged on print quality and composition by a board of judges.
9. The board of judges will consist of Ken Perry, Photography Editor of the CYNIC, Tito, of the University Photo Service, and Bob Rescuer, Assistant Photography Editor of the CYNIC. The judges will be ineligible to enter the contest.
10. All photographs should be placed in the appropriate box in the CYNIC office.
11. The photographer's name, address, and telephone number should be lightly printed in pencil on the back of each photograph submitted, along with a title, if any.
12. Deadline for entries will be November 19, 1971.
13. One winner will be chosen from each category and the winners will be announced in the December 2, issue of the CYNIC.
14. The winner in each category will receive $25.00.
15. All questions should be referred directly to Ken Perry, in care of the CYNIC office.

China Reopens

By Kim Woodard
Editor's Note: Kim Woodard is a Ph.D. candidate in Political Science at Stanford University. He traveled to the People's Republic of China this summer as a member of the Friendship Delegation of the Committee of Concerned Asian Scholars. The Friendship Delegation spent a month in China, visiting both urban and rural areas. Thirteen of the fifteen members of the CCAS delegation speak Chinese.

Higher education is alive and well in the People's Republic of China. Universities and middle schools were closed down all over China during the Cultural Revolution, but now they are open and functioning again. There is a new stress in university life on the values of hard work, equality, and innovation.

During our month-long visit to the People's Republic of China this summer, we spent a full day on the campus of New Peking University and another half-day meeting with students and faculty of Chinghua University (also near Peking). In Shanghai, students from East China University helped to host our fifteen-member Friendship Delegation of the Committee of Concerned Asian Scholars. In addition, we visited a middle school, a primary school, several specialized training institutions, and a number of nurseries and kindergartens.

Work is the watchword in China's educational system in the period since the Cultural Revolution. Nearly all the universities and other institutions of higher education, as well as most of the middle schools in China, were closed down for at least a year at the height of the Cultural Revolution.

The two universities we visited were both closed for about 24 months and re-opened in September 1970. At the time when the universities were closed, the entire student body of each university was graduated to urban and rural production units throughout the country. It was as if the whole student body at Berkeley had marched off the campus after the Free Speech Movement and headed for jobs at General Motors or on the farms of Kansas and Oklahoma.

Some went to work willingly, and some were "alienated" by the sudden transition. But one and all went out to work with their hands, and to put their various intellectual talents directly into practical service among the workers and peasants. The "three doors" of the educational system which led directly into middle school, university, and thence to the bureaucracy, suddenly slammed shut.

By the summer of 1971 when we visited the two major universities in Peking, the crest of political struggle on the campus had passed, the administration of the universities had been restructured into a system of revolutionary committees, and a whole new generation of students had been admitted. The new students have been admitted for study according to rather strict new guidelines.

All students entering university level study must have spent at least two years since graduation from middle school working in the industrial, agricultural, or military labor forces. Forty percent of the new students have been selected from an agricultural background, forty percent from an industrial background, ten percent from the People's Liberation Army, and ten percent from such miscellaneous occupations as shopkeeping and transportation work.

Each student must base his application for admission to the university of his choice on a recommendation from the revolutionary committee of the production unit where he has been working. His work performance and attitudes, as well as his academic record, are taken into account by the admissions committee of the university.

Once admitted to university level study, students continue to participate in manual labor.

China Reopens Higher Educational Facilities

By Kim Woodard
Editor's Note: Kim Woodard is a Ph.D. candidate in Political Science at Stanford University. He traveled to the People's Republic of China this summer as a member of the Friendship Delegation of the Committee of Concerned Asian Scholars. The Friendship Delegation spent a month in China, visiting both urban and rural areas. Thirteen of the fifteen members of the CCAS delegation speak Chinese.

Each university maintains its own small factories and agricultural units where students integrate classroom theory with part-time work. The campus production units are intended to be highly innovative and perhaps only marginally successful on the production side.

University factories are filled with castoff machinery which the students renovate and rework into entirely new production systems. The principle objective of the school factories is to teach self-reliance and respect for the values of the working class. Some of the campus production units, such as the medicine factory we visited at New Peking embryonic form before the Cultural Revolution, but has become the primary distinguishing feature of the Chinese educational system in the period since the Cultural Revolution.

The egalitarianism of the work-study programs at China's universities has been reinforced by organizational changes in university administration. Gone are the dean, the provost, the registrars, and the other bureaucratic administrative positions. The old administrative hierarchy has now been replaced by a system of revolutionary committees operating in every area of university life.

At Peking University, the committee. On the other hand, the Communist Party Committee of the university also has a hand in selection of the revolutionary committee.

Some rather obvious inequalities still exist within the universities. The starting wage of a new teacher is 56 yuan a month at New Peking University. A senior professor with a lifetime of service could receive up to the top salary of 345 yuan. This inequality was not changed during the Cultural Revolution, but we were told that salary scales are now under discussion and that the differentials will be sharply decreased in the next year or two.

Women have gained a foothold, but not equality in university education. The student body at New Peking University is about 30 percent women and 70 percent men. Only about 12 percent of the membership of university revolutionary and party committees are women.

Roughly 30 percent of the faculty members are women. They still appear to take a back seat in group discussions and leadership roles. But substantial educational gains have been made by women in a society which is only one generation away from bound feet and legal polygamy.

It was evident throughout the conversations with faculty and students that the educational system as a whole is still in a period of change and experimentation. Some schools are trying out three-year programs (it used to be five years). Some have enrolled middle-aged workers in special training programs. A self-critical and innovative attitude is present everywhere.

China has an ancient cultural tradition of respect for education and scholarship. The new China is now turning that tradition to the service of the Chinese people as a whole. Remaining vestiges of special privilege in education are now under attack. The world is likely to learn new lessons from the Chinese experience.

University, prove to be successful in actual production and are retained and expanded on a permanent basis.

In addition to working in campus production units, students at both the middle school and university levels spend about two months a year working in large urban factories or on rural communes. The general rule is a month of factory work, a month of agricultural work, and about nine months of on-campus education. Faculty and students alike are expected to participate actively in the various manual labor programs.

This work-study system of education was present in faculties of the arts and sciences are governed by revolutionary committees, as are the sixteen faculty departments now back in operation. The committees at each level are elected by faculty members, students, and administrative workers in the department or section concerned. A majority, but not all members of the committee, are likely to be Communist Party cadres. Election takes place "by discussion" and not "by competition". There is a definite sense that if a given cadre did not meet the approval of the people in his department, that he would not be elected to a departmental or university-wide revolutionary Volunteering, helping someone, whether it is a deprived child, a confused teenager or a lonely old man, has become a very special learning experience to many UVM students. Now that experience may involve a whole new way of life. During the past week, Hal Woods, Director of the Office of Volunteer Programs received notification from ACTION headquarters in Washington D.C. that planning funds for a UVM University Year for ACTION Program have been approved.

The program, under the same Federal direction as the Peace Corps and VISTA, is an alternative for UVM students to the classroom experience. It will place college students in full-time jobs of service in poverty-stricken areas.

Participants may make formal academic progress by serving as Associate VISTA Volunteers in ACTION with an individually designed learning program to be coordinated by a faculty sponsor. The ACTION Program involves working in the community in already established or newly created volunteer programs. Participating students will be Associate VISTA Volunteers in ACTION during their 12 month period of service.

President Edward C. Andrews has expressed his desire to cooperate with the implementation of the new ACTION Program. "The University endorses the concept of voluntary public service as a meaningful educational experience and will award academic degree credit to students serving as Associate VISTA Volunteers in ACTION," President Andrews said.

It is hoped that the proposed program will be in full effect beginning second semester of this year. Students participating in the program will not be required to attend formal classes while they are full-time Associate VISTA Volunteers. Instead, each student will have a

Action At UVM

Security advisor who will be fully involved in the student's program. ACTION headquarters will provide subsistence allowances, volunteer benefits and financial and technical program support. The ACTION Program here at UVM will be administered through the Office of Volunteer Programs which has been serving Burlington for some time by identifying specific needs in the community, interviewing and placing students where they are needed most.

Director Hal Woods says, "In OVP's vision, the University Year for ACTION represents an opportunity to further blend part-time 'pure' volunteering with 'supported' volunteering to provide a delicately balanced, but potentially highly effective total effort."

Many of the participants in the new University Year for ACTION, Associate VISTA

Volunteers in ACTION Program, may be current OVP volunteers—who are already involved in the community. But every effort will be made to attract the most highly skilled and mature students for the 25 positions planned for the ACTION Program. Students who are willing to become deeply committed to the ACTION Program are encouraged to come to the Office of Volunteer Programs on the balcony in Billings Center or call 656-2062.

There is however, a lack of more than a half-million dollars after considering available resources. One other possible alternative said Blair would be to request an emergency appropriation for the amount from the Vermont legislature, a move which is regarded as a last resort.

Editorial United States Defeat - Nixon Victory?

The trend that was evident in the United Nations for the past ten years needs no further explanation. Red China is now a member of the General Assembly, and Nationalist China is not. U.N. Ambassador George Bush is not responsible for the United States defeat, for the pendulum had already been pushed by President Nixon himself. One must consider the effect Mr. Kissinger's visit to Red China had on many of the smaller nations which have traditionally followed the United States. Could the Nixon Administration be so naive as to believe that such a visit would not create defections among the smaller countries?

Why, then, did the Nixon Administration not postpone Mr. Kissinger's trip? Perhaps Mr. Nixon was only going through the motions when seeking the rejection of the Communists and the retention of the Nationalists. It was common knowledge that Peking would not accept a seat if Taiwan retained its status. This left two alternatives: (1) The retention of Nationalist China and the rejection of Red China, or (2) the acceptance of Peking and the ousting of the Nationalists. The possibility for the seating of both China's was virtually nil, and the United States was cognizant of this.

The seating of the People's Republic of China was inevitable. If the adverse vote had come next year, rather than this season, the Communists would have been admitted to the General Assembly one week before the 1972 Presidential Elections. Then, President Nixon, while clinging to his hope of retaining Nationalist China in the U.N., would have also caused its defeat by a more subtle action. The President would then have only 7 days to rationalize the inevitable vote, while now he has one year.

Yes, for Nixon the China vote came at just the right time, and according to plan.

NEVER MIND WHY

What Is The Future Of The United States Supreme Court?

by Leon Friedman

What is the United States Supreme Court likely to do in the coming year? The appointment of Lewis R. Powell Jr. and William H. Rehnquist to the Court would add two more law-and-order Justices to the previous Nixon selections (Burger and Blackmun). With the continued presence of Justices Stewart and White—two more or less conservative holdovers from the Warren Era—it appears that the nation will be faced with a six-to-three conservative majority for the foreseeable future.

With only three liberal members left (Douglas, Marshall and Brennan) how much of a retreat from the landmark decisions of the Warren Court are we likely to see? The answer is not too much.

The most important decisions of the Warren Court—in reapportionment, the granting of the right to counsel in the courtroom (the Gideon case) and at the police station (Miranda), the application of strict safeguards on the police, and the great civil rights advances—are not likely to be disturbed. They have become institutionalized, woven into the fabric of government or criminal procedure by state laws, lower court decisions, administrative rulings, and the expectations of millions of affected citizens. Judges who would try to reverse the important rulings of the Warren Court would be the radical revolutionaries at this point, and it is unlikely that any severe reversal would be acceptable to such moderates as Stewart and White.

But the momentum of the liberalizing decisions of the Warren Court will probably be stopped. The important Court rulings of the last ten years created pressure to carry these decisions to the limits of their logic: If counsel is necessary in a felony case, why not in misdemeanor cases or where petty offenses are involved?

If warrants are necessary before wiretaps can be installed in criminal cases, why not also in national security cases?

If state residency requirements are unconstitutional in welfare cases, why not in election cases also?

If the state cannot punish the private possession of obscene material, shouldn't private citizens be free to import such material from abroad?

The Warren Court would undoubtedly have extended its landmark rulings to a host of new situations, rounding out the contours of the decisions and giving them a more rational shape and structure. But the new Justices are not likely to extend the cases one whit beyond their minimal holdings and may well chip them away at the edges wherever possible.

In fact, the Court has already handed down an important case during the last term eroding the Miranda principle: the Supreme Court permitted the prosecution to use inconsistent statements made by a defendant to the police to impeach his credibility at trial, even though he had not been given a proper Miranda warning by the police.

In the new Court term, certain decisions are likely in cases pending before the Court:

Death Penalty—The Court will probably uphold the constitutionality of the death penalty against a claim that it is a "cruel and unusual punishment" forbidden by the Eighth Amendment.

Abortion—The Court will probably permit states to continue to punish abortions. Wrote—Whether the federal government can tap the phones of suspected subversives in national security cases is another close question before the Court. Justice Stewart has been a strong advocate of the need for securing judicial warrants in all cases. William Rehnquist, however, has been intimately involved in the present Justice Department policy of not securing warrants; he may have to excuse himself from these cases, and a more liberal rule may, then, emerge (Leon Friedman, a New York attorney, is author of The Wise Minority, Dial Press 1971. War Protest On Boston Common This Saturday

by John Franco

Are not 55,000 U.S. lives enough? Are not the countless atrocities that have been perpetrated against the people of Indochina a big enough deterrent? Are not the revelations of the Pentagon Papers a big enough embarrassment to our deceitful government? And finally, are not the overwhelming masses of American people demanding an end to this dirty war a large enough persuader for the government to end this war? Apparently the answer to all these questions is a frank "no." The Nixon Administration is determined to continue the war from the Nixon Administration to the end of the American century without a let up. Nixon tries to fool the American people by cutting down the amount of ground force casualties, while at the same time increasing the level of bombing unprecedented in military history. Nixon has asked the working people of this country to send their sons to Vietnam to be killed, and now he tells them that he is going to freeze their wages to pay for that war. The American people will not stand for this a moment longer.

On November 6 massive legal demonstrations will be held in sixteen regional cities across the country to demand an immediate and total withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia. These demonstrations are being projected as the most massive in the history of the anti-war movement. One of the reasons for these projections is the emergence of new social layers into the anti-war movement, especially organized labor. Already over 200 major trade union leaders have participated in these demonstrations.

Many of us have participated in anti-war demonstrations before, but the war continues. However, we must realize that the slaughter of the Vietnamese people continues everyday. They have struggled for decades against the mightiest military powers the world has ever seen, and still they continue their struggle. What we must learn from our Vietnamese brothers and sisters is perseverance in carrying out the anti-war movement. They cannot cease their struggle for one moment, and neither can we. Join with millions of students and workers, this world people, G.I.s, and women on November 6 in the largest anti-war demonstration in the world.

A get out post has been organized to take area people to Boston November 6. Vermont area participants are to assemble at Cambridge Common before 11 a.m. The march will proceed at 11 down Massachusetts Avenue, across the Charles River, and down Tremont Street to Boston Common for a rally. Other contingents from the Boston area will all converge along the route.

Students with or in need of transportation are asked to contact John Franco (2080), Russ Edson (3301), or Colleen Leach (2952 or 2243).

Previous to attending Vassar Miss Graber's grades were excellent, according to her attorney, Donald F. McCarthy. However, after the pot parties began she suffered first a mediocre semester and then a disastrous one.

Since transferring to Adelphi College in Long Island from Vassar, Graber's grades have gone up to 3.8 on a 4.0 scale. Graber had tried previously to transfer to Mt. Holyoke College, Fenn College, and Lehigh University. However, Vassar had withheld recommendations, and in one instance presented a negative reference, and she was not accepted.

According to a spokesman at Vassar the court papers have not yet arrived. Until that time they have no comment.

Supreme Court Nominee Lewis Powell Questions The Extent Of Academic Freedom And Tenure

From the Chronicle of Higher Education

Following are excerpts from a 1968 address by Lewis F. Powell, Jr., the Virginia lawyer who has been nominated by President Nixon to fill a vacancy on the U.S. Supreme Court. At the time he presented this at the annual meeting of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, Mr. Powell was a member of the Virginia board of education.

His remarks now become of particular interest because one of the chief cases involving higher education scheduled to be heard by the high court in its current session involves a non-tenured college teacher who claims his contract was not renewed because of his political activities.

The greatest care must be exercised to protect the responsibilities of the faculty members who, like society in general, are really the victims of the new leftists.

It would also be folly not to recognize that students often do have legitimate grievances, especially on the larger campuses.

It is this combination of valid grievances, plus the wide-spread enchantment and alienation of the young, that produces an environment quite hospitable to ferment. The problem, thus, is by no means confined to the New Left. Rather, it is what a few determined leftists can do to inflame and mislead other students—especially where responsible student opinion is ignored, communications are poor, ground rules are ill-defined, and administrative policy is vacillating and irresolute.

I will mention briefly three areas of special sensitivity: participation in decision-making, the role of faculties, and academic freedom. Each of these poses difficult questions to which there are no easy or unequivocal answers.

"The question is whether responsible educators will continue to allow 'academic freedom' to be used as a cover for extremism on the campus."

The Demands of Students

A demand for student participation in decision-making has been the way for membership on boards of trustees to selection of presidents and faculty and determination of curriculum. If the full sweep of this demand were met, the present structure of higher education in America would be dismantled and replaced by the type of student power found in many South American universities. It hardly needs to be said, I think, that no responsible college administrator or board of trustees could accede to this type of demand for power.

The student body is necessarily transitory, changing from year to year. Nor does the wisdom of student leaders always match their own conviction in infallibility. For these obvious reasons, the role and responsibility of students can never equate that of faculty, administration, or trustees.

And yet student views are entitled to be voiced and seriously considered. Appropriate channels must be devised to accomplish this, along with a far greater effort to make these channels meaningful. The wise administrator will work these out, with faculty and student participation, in advance of campus trouble. All of this must have substance, and reflect a genuine desire to reach accommodation with responsible student views.

But is must ever be remembered that no such program, however reasonable, will mollify the radicals. Their objective is revolution—not reform.

The hope must be not to placate the radicals, but to build a broad base of support among students in the quietness of campus life.

Another frequently voiced grievance relates to the faculty. Erwin N. Griswold, Solicitor General of the United States and former dean of Harvard Law School, spoke recently of the violence at Columbia and its toleration by so many faculty members. Dean Griswold expressed my own deep held views when he said: "The only persons for whom I have more contempt than for the student groups which created the discord are the faculty members who lent support to them."

The problem, obviously, is to stimulate faculty responsibility commensurate with its now unprecedented power. This problem is complicated by two of the most "untouchable" concepts in American life—academic freedom and academic tenure. Because both concepts are sound in principle, and are defended blindly and ferociously, few are bold enough to raise even the most restrained voice of analysis or doubt.

It seems to me the time has come for persons concerned with American education to understand that neither concept is so sacrosanct as to be above rational criticism.

The question in simplest terms is whether responsible educators will continue to allow "academic freedom" to be used as a cover for extremism on the campus, however violent or irrational. In reality, what is called academic freedom in these situations often approaches license without limit.

As a lawyer, I subscribe wholeheartedly to the basic freedoms embodied in the concept of academic freedom. No one devoted to the educational process could entertain a different view. But the very existence of this freedom, virtually unrestrained, imposes a higher degree of responsibility than that often manifested in our campuses.

A Soap Box For Every Huckster?

The quality of education depends upon the wise exercise of value judgments, especially in the selection, retention, and promotion of those who teach. One may doubt that a Black Panther leader, a convicted felon, is qualified to bring anything worthwhile to the campus. If it is said that he knows much about racial hatred, it can also be said that a Mafia leader knows much about vice and extortion, and that the Grand Dragon of the Klan knows much about bigotry.

Should the faculties of our great universities, dedicated to ideals of high scholarship and the search for truth, be demeaned by conspiring extremists who would defile and destroy the very freedoms they invoke? Are our campuses to become Hyde Parks and Times Squares, where a soap box is provided for every huckster?

Again, it seems to me that the time has come for responsible educators to be far more discriminating in selecting professors and lectures, and especially in granting tenure.

The important question of a professor's freedom, I am sure, by a great majority of this privileged profession, are still the ancient ones of honor, integrity, scholarship, intellectual independence, responsibility, and a genuine desire to teach. The extremist who scores these qualifications, whether he be of the right or left, has no proper place on the faculty or indeed in the student body of an institution of learning.

There is among all of us a genuine concern with education a broad consensus as to traditional campus liberalism. Our colleges and universities must ever be preserved as citadels of free inquiry. They must always foster and encourage and never suppress—the freedom of both faculty and students to express divergent views, to protest injustice, and to promote social change in which they believe.

Frustration of a High Purpose

Yet this high purpose of the university surely will be frustrated and subverted if current trends toward license, discord, and even anarchy on the campus are not checked. Reversing these trends will require the highest level of courage and statesmanship from college administrators, faculties, and trustees. There must be a revitalizing of discipline, honor, and intellectual integrity on the campus, just as such a need exists so urgently for society in general.

The line must be drawn sharply and resolutely between those willing to observe traditional methods of peaceful assembly, rational discussion, and orderly procedure, and those who inspire and lead the sit-ins, the lawless demonstrations, and other forms of coercion.

The latter are usually the new leftists on the campus and their followers. Like their heroes Che Guevara, Fidel Castro, and Ho Chi Minh, the only language they understand is force. Such student extremists, and the faculty members who support them in their lawlessness, have forfeited any right to remain as members of a university community. The sooner they are expelled from student bodies and dismissed from faculties, the sooner our campuses will resume their historic roles as centers of reason and intellectual pursuit.

QUESTION: My girlfriend and I both enjoy oral sexual stimulation together. Can this result in any disease transfer or infection? Also, is there any danger from ingesting semen?

ANSWER: Both the mouth and the vagina contain a wide variety of bacteria. Some people will argue that the vagina is the cleaner as it does not contain decaying food. If there is any risk of infection transfer, it might involve viruses transferred from the mouth to the vagina, but this is in the realm of speculation. One warning, however: if one partner has gonorrhea or syphilis, infection can be transferred to the oral cavity.

Pregnancy cannot result from swallowing semen. Semen is a nutritious combination of materials high in protein. There are no recorded cases of poisoning from this substance.

QUESTION: For the past eight to ten years I have been bothered with bad breath. I have been to the dentist several times over the years and he has cleaned my teeth and filled cavities; however, almost immediately after the check-up the odor reappears.

The problem has stunted my ability to communicate. I chew gum almost constantly. Someone told me that I may have acid in my saliva or stomach that produces this smell. What do you think?

ANSWER: Most cases of bad breath originate in the mouth and are traceable to accumulations of material on the teeth harboring bacteria, decay, gum infections or rotting food that has not been rinsed out. These things are taken care of by thorough cleaning and scaling of the teeth, treatment of gum infections and then by vigorous and consistent dental care including frequent tooth brushing, use of dental floss and stimulating your gums.

There are causes of bad breath that do not have to do with the mouth. They may include lung diseases and some gastro-intestinal diseases. Also, sinus conditions with a continual post nasal drip can result in production of foul smelling breath. To tell if bad breath results from the mouth or from other structures, you can apply the following simple test: open your mouth and have someone smell your breath as it is exhaled; then close your mouth and exhale through your nose. If the odor is present when exhaling through your mouth and not when exhaling through your nose, then the problem is in your mouth. If the odor is present when you exhale through your nose, the problem is more complicated. I would suggest beginning with a visit to a good dentist for a cleaning and then proceeding to a specialist in internal medicine. Incidentally, rather than asking a friend to cooperate in this test, ask your dentist or physician, as he would probably be a more objective observer.

QUESTION: I suffer from insomnia to the extent that it is ruining my life. If I can get to bed around 9 p.m., I am usually able to sleep. However, if I get to bed later I am unable to get to sleep before 3 or 5 a.m., even if I did not get any sleep the night before.

I am constantly tired, consistently oversleeping in the morning and continually missing my morning classes.

I have sought relief from this condition from various doctors who invariably refuse to prescribe sleeping pills on the basis that "The possession of such nervous energy is an asset, not a liability, in life."

Do you agree I think I need sleeping pills to get my life regulated?

ANSWER: Insomnia can be caused by a number of physical and emotional factors. These include: drinking too much coffee or drinking coffee late at night, smoking, physical inactivity, anxiety, depression, basement dormitory rooms and the expectation that it's going to be hard to sleep.

Assuming that you are not anxious, depressed or fearful of the dark, I suggest the following: First, stop smoking. Second, after 6 p.m., avoid caffeine-containing drinks such as coffee, tea, cocoa or cola beverages. Step three in my five point program is to have a period of relaxation every evening. During the day, step four consists of doing things like taking a cool shower a half hour before going to bed and sitting down and relaxing with a glass of wine or warm milk. If all this fails, my last suggestion is to find a doctor who isn't such a wise guy that he gives you homilies like the one you mentioned. You may very well need an effective, safe sedative for a brief period of time to break the cycle of anticipated insomnia.

Ike And Tina Turner Postponed Until Sunday

America's number one soul-rock group, the Ike and Tina Turner Revue, performs on the Lane Series on Sunday, November 7 at 8:30 p.m. in the new 1000-seat Memorial Auditorium. The concert is completely sold out. (The group's appearance was originally set for November 3.)

Appearing with Ike and Tina are the Ikeettes and Kings of Rhythm. Tina will sing such hit songs as "Proud Mary," "Gimme Some Lovin'," "Son of a Preacher Man," "Respect," "A Fool in Love," "Sweet Soul Music," "I've Been Loving You Too Long," and many others.

Look Magazine recently described Tina's state performance as follows: "She springs out onstage like a lioness in heat, mini-skirt out to just below her womanhood. At the hand cokes breaks out into a raucous wall that jangles every male in the room: 'What you want, baby, I got it! What you need, baby, I got it!' Through Tina Turner's ostensibly talking about respect comes through a message—through a message—"

Ike Turner, who writes most of Tina's songs, also devises the arrangements and helps Tina as a scheduled concert.

Ike and Tina Turner will be appearing Sunday, November 7, in a scheduled concert.

Twenty years later, today, Ike Turner knows the ropes of the concert business. He lets the spotlight fall on Tina, belting out the songs. Offstage, Ike has built the show for her enormous talent.

What Ike and Tina possess most of all is communication. Their music underlines language and culture. With Tina's voice as a spearhead, they penetrate to the basic feelings which, though buried in some human beings, are present in all.

Recently, before a capacity audience in the immense Symphony Hall in Amsterdam, Holland, Tina described what she meant by her soul music: "When I say soul I think of greasy food—I mean hot, greasy food. The audience responded enthusiastically to her comment; they knew exactly what she meant. She had communicated."

The Turners live in Los Angeles View Park section with their four sons (the oldest is 12 and the youngest is 10) who attend a California boarding school.

The next concert on the Lane Series is folk singer Gordon Lightfoot, November 15. This concert is sold out.

this story, all one needed to do was talk to a girl who lives in Jeanne Mance.

As Kay Robertson put it, for so long girls who have lived at Jeanne Mance have left behind people who did not identify them with UVM. She stated that at one time they had trouble getting films for the complex because the IRA felt that Jeanne Mance was too "out of the way." And she felt that if the girls were moved out, that it would be just "one more strike against them." Other reactions were that it would be very difficult adjusting to a new dorm, and a new roommate. Many felt that the inconvenience of Redstone would be enough to make them seek out private housing. The general consensus was that it was "unfair" and "they just can't do it."

But as it stands now Jeanne Mance will still be in use for a girls dormitory during second semester. So girls just keep the faith. !!!

It's very difficult to come back from a 17 point deficit and win a ball game. It makes it even worse when those damaging points are scored before the end of the first quarter, the toughest thing to beat is the inevitable discouragement.

The University of Vermont Catamounts are an exception to the rule. Even though they were unable to make up those 17 points, they got over their discouragement quickly and really gave the Redmen from UMass a run for their money.

In a surprising performance by the University of Massachusetts, the Catamounts won their sixth straight game of the season, dropping still another in this discouraging season by a score of 24-15.

The Catamounts will meet the Maine Black Bears as they try to get their second win of a dismal season, and try to snap an elongated losing streak, losing 19 of the last 20 attempts.

The Redmen went out to a fast and furious lead as they scored 17 points in the first quarter, forcing the Catamounts to play difficult catch up ball for the rest of the afternoon. In less than three minutes into the first stanza, Massachusetts drew blood with their first of three touchdowns of the day. Minutes later, after suffering a clipped back touchdowns on a penalty, they maneuvered into field goal position for another three points, and at the twelve minute mark, scored still another injury to set the score at 17-0.

After this disastrous start, the Catamounts finally started getting their attack together and managed to put a damper in the Redmen's offense.

About midway through the second period, the Catamounts brought home their first score as quarterback Earl Olson combined with halfback Steve Olson for a 24 yard pass play.

However, the Redmen were quick to retaliate as they took the kick-off and marched to add another six points to their total. This marked an end to the

Movie Review:

Italian Western: Adios Sabata

This western is another one of the Italian products that have developed since the Clint Eastwood series of violent oaters became so popular. This time it's Yul Brynner instead of Eastwood who is the gun for hire and who aids the zero population growth movement by killing most of the other characters in the film. This picture is sort of poor man's Magnificent Seven in that the seven have been reduced to one: Yul Brynner.

The plot concerns Brynner's efforts to aid the Mexican revolution against the emperor Maximilian in the middle 1860's. He is hired by a Mexican general to steal a large shipment of gold which the Mexicans want to enable them to fight the Austrians. The gold is not where it is supposed to be, however, and Brynner, along with three Mexicans and an American, track it down. The Mexicans are an odd lot; one is fat and dresses like a pirate; one is a gymnast who dances a flamenco whenever someone is going to be executed, and one, who is mute, likes music, and kills people by dropping a steel ball into a cup on his boot, propelling the ball to its destination by rapidly swinging his leg. His next, quiet, and the ammunition is reusable.

The fifth member of this jolly band is an American named Ballantine, played by Dean Reed. Also in Adios High, another western of this type, his chief asset seems to be that he looks like Clint Eastwood. His acting is not as good, however, and he doesn't add too much to the film.

The chief character is that of Sabata, played by Yul Brynner. Since most of the bad guys dress in black suits and wear top hats, why should we be different. However, he can be recognized because his outfit is more western in appearance. Interestingly enough, the meanest cruellest character in the film, the Austrian general, is dressed in white, reversing the stereotype of hero dressed in white. Brynner carries a short rifle which fires a clip of ten bullets. The tenth space in the clip, however, usually contains a cigar which Brynner smokes after firing the other nine shots.

This is the real reason why he kills: he can't smoke unless he fires nine shots first.

Hundreds of people die in the film but it is virtually bloodless. This is a surprise since the westerns made very recently have shown a strong trend toward becoming as bloody as possible. There's more blood in most scenes in The Wild Bunch than there is in this entire picture.

The photography is adequate but the film comes across as exactly what it is: an attempt to capitalize on a successful genre. Imitation may be the sincerest form of flattery but, as so often happens in film, imitations of successful films are usually hopelessly outclassed by the originals on which they were based. This is true here, with an average western as the result. It is watchable, however, and there's a lot of action to keep you interested in what's going on. possibility of a minor in horse science.

The University owned animals are used in demonstrations for adults and 4-H groups as well as for college students. The 4-H program is one of the largest livestock projects in Vermont.

The Morgan breeding program is unique in the country and the University is fortunate to have possession of the oldest breeding program of its kind. Light horses, such as the Morgan, create an interest in pleasure riding. There are 75 million light horses in the United States creating an industry of 12 billion dollars, including all accessory equipment (as quoted figure by the American Horse Council) growing to 24 billion dollars industry by 1980. The Morgan stock is in demand around the world; each year twelve to fifteen horses are sold from the farm at high prices, because of the high quality in careful breeding and concern for the animal. People must understand the vast contributions of the Morgans and the Morgan Horse Farm to Vermont and other states interested in breeding.

The goals are to uphold the high standards of the horse; endurance, spirit and conformity, restoring the Morgan to its leading position in the country. The farm is rich with tradition and the Morgans are only a part of the Weybridge Research Center. Half million acres of farm are opportunity areas for a research center for the Environmental Studies Program. The Forestry Program can also benefit from the rich land and Otter Creek. Livestock research is another important facade of the farm area.

The University financial deficit has caused scrutiny of every department for ways to cut out certain aspects or money-raising methods. Rightfully so, The Weybridge Research Center is also being examined for possible cut backs or other.

The 1971-1972 Student Directories are now finished. They may be picked up at the S.A. desk in Billings Center.

Twenty years later, today, the Turner knows the ropes of the concert business. He lets the spotlight fall on him, being out on the stage. Offstage, he has built the show for her enormous talents.

What the and Tina played most of all is communication. Their music underlines language and culture. With Tina's voice as a spearhead, they penetrate to the basic feelings which, though buried in some human beings, are present in all.

Recently, before a capacity audience in the immense Symphony Hall in Amsterdam, Holland, Tina described what she meant by her soul music: "When I say soul I think of grey food, I mean hot, grey food." The audience responded enthusiastically to her comment; they knew exactly what she meant. She had communicated.

The Turners live in Los Angeles View Park section with their four sons (the oldest is 12 and the youngest is 10) who attend a California boarding school.

The next concert on the Leno Series is folk-singer Gordon Lightfoot, November 15. This concert is sold out.

Catamount Clippings

I think its about time that I started writing about a winning team, for there seems to be one ray of hope in a rather dismal fall season.

Believe it or not, the University of Vermont populace does not have to bury their heads until the winter season. There is one team that is winning, and winning right under our noses.

The Soccer team, despite its lack of publicity and support (which doesn't make it any different from slot of other athletic teams at this University) has once again risen to be king of the Yankee Conference hill by stepping over a battered and much surprised University of Massachusetts team.

Last Saturday (see accompanying article) the kicking Catamounts won their fourth Yankee Conference victory out of five attempts to hold at least a temporary lead for the Yankee Conference crown. Describes remain permanent remains to be the Catamounts are assured a tie for the leading position, and if so, the victor will be decided between these two clubs who have been at each others throats for several years now.

It's sure that there was the pleasant alignment of events in last Saturday's victory, for it was last year that the Redmen stole the crown from the Vermont club who had held it for four previous years. Hopefully, the crown will once again return to its rightful owners.

The Catamounts great successes to mark this season have not been limited to the regaining of the number one spot in the Yankee Conference. For the first time in their history, the UVM team handed the Panthers of Middlebury a decisive loss. Yesterday's contest with St. Michael's (which was not available at press time) should serve to by-pass that previous mark.

Soccer Men Tumble UMass To Rise To Top Of Conference

by Jack Arute

The University of Vermont secured itself of its 6th Yankee Conference Soccer Crown in the past, seven years Saturday when the Cat booters stopped a very physical University of Massachusetts club 2-1.

The Catamounts were ready, realizing that any hopes of an NCAA Tourney berth would depend on winning their remaining games convincingly. UVM missed the shut out when the Redmen scored with 30 seconds remaining in the final period. UMass had been unscored upon in their previous 3 conference battles.

After initial penetration in the opening minutes of the first period, UMass brought the play to UVM, constantly pressuring the Cat's goalie Jim Kiely. Ed Doherty and Lindo Alves combined speed and an effective passing game to give UMass the edge. The score however remained 0-0 until the second period.

In the early going of the 2nd period the Vermont halfbacks began to challenge UMass and dominated the play.

UMass didn't manage to really press the Cats in their own zone until midway thru the period effective work by the Vermont fullbacks, Jack Shea and John Hubert, brought the ball put and set up the first score. Freshman Peter Breen took a pass from Dave Ojala and headed towards the center net area beating UMass goalie John Kiah with a sharp shot that Kiah initially stopped but then slipped past him on the rebound.

A team warning to the Redmen near the half, set up a 2nd period that was marked by physical abuse and two ejections that took any edge that UMass had away. Left forward UMass' Augie Calhoun was ejected early in the period for disregarding the first half team warning and kicking the ball away while Vermont set for a direct kick. A heated discussion by the Redmen consumed approximately 4 minutes of running time.

At the nine minute mark the Cats scored their second goal, after Peter Breen lofted a pass to the center where Vince Masseau who got the credit for the assist shot and was blocked. The ball bounced loose from Kiah and left forward Peter Bernhardt laced a soft shot just passed the outstretched hands of the UMass goalie. Another ejection for unsportsmanlike conduct of Lindo Alves for Massachusetts seemed to break the back of the Redmen. Cheap shots and trips continued but discipline on the bench began and leadership seemed lacking for the Redmen.

The fourth period saw another series of rushes in which Breen missed his second goal.

Massachusetts then pulled its fullbacks and proceeded to play strictly offense. Fine saves by Kiely and good defense prevented a UMass score until Tom Coburn headed a shot past the Cats Kiely and made the score 2-1 at 19:30 in the fourth period.

Larry Allen iced the game when he prevented a possible overtime tilt by kicking the ball out of danger in front of the net. Pandemonium broke out on the Vermont bench with the final whistle and Head Coach Don Soderberg headed for the locker room on the shoulders of his team.

The win guarantees a tie for the Yankee conference crown. And moves the Cats closer to a possible tourney berth.

Captain Dave Ojala summed up the win by saying, "We had the old UVM spirit of 67 and 68 with the new UVM ability of 1971."

With one-quarter of the student body having already signed its petition, the Vermont Public Interest Research Group is about to kickoff a concerted petition campaign during the week of November 14-20. The purpose of this campaign is to obtain a minimum support of half the student body and thereby to obtain funding at the college level.

Tables manned by VPIRG representatives will be set-up in Billings Center, the library, the bookstore and the five dining halls. Students wishing to sign the VPIRG petition or seeking information about this group should go to these designated tables.

UVM's Def

The money shortage plaguing major state universities and land-grant colleges will be even more severe during the 1971-72 academic year than it was during financially hard-pressed 1970-71.

Early responses to a financial status survey show that state appropriations—the chief source of public university revenue—are becoming increasingly stringent. Slim operating budgets, often related to reductions in state appropriations, also foretell a deepening fiscal crisis.

Some universities surveyed will be operating with less funds than they had last year—a year in which more than half the nation's principal state universities and land-grant colleges reported they could do little more than maintain a status quo operation in the absence of additional money with which to cope with escalating costs and needs.

The new survey was carried out by the Office of Research and Information of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges (NASULGC). It was designed as a follow-up to a similar financial survey conducted by the Association among its 117 member institutions last year and reported in June in a special study, "Peoples Colleges in Trouble."

Responses from 55 universities, among them some of America's most prestigious public-supported institutions of higher education, show that 36 will be operating in the 1971-72 academic year with standstill budgets.

Taking into account the two factors of inflation and increasing enrollments, the Association calculated in last year's survey that a university would have an average annual increase of 10 percent in its operating budget to maintain a current level of services.

25% Of Student Body Signs VPIRG Petition; 25% More Still Needed

By Arlene Erikson

With one-quarter of the student body having already signed its petition, the Vermont Public Interest Research Group is about to kick off a concerted petition campaign during the week of November 14-20. The purpose of this campaign is to obtain a minimum support of half the student body and thereby to obtain funding at the college level.

Tables manned by VPIRG representatives will be set up in Billings Center, the library, the bookstore and the five dining halls. Students wishing to sign the VPIRG petition or seeking information about this group should go to these designated tables.

With the VPIRG will be a non-profit public corporation designed to research and publicize environmental, economic, social and political problems facing the state of Vermont. Moreover it is designed to act as an advocate of the interests of the general public.

The VPIRG has chosen five general areas in which to work. The five areas are consumer protection; services and utilities; taxes; environmental, ecological problems; and health and legal aid.

Donald Ross, one of Nader's Raiders in Washington, D.C., was in Vermont on November 8-10 to assist in the organization of VPIRG. Ross has worked with citizen and student controlled public interest research groups in other states and localities across the nation. His experience helped the VPIRG workers to overcome problems which they have encountered.

In addition to advising the VPIRG staff, Mr. Ross held a number of open meetings at which he explained the ideas behind the public interest research group and answered questions on the subject. His itinerary included informational meetings at college campuses in central and southern Vermont as well as meetings with high school administrators and the UVM administration.

Fire In Davis Hall

A fire broke out in the "trash room" of Davis Hall on Tuesday night, November 9, at 7:15. The Burlington Fire Department arrived at 7:30 and the fire was extinguished within one hour.

Two trash cans caught fire in the basement where the trash collects, after being thrown down the chute on each floor. Apparently the fire was the result of an accident. A campus policeman speculated that a lit cigarette was thrown down the chute.

The fire was discovered at 7:15 at which time a group of seven boys from Davis tried in vain to extinguish the blaze. When the flames got out of control, the Burlington Fire Department was summoned.

There was no damage caused by the fire which was contained in the trash room. There was, however, certain consequences that resulted from the fire. When the alarm sounded, many students quickly evacuated the building. A person on the third floor of Davis forgot to turn the water off in the sink located in the lounge, and a small flood resulted. No other damage was reported.

Political Frustrations Cause One Hundred Student Body Presidents To Call An Emergency Conference

Over one hundred student body presidents from colleges and universities across America joined with the Association of Student Governments this week in calling for an Emergency Conference for New Voters to organize students as voting delegates to the national party nominating conventions in 1972. The Emergency Conference is slated for December 3-4, and 5 at Loyola University in Chicago.

"The events of the past month clearly indicate that neither of the two major political parties welcome the young, left-leaning voters as fully enfranchised participants in the parties," said Duane Draper, President of ASG and Chairman of the steering committee for the Emergency Conference.

"These events create a crisis situation for the millions of young people who wish to effect constructive change through existing institutions. Unless we begin the task immediately of organizing students within the party processes, we will find ourselves totally excluded from the delegate selections and the Presidential nominating procedures, thus effectively disenfranchising the 26th amendment."

The event, Draper referred to, was the Democratic Committee's selection of Patricia Harris as temporary chairman of the credentials committee over liberal Senator Harold Hughes (D-Iowa), who had been viewed by many as the key to enforcement of the McGovern Commission reforms at the Democratic convention in Miami.

On the Republican side, pressure from higher echelon Republican officials to thwart Congressman Pete McCloskey's (R-Cal) challenge to President Nixon in the primaries has caused serious financial problems for McCloskey's campaign, and could essentially eliminate him as an alternative Republican candidate.

"It is imperative that the twenty-five million 18-24 year olds in this country are aware of the mockery that both Democratic and Republican party officials are making of the reform movements in the parties," continued Draper.

"Young people must sense the urgency of this meeting of the student community and the absolute necessity of mobilizing very quickly to combat these forces who would seek to isolate us—from the regular party procedures. We must remember that there are great numbers of people in both parties who would prefer to wind up at their

by Jeri Covey

The Inter Residence Association held its weekly meeting Tuesday, November 9 in the Harris-Mills Conference Room. Items on the agenda included an executive motion on a Winter Weekend '72 committee, a motion appropriating money for publicity of the proposed craft fair, and a report on the motion to appropriate money for a coffee house in Slade Hall.

Steve Rice, President of IRA reported on the joint meeting of the IRA Executive Board and the Student Association Executive Board. Out of this meeting came the proposal that a Winter Weekend '72 committee be formed to coordinate the events of the weekend. The committee will be composed of three SA members, two IRA members, one Fraternity Forum and one Panhellenic Council member. Rice made an executive motion that IRA agree to this committee and the motion was

UVM's Deficit Ranks High Nationally

The money shortage plaguing major state universities and land-grant colleges will be even more severe during the 1971-72 academic year than it was during financially hard-pressed 1970-71.

Early responses to a financial status survey show that state appropriations—the chief source of public university revenue—are becoming increasingly stringent. Slim operating budgets, often related to reductions in state appropriations, also foretell a deepening fiscal crisis.

Some universities surveyed will be operating with less funds than they had last year—a year in which more than half the nation's principal state universities and land-grant colleges reported they could do little more than maintain a status quo operation in the absence of additional money with which to cope with escalating costs and needs.

The new survey was carried out by the Office of Research and Information of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges (NASULGC). It was designed as a follow-up to a similar financial survey conducted by the Association among its 117 member institutions last year and reported in June in a special study, "Peoples College in Trouble."

Responses from 55 universities, among them some of America's most prestigious public-supported institutions of higher education, show that 36 will be operating in the 1971-72 academic year with standstill budgets.

Taking into account the two factors of inflation and increasing enrollments, the Association calculated in last year's survey that a university should have an average annual increase of 10 percent in its operating budget to maintain a current level of services.

With hard effects of the Nixon Administration's anti-inflation campaign not yet manifested, 26 universities report in the new survey that they have received state appropriations which fall below that 10 percent increase calculated as essential for the institutions to maintain standstill operations.

Nine universities participating in the latest survey received state appropriations that were less than the amount they received for 1970-71. Three universities received the same amount for '71-'72 as for '70-'71.

Six universities reported that, because of lack of revenue, they will be operating with smaller budgets than they had in 1970-71. One university will receive the same budget in '71-'72 as it had in '70-'71.

The universities reporting decreases in 1971-72 state appropriations were: Delaware State College, Florida A&M University, University of Illinois, Montana State University, University of Montana, Oregon State University, University of Rhode Island, Washington State University and the University of Washington. There was no change in the amount of appropriation received by the University of California, the University of Connecticut and the University of Kansas.

Three universities received appropriations' increases that were so minute as to constitute virtually no change. They were: Kansas State University, 0.1%; University of Nebraska, .71%; and University of Vermont, .84%.

Decreases in operating budgets were reported by: University of Illinois, Kansas State University, University of Kansas, Montana State University, Washington State University, and University of Washington. There was no change in the University of Connecticut operating budget.

State Appropriations' Operating Budgets. Mirror Fiscal Dilemma

Behind the financial troubles which continue to plague universities are the same factors which have beset the average American taxpayer—spiraling costs and an inflationary economic crisis, complicated in many cases by constantly climbing enrollments.

University resources become less adequate each year to cope with these growing demands.

Simple comparisons of the number of universities reporting standstill state appropriations and standstill operating budgets in 1970-71 and 1971-72 quickly show that the campus situation has grown much more critical since fall, 1970.

Fifty-six percent of the early respondents to the 1971-72 financial survey—28 out of 50 universities—received state appropriations below the ten percent standstill requirement. In 1970-71 38.5% of the survey participants—30 universities out of a total of 78 respondents—had standstill appropriations.

Almost three-fourths of all university respondents (73.46%) in the current survey had standstill operating budgets (36 universities out of 55 total respondents). In 1970-71, 44 of

CYNIC Interview:

Michael Parenti Talks About His Reappointment

by Chris Conkling

Mr. Michael Parenti, who holds a Ph.D. in political science, was contracted last year by the University. After the Kent State disorder, he was arrested, and charged with aggravated battery, disorderly conduct and resisting a police officer. He was convicted that fall. His participation in politics and some of his political beliefs came under protest and attack by members of the board of trustees, legislature, and faculty. These protests took such form as one trustee member Mr. Beckley, resigning from the board, as well as a vote to suspend Mr. Parenti from the faculty, which it did not pass. Now Mr. Parenti's position is up for reappointment for the coming year.

Editor's Note: A number of errors have been discovered in the following interview. Unfortunately they were discovered too late to make changes. Corrections will appear in the next issue of the CYNIC. Our apologies.

CYNIC: Could you briefly explain why you wanted to come to Vermont?

Parenti: It was a nice area of the country. I was very favorably impressed by the people in the department. They seemed very warm and human, and were doing interesting things, even if I disagree with most of them politically. I wanted to be close to my son who lives in the East.

CYNIC: What about the political aspects of Vermont? [was there anything that you felt?]

Parenti: No, I discovered that Vermont doesn't have much that's politically interesting.

CYNIC: No one has really asked you about what happened before you came to Vermont. Could you explain what happened in Illinois and why you left?

Parenti: I was interested in a demonstration when I interceded in a drive way because the authorities were backing a garbage truck into a drive way where there were some students. During the altercation that ensued the argument, state troopers came charging in without warning and I got clubbed over the head. I was then charged with aggravated battery and disorderly conduct and so forth. I was then found guilty in what I feel clearly was a miscarriage of justice, if there is any justice in this society.

CYNIC: The Burlington Free Press quoted you as saying that you teach simply to stimulate thought in your students. Could you elaborate a little more on what you mean and tell me a little more about your methods, of stimulating thought and then awareness?

Parenti: I don't know if that quote is accurate. I don't even remember making a statement like that. I teach principally for the same reason that other people teach—namely, that I am very much interested in the subject matter. I'm interested in the subject of politics and political systems. That's really why I teach.

CYNIC: People are afraid of radicals such as yourself. They are afraid you bring your radical beliefs into the classroom and they don't like that.

Parenti: Oh, of course, but why teachers take their political views into the classroom for fifteen years, as a liberal and nobody ever questioned me then. Only in the last three or four years when I began to increasingly question the premises of much of American policy, did people suddenly then say,

"He's taking his views into the classroom or that he's injecting his own thinking into the classroom." If you don't inject your own thinking into the classroom, then you're not a good teacher. That's about the only thing you have to give to the classroom is your own thinking. Many times I play devil's advocate. Naturally, I'm not going to teach something that I don't believe in. I'm not going to teach bad political science. I'm not going to teach bad political science. I'm not going to teach that power is widely and variously distributed in this society the way American text books teach it, because I think that that is bad political science not because I'm radical, but I became a radical through my political science.

CYNIC: Who do you think will be against your re-appointment?

Parenti: I have no idea. They'll show themselves soon enough.

CYNIC: Do you have any concerns about this protest?

Parenti: No, the people who might be against me are people on the board of trustees. But the President of the University seemed to have given indication that he is on my side.

CYNIC: What about politics and the Radical student Union? How involved are you going to become in the upcoming elections? What kind of expectations do you have?

Parenti: We're not doing anything in electoral politics. The only thing I've done is to apply information, and facts and figures to one candidate who requested it from me. But generally we've been carrying on demonstrations.

CYNIC: People who were against your coming here to Vermont realize that they didn't want you to be reappointed. What are your expectations of what is going to happen come December, when you come up for reappointment. What type of Michael Parenti wants and expects to be reappointed.

Hockey Rumors False

Contrary to the rumors running around the campus, the admission charge for students to Varsity Hockey games this year will be $7.50. Dick Whittier, Sports Information Director in the Public Relations Office, rejected any notion of an increase of student price at hockey games this year. There had been rumors that the price had been set at $1.50.

Calendar/Announcements

Educational Innovations

Last Friday, Nov. 5, Dean Phillips of Continuing Education was host to a discussion of the Open University concept of education. Also discussed at the meeting were the ideas of "Design your own major" and "University Without Walls." Each of these are alternatives to the class-credit requirement system of college study.

There will be another meeting this week for those interested in exploring these ideas possibly with their own future college curriculum in mind. The meeting will be in North Lounge, Billings Center, at 4 pm on Thursday, Nov. 11.

Thank You

OVP would like to thank The Allenheim Farms in South Hero, Carpenter's Greenhouse in Colchester, and The Sage Food Service for their donations of pumpkins, cider and cookies, to make our Big Brother Halloween Party a success.

WRUV-AM Returns The Evening News

"WRUV-AM has recently reorganized its News and Sports Department. Under the supervision of John Reid and Miles Tadhope, the 6:30 Evening Report is back on the air. While National News is covered by the ABC Network, local coverage is up to us to obtain. WRUV can't possibly be on the scene for all the news as it breaks, so we ask for your help. God Talk To Begin At St. Anselm

GOD TALK

If there is a God, then it is certainly difficult to put words around such a faith-statement. Is God an external Being, benignly watching the world from afar? or is God an inner part of every man? or both? or more?

Many of us have had Christianity shoved down our throats as we were growing up until it is hard to figure out what we believe. It is not good enough to accept everything we were taught as children; but it is also not good enough to reject everything we were taught simply because we had no choice in the matter. What we are called to do is to take a fresh and critical look at what we believe and why we believe it.

Beginning Tuesday evening, November 16, a series of small group discussions will begin to challenge and explore what we believe, with respect to God and Christianity. The group will be small, extremely informal, and open to most any kind of topic dealing with what it means to be a believer in God, and a follower of Christ—whatever form that following might take. No preaching, no evangelizing—just mutual sharing about what Christianity can mean.

If you would like to take a look at what you believe and hear what other people are thinking, join us at St. Anselm's Chapel, on Tuesday evenings, 7:00 pm, beginning this Tuesday, November 16.

Population Education

A National Conference on Population Education will convene in Bethesda, Maryland, near Washington, D.C., November 11-13, 1971. The conference will be the first national effort to see that population issues are presented in a professional and objective manner throughout U.S. schools.

The conference is being sponsored by the Population Reference Bureau, Inc., a private, nonprofit organization dedicated to the dissemination and analysis of population information and trends.

The subject of "population education" is becoming a matter of major concern to an increasing number of individuals and groups who recognize that extraordinary rates of population change—growth, urbanization, and changing composition—generate some of man's most difficult problems.

Participants will include Dr. William D. McGrew, Director of the National Science Foundation; Peter Muirhead, Deputy U.S. Commissioner of Education; and Dr. Louis Hellman, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Population Affairs of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. They will discuss the national needs in population education and the roles of various federal agencies in developing this new field.

Three members of the Commission on Population Growth and the American Future, which was set up last year to make recommendations to ease U.S. population problems, will also address the conference.

Working sessions will consider the following: (1) clarifying relationships with accepted disciplines and with other multi-disciplinary fields; (2) exploring alternative teaching and learning approaches and discussing identifying significant gaps in the availability of teaching materials, training, technical assistance and other needs of teachers and students; and (4) assessing alternative strategies for getting school systems to introduce the study of population dynamics into their curricula as rapidly as possible.

Members of the press who wish to attend the conference should contact Miss Kathryn Horsley of the Population Reference Bureau, Inc. at (202) 232-2288.

Art Film

"The New Abstraction," a film study on the painting of Frank Stella, Larry Poons, Morris Louis and Kenneth Noland will be shown at 8 p.m. Tuesday evening, November 16th in Votey Auditorium. The program is part of the Fleming Museum's Member Series but is open to non-members at a $3.50 admission charge.

Winter Weekend, And Athletic Fee Discussed

Rice announced that in a meeting with Dean Patzer and the other heads of student governments, Dean Patzer said that the proposed increase in athletic ticket prices would not go into effect this year. However, it is probable that the prices will be raised to $1.50 for student admission next September. The purpose of the increase is to help offset the deficit in the University's budget. At this meeting, improvements to the infirmary system were also discussed. No definite proposals have been made, but it is probable that the health fee will be raised next year.

A motion was passed to provide a maximum of $100 for publicity for the proposed craft fair. The fair will be held in the North Lounge of Billings Center sometime before Christmas. The motion made last week to provide $100 for a French-speaking coffee house in Slade Hall, was withdrawn. In its place, a motion was made to provide $75 for the initiation of the coffee house and, if after a month's time the coffeehouse was deemed a success, IRA would appropriate another $125 to maintain it. The rule of the house was suspended and the motion was passed by a majority.

The Social and Cultural

Committee reported that the next movie to be shown will be "Wait Until Dark," and "Whatever Happened to Baby Jane." The showing will be in Jeanne Manos on November 20. A request for money to help sponsor speakers for the Chinese Symposium of the Experimental Program was referred to the Social and Welfare Committee. The request is for $400 to cover four speakers with the Experimental Program matching the funds.

Dr. Miser, Director of Housing, appeared before the Council to get opinions on several administrative issues. The first issue was the matter of individual phones in student rooms. Only one complex is wired to handle these phones, Harris-Mills. It would cost the University an estimated $10,000 to wire the other dorms so that phones may be installed. The phones would be at the students' request, and responsibility, and expense and would be on a regular New England Telephone line. The minimum cost of one of these phones would be $75 per school year, this excludes any charges for long-distance calls.

Dr. Miser asked for views on the standing solicitation policy in the dorms. This policy prohibits any door to door solicitation in the residence halls. Another issue was interest in a commercial bus to take students to a nearby ski area during the winter months.

Elaine Stone of the Panhellenic Council asked if IRA would be interested in helping to sell their datebooks with a percentage going to IRA. Panhellenic had 4000 of these datebooks published, but has only sold 1000. The proposal is under consideration by IRA.

OVP is sponsoring an exciting new Pollution Program. A group from the newly formed Robinson Environmental Dorm has come up with OPERATION: SpaceShip Earth, an educational approach to fighting pollution and useless waste of the environment.

We are busy working right now in a sixth grade classroom of the Barnes Annex School here in Burlington. The project is in full swing, after our introductory field trip to Lincoln, Vermont. The project was the launching point from which we are developing basic Nature concepts with the kids. We are concentrating specifically on the changing seasons, the differing types of plants and animal communities and the intricacies of Mother Nature's wonderfully mysterious patterns of the wild. To develop these basic concepts we are using a fun mixture of felt boards, murals of fall colors and creations, terrariums, aquariums, books, stories, collections, photographs, microscopes, rocks and, best of all, enthusiasm!

We feel that in giving the kids a real understanding for and love of Nature, we will better be able to establish the threat and horror of the pollution of our one and only SpaceShip Earth. Therefore, once we have built a firm foundation of ecological knowledge for the class, we will delve into pollution.

In dealing with pollution,

Fee Discussed

Committee reported that the first issue was the matter of individual phones in student rooms. Only one complex is wired to handle these phones, Harris-Mills. It would cost the University an estimated $10,000 to wire the other dorms so that phones may be at the students' request, and responsibility, and expense and would be on a regular New England Telephone line. The minimum cost of one of these phones would be $75 per school year, this excludes any charge for long-distance calls.

Dr. Miser, Director of students to a nearby ski area during the winter months.

Elaine Stone of the Paralelism Council asked if IRA would be interested in Paralel had 4000 of these textbooks published, but has only sold 1000. The proposal is under consideration by IRA.

Then the day before Muhlenberg and in the back of the van
Our team was perfecting the affirmative plan
Dorcas and Doran were resting sore heads
As victims of plan attacks descend in their heads
While Dorcas coaching, Elaine at the wheel
Was proving to be a very good deal
When all of a sudden, there rose such a great sister
Even our negatives woke up to attend to the matter
East Stroudsburg met us in a great class
We ground their arguments into fine hash

Then what to our wondering eyes should appear
But Allenstown, Pennsylvania—we're here! We're here!
At a little old tournament of caliber so slick
We're sure to achieve 'cause we're really slick.
Mike took Laine to judge a first round
While we slumbered & talked & lounged all around
When Mike came back he looked ready to cry
He knocked on our doors & weakly said "Hi".
To a meeting he summoned our confident crew
One took at his face—another knew

He said, "Twice a mistake, we've nothing to hide,
But, steel yourself kids—this contest is SWITCH-SIDE!"
No panic, no fainting, a mere state of shock
What should we do? We decided to talk Alternatives—forget, refuse, don't try
We could thereby stay safe, remain high and dry
But would that be fun? And what about learning?
Besides, for those trophies we had some yearning
We had Mike and Laine, we knew how to work
We labored during party-time and got called jerks
The first round, that night, was neatly arranged
We debated our last sides—nothing foreign or strange

In one single night we learned new approaches
We worked 'til we dropped and so did our coaches
The second round we each had our opposite side
Mike & Laine heard us and beamed with pride
We'd all won decisively, we'd come through it fine
Although Dan's best argument was "My God, an outline!"
The third round was difficult, we didn't know how we'd done
We were back on our own sides, which wasn't such fun
The rounds were late, we were all tired
We were having trouble keeping our fire
Now the fourth round, Dan and Jim switching side
Thirteen by accident instead of design
They met a negative with a counter-plan
Their counter-need demolished Dan Dorcas and Doran finished quite tense
Dorcas, at the podium, juggled cigarettes and pens
At the end of the tournament, we all felt down
We didn't believe we'd won more than two rounds
But there was a ceremony which we had to attend
They awarded individual events, and THEN—Third Novice Speaker—Donna Harlow Dear Lord!
We didn't just blow it—we got an award!
Dorcas was tawny as we all shook heads
And then, First Novice Team—Jim and Dan!
Oh joy! Oh bliss! Oh fantastic marvel
Two pieces of genuine Italian marble
Outscored, 7-1, Affirmative case 4-0
We'd come unprepared, but who was to know?
A happy night at a Holiday Inn
"Thank on our sides!" Well, something—our side!

Muhlenberg
The debaters who attended Muhlenberg were: Dan Moore, Jim Menzies, Doran Metzger, and Donna Harlow, who summed up the highlights of the trip in the following creative endeavor—which she composed in the car ride back to Vermont.

Genesee
The Vanity Squad which attended the Genesee tournament consisted of: Jim Murray, Ellen Hoffman, Jon Lash, and Ric Willey, with careful coaching supplied by Pat Neal.

Ellen and Jan, teamed just prior to the tournament, did surprisingly well, losing only two rounds out of eight in the eliminations. In the octofinal round, however, they lost to Nore Dame on a close ballot.
The decision put them at fifth place over-all.

Although Hon and Ric maintained their usual high standard of grace and eloquence they ended with a 3-5 record, which didn't qualify them for the final rounds.

Despite their mediocre showing in debate, Hon and Ric did manage to emerge somewhat rowdy party at the Holiday Inn where they were staying. Even coach Pat Neal was astounded when he returned from the coaches' party to find a room full of parting debaters and Jon and Ric downstairs in the bar fraternizing with two lovely Southern Connecticut debaters.

Maryland
Coach Pete Lardy, otherwise known as the "silver tongued fox" in debate circles, headed up the trip to the individual events tournament at the University of Maryland.

Accompanying him were four students: Cornelia Burr—specializing in extemporaneous speaking, Jeanne Spence—specializing in oral interpretation, Tom Calzagni, and Michael Schwartz—both specializing in persuasive speaking. Coach Pete Lardy stated that he specialized in after dinner drinking.

The Maryland tournament was certainly a difficult one, with over forty of the country's best universities sending speakers. The final rounds were judged largely by congressmen and congressional aides.

Although they didn't return with any trophies the coaches were extremely pleased with the performance of the four speakers, who did get several first place ratings in individual rounds.

The daylight brought a spectacular view
Dan in his shivers—the mud saw him too
The final trip back with "cuddles & cuddles" to do

Last weekend was a busy one for the Lawrence Forensic Union, with UVM debaters attending two tournaments, and a contingent of individual events specialists being sent to yet another tournament.

Two teams of novice debaters were sent to the Muhlenberg tournament in Allenstown, Pennsylvania. They returned from their first tournament of the year with first and fourth places over-all, having lost only one round during the entire tournament.

The varsity tripped to the Genesee tournament in Genesee, New York where one of the two participating teams compiled a 6-2 record in elimination rounds, and was defeated on a close 2-1 decision in the final round, ending up fifth place over-all in the difficult competition.

Four individual events speakers attended an excellent and tough tournament at the

they closely missed qualifying for the final round, the coaches were pleased with the performance of this new addition to the L.F.U., attending their first tournament.

Blood Drive Trophy Presentation

Recently trophies were presented to those organizations which had the highest student participation in the UVM semiannual Blood Drive sponsored by the Ethan Allen Rifles Honorary Society. The blood drive took place in October and netted 748 pints which brings the total collected since the first drive in December 1950 to 15,454 pints.

The trophies were presented by Lieutenant Colonel William C. Hapanski, Professor of Military Science and Robert M. Field, President of Ethan Allen Rifles and a senior majoring in civil engineering. The organizations, their accepted the award.

representatives and the percent of participation were as follows: Gamma Phi Beta represented by senior, Martha Rose, received the Hine Memorial Trophy with 85% participation. Slade Hall had 17.3% participation and received the W.S.G.A.
Trophy as the top women's dorm. Genevieve Laidlaw, the resident advisor accepted the trophy. Gary Towns, a senior, accepted the Strickler Memorial Trophy for Alpha Gamma Rho as the top fraternity with 100% participation.
Converse Hall received the Lieutenant Douglas Orvis Memorial Trophy with 25.1% participation.

Thematic Conclusion Today

Real Student Union Comments On The Pentagon Papers

Students are congratulating themselves because they were published. These documents show how official had and connived their way into the press. The "great exposure" has been treated as a press, for liberalism, and for our system. The Pentagon Papers Do Not Offer an Explanation for Vietnam. They may contain the history of an honest history but their authors do not into the concrete interests of America's man the nature of the Pax Americana the Indochina was intended to advance. The Study is with facts but weak on their interpretation. It spectacle of justice. Disagreements between them, but little direct evidence about the of their analysis. The Bundys and the Rotows seems even in their criminality. By limiting their documents to the so-called "decision-making New York Times and the rest of the press, abandoned the story, narrowed the scope of the Pentagon Papers. Have been used as an for the American system. The publication of been taken as evidence of the basic residence system. The press has patted itself on the courage while its pundits speak glibly of the anti-government decision as an indication not here yet, by golly. For the most part, the says the inner councils of government as some charged debate. Here is American pluralism at CIA is to be congratulated for the accuracy and, while the General is condemned for their job-away attitudes. When one is drawn into this official game, one is expected to support on side rather than call for the over-throw of the game.

Pentagon Papers Don't Necessarily Bring Them War Clear. By portraying the war as a progression the Study may very well soften the culpability of makers and their collective effort. The has actually adopted this position. They view the tragedy without villains, war crimes without without liars, a process of immaculate But they might consider that Vietnam is just one of interventions by the United States, such as Cuba, Laos, the Congo, Dominican Republic, Laos, Indonesia—all done to increase U.S. power without any for American involvement.

UWGB Strives To Become Environmental Mecca

by Rick Mills
GREEN BAY, WIS. — The cab made its way through the dirty, dark, polluted college town. Tall chimneys emitted a bad black smoke in a city where that kind of black isn't beautiful. And then the vehicle pulled in front of a puddle of dirty water near a slightly larger puddle of dirty water called Lake Michigan near a construction site near an environmental science building. I had arrived.

"I don't know," said the Green Bay cab driver. "It's just like any other university, I suppose."

At first glance it looks just like any other university. I suppose—with 3,500 students showing their way to class, books under arms, girls under arms, long hair, short hair, blacked-out floors, white cement walls, bulleting boards announcing the usual bull.

At second glance it looks just like any other University.

And at third and fourth and fifth... In fact, it's only until you find out what's going on there (and, more important, what isn't) that you discover it's not just like any other university. It's the University of Wisconsin at Green Bay, its acronym being UWGB, the sound one emits upon getting a mouthful of smog, which is exactly one of the things this college is dedicated to remedy.

Dubbed "Survival U," "Ecology U" and the "University of Involvement," UWGB is all of the above. The entire school has been organized around the theme of environmental crisis. A lot of them. A lot of crisis.

It's the first of its kind. Structured with a unique semi-structure, it's the free school as concept, complete with bio degradable students who study the solution to pollution, the psychology of ecology as they blythe and recycle their ways through four years of time-oriented education.

UWGB, all acronym aside, is a breath of fresh air in an otherwise polluted academic environment. It opened its doors to students in 1969. And word has spread. Now, more than two years later, ecologically minded students from all over the country flock to this environmental mecca.

But the college itself is polluted with many undistinguished problems—on 80% commuter campus, a minor housing crisis, student apathy (and apathy about the apathy). But certainly never a complaint about irrelevant Education. UWGB is anything but irrelevant — the answer to any activist's academic reform visions. If anything, it just might be too relevant.

A student selects an environmental problem that "forms the center of his intellectual interests," according to the school catalog. The structure is based on environmental themes rather than standard disciplines. There are four colleges within the University: Environmental Sciences, Community Sciences, Human Biology and Creative Communication.

Curriculum includes such subjective subjects as "Visions of Man," "Ecosystems Analysis," "The Philosophy of Leisure," independent study programs that include community communication and involvement — as well as the old standby standards like accounting and physics. But this university ties them all together.

"Frankly," says chancellor Frank Weidner, "we've tried to build an institution that says the cop-out from society isn't welcome here. There must be a feeling of social responsibility — relevance — in every area. Let's not pollute this university with things that lack meaning."

It is this man who acts the part. Complete with a simple, folk-y charm, Weidner wears students into involvement like cows into an educationally verdant pasture. But sometimes, as they say, the pasture is greener on the other side. For many people UWGB is that greener side. But for many UWGB students, their pastures are more grassy.

"Do I sound bitter?" asked one bitter coed after she had listed several reasons why she hated the school — from big classes to big names to her disdain for student apartments. "If there weren't any classes, I'd like it better." But there are classes. And there are students who like it better.

One student who does like the school diagnosed students' problems as such: "They come here expecting utopia. You know, this school is supposed to be a big, innovative thing — now, different, all that. Then they come here and they're disappointed that it's not Walden III. But they forget that they have as much a role in making it innovative as the staff does."

Or, as Karen Weidner — yes, the chancellor's student daughter — says, "People think it's all going to be there when they come. But it's not just going to come up to your doorstep and buzz." Her father agrees.

"Things take a while to implement fully," Weidner said. "There is no such thing as a perfect human institution. And I hope we never have one because that means we've stopped growing and changing."

UWGB is growing and changing. But it isn't a perfect human institution. It's got its problems. But it also has potential, which few other institutions have. It's got potential for change, but, more important, its students have the potential for changing the world.

Recommended Changes In Course Dropping Procedures

The following letter was sent by Bill Scaife, a Graduate Teaching Fellow in Physics, to Dr. Alfred Rollins, Vice-President of the University for Academic Affairs, concerning the procedures involving a student's options to drop a course after the prescribed date. Dr. Rollins' reply follows.

Dr. Alfred Rollins
Academic Vice-President Waterman Building

Dear Dr. Rollins:

The letter concerns the present academic policies of the University of Vermont regarding undergraduates dropping of courses. It is my understanding that after a specified date, a student who drops a course receives one of two "grades": WP or WF. Apparently, WP does not affect the student's grade average, whereas WF is the numerical equivalent of a fail. Both of these grades appear on the student's permanent record. I find this present policy objectionable on several points, and wish to outline my objections as well as some alternative possibilities.

Equating the grades WP and F, numerically, is not giving the student due credit for realizing that he is in academic trouble and should retreat. This is particularly important for freshmen students, whose first semester course load is usually planned and delivered somewhat impersonally by their academic advisors.

A typical case of this situation came to my attention recently. One of my students found himself failing two courses (out of six). Upon the advice of his academic advisor, he withdrew from one, taking a WF. Upon my advice, he decided to tacitly fail the other, so as not to jeopardize his other courses which he is passing at various levels. (His advisor will not allow him to take two WFs in one semester.) He is a freshman, and acquired his two failing courses by expressing and interest in engineering. He probably will not re-take them, since he has decided to alter his career plans. This student should not be penalized academically for this decision: he arrived at it as early in the semester as could be expected, yet finds himself with two failing grades!

In a more general sense, engendering the belief in students that there is no "honorable" escape from earlier decisions is at the very best encouraging neuroses. The more great effects of this sort of mentality are certainly visible to us daily. I doubt if the University of Vermont wishes to encourage this attitude.

A student with this particular "neurosis" came to me recently for academic help. He had clearly overextended himself, and needed to reduce his course load. Yet he felt obligated to continue his work (rather, his anxiety?) for the semester, because he felt a drop would always be held against him. Under the current policy his attitude was justifiable; this is unreasonable.

A possible alternative to this present policy would be the following:

- (1) The drop date with academic penalty be eliminated. An early drop date, beyond which no tuition rebate is given should be instituted to insure financial solvency of the University.
- (2) No indication of withdrawals be included in student records.
- (3) Enrollment in a course be terminable by the student, up to the final examination. Failure to take, or hand in, the final exam would constitute withdrawal. Once a final examination is handed to the proctor by the student, his enrollment is non-cancelable.
- (4) Regular progress towards a degree should be ensured by requiring specific cumulative credit hours at regular intervals. These requirements should be based on a five year completion of the bachelor's degree, in order to allow reasonable flexibility to the student.

This letter is necessarily abbreviated. Hopeful the salient points of my opinion have been made clear to you. I will gladly discuss this matter with you further.

Thanking you for your time, I am,

Sincerely yours,

William A. Scaife,

Dear Mr. Scaife:

I have your letter of November 1.

I have referred the matter for their consideration to the Curriculum Committee of the Faculty Senate and to the deans of the various colleges. This is a matter of faculty action and any initiative on the matter should be taken by the appropriate faculty committee rather than by the administration.

Sincerely,

On The Death Of Duane Allman

readily available, popular" image. Duane Allman did not write songs about "The Revolution," did not use "Gibson exclusively," and did not once form a "super group." Reflecting this individual character was his innovative guitar style. Standing quietly on stage, he implemented neither a wall of thousand-dollar amplifiers, nor a flailing right arm to achieve his sound. (When playing at UVM he used a borrowed Fender Twin-Reverb amplifier—two twelve inch speakers, 80 watts, a value of $400.00). In fact, he used a tight-fitting glass medicine bottle on the index finger of his left hand, in such a manner as to achieve a unique and beautiful "side-bottle" electric sound. Those who have heard him play can have nothing but respect for his guitar playing and musical ability.

From the obituaries of the November first New York Times:

"Allman, Duane: On Oct. 30, 1971 the officers and staff of Atlantic Records express their deep sorrow over the untimely death of Duane Allman, our friend and Artist. His music was an inspiration to everyone."

Almet Ertegun, Jerry Wexler, Nesuhi Ertegun the two Ertegun and Wexler are Atlantic's biggies and by nature of this are heavy influences in rock today. Duane Allman will not be the subject of cover stories for Time or Newsweek, but the fact that these men took the effort to publicly express such personal sentiments is indicative of the mood that people "in the know" in rock are feeling. They know.

Listen to the Allman Brothers records. Listen to Duane Allman's studio recordings (in particular his work on some of Aretha Franklin's albums). Listen to him on Lays by Derek and the Dominoes (and hear why Eric Clapton, rock's premier guitarist, wanted Allman in his band). Duane Allman is worth listening to. He was a leader in rock music.

lot of groups while owning the Fillmore, introduced the Allmans as "The finest group ever to play on this stage." The excellence of each one of the remaining band members makes their future together an interesting question.

Even more interesting (and gratifying in this age of the "superstar") is the character of Allman himself. Abandoning his well-paying job in the studio, he walked out on a financial limb in forming the Allman Brothers. When the group did gain recognition, he eschewed the

A Warped Look At UVM

Editor's Note: "UVM 648 Needs Weeding Out," from the October 7 issue of the Addison County Independent, Middlebury, Vermont.

Another UVM coed living off-campus reportedly was attacked while in bed at 3 a.m. last Thursday in her Burlington apartment.

One's first reaction, upon reading such a report in the paper, is to assume that the city of Burlington ostensibly is filling up with mad men, and no girl is safe in her bed.

A little applied common sense, however, might indicate that all college coeds have never been the prime example of unadulterated innocence, and the men do not climb rear outside stairs onto a roof and let themselves down to a bathroom window (with removable screen) without some other reason than the fact that there is a girl in the room.

Men and women are pretty much the same in the work-a-day world. There are some good ones and some bad ones in both genders.

We like to think, somewhere in these days of overcrowded campuses and new buildings, all new and old, and sustained by the tax paying middle class American society, that UVM could be a great deal more selective in its choice of teachers, who set the examples for the young.

Pentagon Papers...

the 78 respondents (56.4%) had standard budgets.

Deficits Reflect Size of Problem

Six universities participating in the financial survey reported that they expected an operating deficit for 1970-71. The amounts of the deficits ranged from $440,421 for the University of North Dakota to approximately $1 million for the University of Vermont.

The other institutions noting that they expected to have a deficit were: University of Delaware, University of Hawaii, Rutgers University and the University of Tennessee System.

The list of universities operating in the red would have been much longer had a number of institutions not taken extraordinary steps—many of which can be made only once—to avert deficits. Seventeen universities noted that they had taken unusual measures to avoid running a deficit.

Freezes on hiring and reductions in or curtailment of expenditures for maintenance, equipment, travel and printing were mentioned.

South Dakota State University noted that it reduced course offerings. Wayne State University said that department heads have been instructed to obtain funds from outside sources for program changes.

The University of Washington, which is legally prohibited from having a deficit, reported that it reduced its operating budget by $4,270,000 during 1970-71. This required the elimination of 62 faculty positions previously budgeted.

Appropriations Decline Affects Academic Quality

When state appropriations to public universities decline or remain static, academic quality is seriously threatened. Extreme economy measures, made necessary by cuts in appropriations, often mean overcrowded classrooms, a smaller choice of courses, fewer teachers and a dearth of new programs. In addition, inadequate state appropriations almost always mean that the student must pay more.

The University of Vermont, which ended fiscal 1970-71 with an operating deficit of approximately $1 million, wiped out all current reserves to balance its operating budget. Despite the deficit, the university received an increase of only 34% in its 1971-72 appropriation. As a result, the university was forced to raise its tuition and fees—already among the highest in the country for public institutions—to an even higher level. State residents now pay annual tuition and fees of $1,082.

Funding restrictions at the University of Washington, in large part due to a 7.8% decrease in the University's state appropriation, have resulted in a reduction of 400 positions in the classified personnel staff and approximately 260 positions in the faculty and sub-faculty. The university's state appropriation for 1971-72 was cut by 7.8% compared with the 1970-71 appropriation.

The University of Rhode Island increased required fees for 1971-72 by $300 in an effort to cope with a 5.64% decrease in its state appropriation. In a letter to parents of undergraduate students, URI president, Dr. Warner A. Baum, explained that "this step was essential to minimize cutbacks in the academic program."

Besides raising student fees, the university also has eliminated all varsity athletics except football and basketball, frozen faculty and administrative hiring, eliminated all proposed pay raises and cut out most activities at its branch campus in West Greenwich. Despite these measures President Baum, has stated that cutbacks will "set the university back so drastically it will take at least a decade to fully recover."

The University of Montana, faced with a 1.77% cut in its state appropriation, also predicts that it will take a decade for the university to recover from drastic economy measures that the institution has been forced to make. For the first year of the 1971-73 biennium, the university will have a ten percent campus-wide reduction in supplies and expenses, capital equipment and temporary personnel. No new full-time faculty or staff will be employed, and the number of graduate teaching-assistants will be reduced by 20%. The university will not be able to offer the desired number of sections in some undergraduate courses because no new teachers will be hired.

Movie Review:

Kotch-Human Comedy

'Radical' Ideas Explained...

Kotch

Joseph Kotcher Walter Matthau Erica Hernandez Deborah Winters Wilma Kotcher Felicia Farr Gerald Kotcher Charles Aidman Vera Kotcher Ellen Geer

Directed by Jack Lemmon, screenplay John Paxton from the novel by Katharine Hopkins, music Marvin Hamlisch, Running time 113 minutes, Rated GP.

This delightful human comedy marks the debut of Jack Lemmon as a director. A fine comic actor, Lemmon demonstrates in this film that he is also a fine comic director. He gets the best performances out of each of his actors that is possible. He is thus able to produce a unified comic film in which all the performances support and complement each other.

The movie is, in a sense, partly a horror film about an old man whose family wants him out of the house. But because he is sick or useless but because he gets on the wife's nerves. Kotch realizes the motivation behind them wanting him to leave and knows it is only temporary. The film then becomes a warm human comedy.

All the laurels must go to Walter Matthau as the outstanding actor in the film. His portrayal of a seventy year old man is excellent. He loves to talk and, on no provocation, will elaborate on things long past. When confronted by an angry mother whose little girl's behind, he patted in the park.

he rambles on about baseball. Kotch has not lost his marbles, however, and is a very shrewd and intelligent man. He loves children and dotes on his grandson Duncan.

Kotch leaves his son and daughter-in-law and travels a bit. He returns home and finds a card from the teenager who babysat for Duncan and who is now pregnant. He goes off to aid her and by helping her, he enjoys himself. Kotch is a lovable character in spite of his talkativeness and is always willing to help others. The adventures of Kotch and the teenager, Erica, provide many rewarding moments of tenderness and comedy. Each of these two elements is balanced so as not to overpower the other and make the film sloppy with sentiment or slapstick with comedy. The conception of Kotch as an old man is a far cry from the crabby characterization of an old man that is found in I Never Sang for My Father.

A film is only as good as the sum of its parts and in Kotch like in See No Evil, all the parts are superbly done. The music and photography are good and Kotch is a film that should not be missed. Movies like these, which are neither overly violent or dirty should be big box office draws.

support do you expect and kind of problems, do you think will come up?

Parent: Well, I can tell you what kind of support I've had. My department had recommended an over whelming by positive and favorable decision for my contract renewal. The department seems to be very enthusiastically on my side. That includes everybody, in it regardless of their own political views. The policy committee took just a few minutes on my whole recommendation and record and issued a positive recommendation without a moment's hesitation. And the Dean of the College of Arts & Sciences has issued a positive renewal. So, everybody, so far, has issued positive statements.

CYNIC: Is there any particular reason why you are not going to become involved?

Parent: Well, I don't think that one gets really meaningful substantive change by working in electoral politics. I think that the function of the electoral system is to act as a exorbant and a deflector, it is to give people the illusion that they are meaningfully involved in the electoral process when in fact they are not involved in that process.

It's major function is to legitimize the on going system legitimacy. It is therefore essentially a dishonest system the one possible good function that the electoral system might have for radicals is that it allows them the opportunity to air certain issues which he ordinarily could not. At election time he can go around and ring door bells and get his views across, without any hopes of winning a election, but at least with the hope of perhaps convincing people and electing them to slot of issues that the standard candidates never talk about. One of the other discussing things about most of the other election politics is the irrelevancy, the stupidity, and its superficiality of most of the candidates. They talk about their style, their image, their packaging, who has lived in Vermont longer. Who's more modern, who's more solid and old-fashioned. They talk about everything except the very, real issues, of war, militarism, class suppression, poverty, imperialism, abroad, what the United States is doing to other peoples and countries. They don't talk about those things, and those are the real issues.

CYNIC: So what you're saying is that the radical, or your position on people who agree with you, should work during election years only to air their views?

Parent: I would say generally that is true.

CYNIC: So for this election what are your plans on the Radical Union?

Parent: I don't think we're going to get this election as such. We're organizing around the election as such. We may be organizing for another demonstration. We try to organize for radical political education. We sometimes organize around immediate issues. When the Navy recruiters come on this campus, we greeted them a couple of days ago and had a direct, peaceful, and perfectly legal confrontation with them in which we presented their time with essential questions about the Navy's role and what the Navy has been doing in morale. They refused to discuss with us because they weren't here to exchange ideas, they were here to collect cannon fodder.

CYNIC: What did you expect of Richard Nixon?

Parent: I expected just what we got. Terrible conservative appointments to the Supreme Court, an economic policy that has been consistently favored increasing the profits of the corporate economy, and the large corporations, that has cut welfare, that has done very little for the ordinary wage earner. I think Nixon has operated true to form with one surprise, that is his desire to go to Feking. Which I think has surprised most of us. He is a remarkably clever man. He actually has the public convinced that he is winding down the war in Vietnam, and it is not at all clear to me that the war is being wound down. What is being phased out is the ground war, probably because the American Troops are simply refusing to fight, more and more. But, the war, the killing at Lao, Cambodia, and Vietnam, through continued air attack, saturation bombing, and such genocidal kind of bombing is still going on.

CYNIC: There seems to be a whole sense of apathy at this university in regard to politics. Do you think that's?

Parent: The apathy was there before the realization that we couldn't do much about things. I'm not recommending therefore that the people resign themselves to the status quo because you can't change it usually through ordinary process.

But, what I am recommending is that people really start organizing radical alternatives and start really organizing people to change consciousness, so that someday we can change this whole system.

CYNIC: When you talk about changing the system, what do you mean?

Parent: I mean instituting a democratic, humane, anti-imperialist, socialist government. Rather than an undemocratic, in humane, capitalist, imperialistic government, as what we have now. I believe that the United States is not presently fostering the conditions of life. It fosters the conditions of profit, it destroys life here at home, it destroys life in other places, like Greece and Vietnam. And what we need is the kind of government that is operating from a different set of values. 2 or 3% of the population does not control the 15 or 20 billion dollars of corporate profits every year for its own use. Yet we have poverty when it comes to ordinary decent social services like mass transportation, housing, public education, conservation, pollution control, and these kind of things. What I want is actually very moderate, it's not that easy to get it through. See, I maintain that the ordinary liberal goals, I'm not thinking of some vision of Utopia, the ordinary liberal goals can not be achieved in this society, by liberal methods. There will have to be finally real mass disruption, mass strikes, mass disobedience. The army will probably have to disaffect and turn itself around. And then only when we get these kinds of crisis will we have some kind of real change in the structure of the government, and in the wealth of America and how that wealth is being used. That would mean a kind of large scale socialist movement.

CYNIC: So the Radical Union is trying to change the sense of consciousness?

Parent: Right, political consciousness.

CYNIC: What else can they do to try and change the urban problems that you were talking about?

Parent: Some people are saying that radicals are proposing a lot of changes but you aren't really getting involved in the urban problems.

Parent: Sometimes acute radicals are just the opposite, you're getting involved and you don't even know what it is that you want to change to we're accused of A. We're accused of not having any ideas about what we want to do, of being ideologues and doctrinaires, of having all sorts of ideas of what we want to do, of having no vision of the future, and we're accused of having some fanciful vision of the future. I think that we are in some kind of pre-revolutionary stage. And I think that there are large sections of the American population that are starting to get wise to what is going on there's going to be some substantial displacement. There's going to be a greater depression. The system is in trouble. It really is relying more and more on coercion. One of symptoms of a bankrupt system is that it no longer gets the automatic empowering responses from its people. It's got to use all these things to get people to start co-operating in its ways. And sooner or later, I think that system is going to crack.

CYNIC: What is that crack going to result in?

Parent: There may be violence, but I don't think that we should talk of violence in the future tense. Violence is here now. Twenty-eight Black Panthers have been shot down dead in cold blood in police raids on the headquarters. Four Kent State students were shot dead and their murderers are scot-free. There's violence going on all the time. When the Blacks started moving. People started to say "are you Blacks going to use violence?" The Blacks, people have feared violence for 400 years, they were bombed, tortured, whipped, lynched, destroyed in every conceivable way violently. Only when there is a potential for violence. Become a two way street do people get concerned about violence. But it's violence that you are worrying about, then look to what your government is doing. 80% of its budget is dedicated to violence and destruction. I don't think that there will be that much violence. Revolutions are generally not very violent. The violence is in trying to sustain on unaffiliated population. Violence comes in the kind of mass repression. I think that there may be some violence, but I don't think it's going to be anything as horrendous as the violence we are now facing today. If you take all the violence the left has done, every bombing, every threatening of a window, every grappling with a policeman, it doesn't add up to the amount of violence perpetrated in one B-52 raid, last week in Cambodia.

Canadian folk-singer Gordon Lightfoot will perform on the Lane Series on Monday, November 15, 8:30 pm, at Memorial Auditorium.

There are a few seats available for this concert and they may be purchased in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For information and reservations, tel. 656-3418.

Playing his own compositions, and accompanying himself on an unsimplified 6 and 12-string guitar, Lightfoot will announce his program of songs from the stage.

The balladeer's approach to folk music is one of clarity, purity of tone and diction, and a sensitive confidence. He is strongly influenced by country music, and he has a country swing which lifts the tempo to the highest level.

Some of Lightfoot's early songs include "For Lovin' Me," "Did She Mention My Name," "Bitter Green," and "Early Morning Rain." Recent hits are "The Doomed Song," "Cotton Candy," "You Could Read My Mind," "Love and Me," "Ribbon of Darkness," and "Summer Side of Life."

Lightfoot is a prolific song writer, whose songs speak to matters of universal concern, always in a soft-spoken, understated manner.

Many singers have sung and recorded his songs including Bob Dylan, Peter, Paul and Mary, and Sylvia, Johnny Cash, Tommy Makem and the Clancy Brothers, Keir Buller, Belafonte and Anne Williams. The list is endless.

Gordon Lightfoot was born in Orillia, Ontario, a small town set between two lakes 80 miles north of Toronto. His astrological sign, he claims, Watch Out For Falling Rocks. He grew up and went to school in Orillia, spending his summers driving trucks in Northern Ontario and playing bands.

"I finished high school there," he says, "and had to choose between going to a university, going to some kind of professional thing, which wasn't quite ready for." He chose neither, but in 1958, attended a now defunct music school Westlake College of Los Angeles. His instrument was the piano and his field of study was orchestration.

Women's Centennial Celebration Special Issue

Madeline Harwood is presently the only woman on the University of Vermont Board of Trustees.

Madeline Harwood: UVM's Sole Woman Trustee

Vermont's Senator Madeline Harwood is in the unique position of being the sole woman on the University of Vermont's Board of Trustees. Recognizing the rarity of her opportunity, the Women's Centennial Celebration Committee sought to learn Mrs. Harwood's attitudes about woman's role in the man's world and asked her to apply them to her own life in government and politics.

Mrs. Harwood is a charming person who is able to deal directly and effectively with pertinent issues. As a member of the Vermont Senate, she is one of the most active female legislators in the State.

A resident of Manchester, serious tone she continued, "Women have come a long way in the past two generations in being recognized for more capabilities than merely their domestic talents. It has been fifty years since they were granted the right to vote. I am in favor of women receiving greater recognition for their talents and abilities; however, I would like to make it clear—I am not in favor of, nor do I support the entire philosophy of the Women's Liberation movement. But it is my belief that every woman should compete for her desired position in the world of business and politics and not be given preferential treatment because of sex. I do not feel that she should be discriminated against."

The Senator remarked that it is still rather early to evaluate her effectiveness on the Board of Trustees since she has held her office only a short time. Being the only woman on a committee is not a new experience for her. She appreciates the fact that she has always been treated as an equal.

Obviously, Mrs. Harwood has supported her philosophy in practice with relatively few confrontations. Perhaps she is more fortunate than many of her contemporaries. She believes so. In fact, being a woman appears to have a clear advantage for her. She concluded her observations with a smile: "The traditional courtesies which gentlemen pay to ladies should be appreciated by all women."

How Times Have Changed!

Women's Handbook, 1934-35:

All University women except Seniors shall be in their residences by eight o'clock week-nights except when having a social evening or attending a college function.

Freshmen shall be allowed one night a week out until ten and one after ten, until after Easter vacation.

Centennial Celebration Committee Launched; UVM Women Cited

Emancipation! This is what the Board of Trustees had in mind one hundred years ago when they legislated an act which would allow women to attend the University of Vermont. The courage and conviction of this Board made UVM the first such institution in New England to grant educational opportunities to women. History was made in 1872.

It has been said that, indeed women have come a long way. You don't have to be a hard core feminist or a woman's libber to know and acknowledge the fact that there have been sometimes startling changes in roles now open and some yet closed to women. UVM has had its share of evolutionary growth and achievement for women and 100 years could not pass unheralded. A group of four agreed and joined together to form the Centennial Celebration Committee.

Debbie Clement, Donna Van Kirk, Jackie Gribbons, and Carol Brown have been working since September to help give impetus and direction to programs which could highlight women's potentials, contributions and achievements in the many faceted and controversial roles women can and do play.

To date, many groups and individuals have given their support to this effort among them S.A. Speakers Bureau, the CYNIC, I.R.A., Panhellenic Council, Mortar Board, Public Relations and academic departments. With their much needed help the University looks toward programs ranging from a mini-crash survival course on "how to make it in a man's world" to a women's world workshop later this year.

The wives of academic deans, Vice Presidents and President comprise the membership of the honorary Centennial Celebration Committee. Chaired by Mrs. Edward C.

(Jean) Andrews and Mrs. William (Ann) Macmillan, this group will plan and conduct a women's world workshop later this year.

The University of Vermont has continued to be among the leaders of institutions of higher education in helping women to learn about and understand themselves. The second hundred years should be an interesting sequel to the first.

Miss Rankin Harris, Former Dean Of Women, Returns For UVM Dedication

by Deborah Clement

Miss Rankin Harris, Dean of Women at UVM from 1954-1966, and presently the Executive Director of the National Association of Women Deans and Counselors, a professional organization for women engaged in counseling and guidance work and in student personnel, visited UVM on November 14, 1977, for the dedication of Harris Hall.

NAWDC is an associated organization of the National Education Association and maintains a headquarters office in Washington, D.C. The organization offers its members a vantage point on national legislation and the activities of other national education groups.

When asked for her remarks on the future of women in education Miss Harris replied:

"What lies ahead for women in education is inextricably tied up with the future of women's rights... Things are changing, but slowly and tediously. The abiding concerns of women are coming all the way up to the headlines—at least to the small column heads on the inside pages."

"There is more than coincidence to the almost simultaneous surges for the rights of blacks, Chicanos, Spanish speaking people, Indians, students and women in the U.S.A. 'Civil rights are human rights' is a slogan of the National Education Association's Center for Human Relations."

Miss Harris then referred to the research report by Pat Cross (found elsewhere in this edition): "Women face certain problems because they are women... Women as women in our society share a problem with other groups of people that have not been a part of the dominant culture, and that is one of diminished self-confidence. Much as members of ethnic minorities have been encouraged to set their aspirations 'realistically' for jobs that would be 'open' to them, women have been encouraged to think about elementary school teaching rather than college teaching, about typing instead of business management, and about becoming nurses rather than doctors."

Historically, the subordinate status of women has been entrenched in our legal system. Women all over the country have been working for the step is to get the sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary committee to release it. A statement in the Washington POST on October 20, 1971, said the Sen. Mansfield does not expect a vote on the floor of the Senate until February, 1972.

In regard to the above amendment, Miss Harris referred to the April, 1971 issue of the YALE LAW JOURNAL.

call for an Equal Rights Amendment is not new in 1971. The Amendment has been introduced in every Congress since 1923, and has been given serious consideration of four occasions: 1946, 1950, 1953, and 1970. The Congressional debates and action on those occasions suggest that while there has often been strong support for an amendment to secure equal rights for women, there has also been doubt and disagreement about the concept of 'equality' and about the Amendment's (continued on page six)

Women In Higher Education

The following article has been excerpted from "Research Report Number 5" of the American Association for Higher Education, March 15, 1971. Miss Carol is director of college programs for the Center for Research and Development in Higher Education at the University of California.

a. Ignore it and hope that it will go away.

b. Treat it with mildly amused tolerance.

c. Begin to plan for the inevitable — the broader participation of women in all phases of college affairs.

d. Take an active role in exploring the issue and proposing solutions.

Only twenty years ago, 70% of all the student enrolled in institutions of higher education were men. But with each passing decade, the percentage of women pursuing degrees increased by five percent, going from 30% in 1948 to 40% in 1968. The National Center for Educational Statistics predicts that by 1978 women will constitute 45% of the national college student population.

The percentage of women in the labor force has increased at about the same rate during this period, rising from 29% in 1948 to 42% in 1968. Nine out of ten girls graduating from high school today will work at a paid job at some time during their lives, and the typical female high school graduate has more than 25 years of employment outside the home ahead of her.

It is a safe bet that 20 years ago the majority of women saw themselves in the future role of wife and mother, and it is still true today that almost all girls want to get married and raise families — as indeed do almost all boys. But only one female college freshman in four wants her future occupation to center around home and family, and only a minuscule 7% think that the activities of the adult woman in American society should be generally confined to home and family.

Women As Students

One of the cultural beliefs that delayed the entry of women into colleges and universities some 200 years beyond that of men was the conviction that women were not suited to work requiring sustained intellectual effort.

And the folk wisdom still conveys a nagging feeling that women are not quite as good as men at academic pursuits. Present day discussions are full of documentation of the extremely low proportion of women faculty in prestige colleges and of the reluctance of graduate and professional schools to admit too many women. And yet, the facts concerning the scholarship of women make any fears about academic dilution groundless. On the criteria by which we (continued on page six)

Bomb Scare Delays CYNIC

The VERMONT CYNIC was forced to delay publication for the second week in a row. While a machine malfunction forced the delay last week, a bomb threat in Billings on Tuesday night forced the CYNIC staff to evacuate Billings Center for the night. Since we have production for the CYNIC Tuesday evenings, we had no other choice but to delay publication. We regret the delay and appreciate your understanding.

Interview With Kaye Felt

Liberated Women Should Be Eligible For Draft

by Chris Gomborg and Jeri Covey

Kaye W. Felt is a lecturer in the Experimental Program, currently teaching a course entitled "The History of Women." She is also completing work on her Ph.D. in American History at St. George Williams University in Montreal.

CYNIC: What do you feel are the basic principles behind the women's liberation movement and what does it have to offer?

Felt: This is very difficult to put into a few sentences. Basically, it is the right of women to develop to their highest potential, to fulfill themselves without performing in certain stereotyped sex roles, an opening of opportunities at all levels. I suppose that it is in this way analogous to the Black Power movement. Black power gave support to the black as he tried to find his own identity. Women's lib is doing somewhat the same thing for women as they try to define themselves as people instead of as wives and mothers.

CYNIC: Why do you think it has taken so long for the women's liberation movement to come to the point it is at now?

Felt: It has taken so long for two or three reasons. Until women could separate sex from pregnancy (by birth control means), until you could control your own body, you cannot have equal rights per se. Secondly, women did not live long enough, which is something people do not realize. In 1900 the average life expectancy of women was 48 years. Now that is not very old. Presumably her child bearing years would be done by the time she is 35 years old. You can see that a woman has 40 years to live in which she is not primarily concerned with child bearing. She can choose now whether or not she is going to have children.

that is basically the result of cultural differences reinforced by our society. What are your feelings on this?

Felt: Yes, I would agree. There seem to be definite biochemical differences in women although no one is really sure of just what these differences are. But we are not born with psychologically innate differences. I think these are culturally imposed. It does not matter what kinds of difference come with the genetic structure, the culture does all the social and cultural reinforcing. I do not believe that anatomy is destiny!

CYNIC: What about the legal aspects of cultural

equalities? Should women be drafted? What about the divorce laws? How should one deal with these problems?

Felt: I say that women should be drafted, absolutely if there is a draft system. You see, part of women's liberation is that a woman should be self sufficient. She should not have a passive role in society, allowing herself to be constantly supported as she is now. Women's liberation supporters would say that all women should be economically independent, and I quite agree. You cannot have real equality until the woman has confidence and self respect—something that she has never had. Again, this is analogous to the Black Power movement. If you divorce, I don't believe you should have exorbitant alimony. Child support is a whole different story. The child belongs to both parents. The woman should not be left with the whole responsibility of caring for the child. I would say this in summary, women cannot stand back and say that she wants equality and at the same time expect to be put on a pedestal.

CYNIC: To what extent do you think the news media has influenced the growth of this movement?

Felt: They have picked up the sensational aspects of the movement. They have picked up such things as bra burning which was talked up, but it never really happened. It has focused upon people who might not be the best spokeswomen. In another sense though, it has "made the movement." No movement can survive unless they have the communication media behind them. Perhaps the media will kill it by over doing it, by stressing the threatening aspects, because the movement is very threatening to women over thirty who have tried to do what society has told them to do. And now they find that they are being attacked from both sides. It is these women that the movement will have to reach. I would like to interject something here. Women's liberation is a modern feminist movement. It has had two earlier phases, earlier historically. The first phase was in 1840 at the Seneca Falls Convention. The next phase of the movement started about 1890 which was considered the Progressive Era of social reform in this country. These women pushed for the vote which they eventually got in 1920. Both earlier phases of the movement emphasized legal and constitutional rights of women. The second phase of the movement, in particular, saw the right to vote as a kind of panacea to cure all ills. Once they got the vote, everything would be equal. But this, of course, was found to be an erroneous assumption. The modern feminists found something which the earlier feminists, if they touched on it, could not face squarely, and that is the social and cultural nature of women's oppression. So the modern feminist is attacking these underlying social assumptions and this is what is new and this is what is different and threatening in the Women's Liberation Movement today. If you question the basic nuclear family as some of these women have done, then you find that this on the highest level, threatens society. But I am not necessarily so frightened as some of the other people are. This is the historical context. Whether they can do all of this changing is another thing. I think they have made a tremendous start. CYNIC: What kind of academic classes would you like to see at UVM to expose students to these aspects of women's history?

Felt: I would like to see something that would allow women to understand themselves as women. The first step would be to have more courses on women. Next, this material should be integrated regular courses. The impact of women has been totally left out of American history text books. For (continued on page six)

God Talk Continues

This Tuesday evening the second session of God Talk will meet in St. Anselm's Chapel, on the Redstone Campus. These sessions are small, unstructured, very informal discussion groups meeting to share ideas about God and Christianity. Having grown up with Christianity forced on us by our parents, perhaps it is time we took a fresh and critical look at what Christianity might have to offer.

If God is a reality, then how do I get in touch with him? And how does Jesus fit into the whole scheme? Why Jesus and not Buddha or Mohammed? What difference did Jesus make? Was he just a man, or was he something more?

And how does the Church fit in? The institutional church seems far away from the simple man of Galilee. Is today's church what Jesus would have wanted? What do I do if I can't buy into the institutional church?

If you would like to take a critical look at what you believe and to hear what other people are thinking about God and the whole Christian approach to living, join us at St. Anselm's each Tuesday night at 7:00 pm. If you missed the first session, please feel free to join us anyway. The groups will take the direction the group as a whole wants to take, and your input will be appreciated at any or all sessions. These sessions are open to all members of the UVM community. Come and share your thoughts this Tuesday.

A Quiet Place To Study

Looking for a place to study? Why not try St. Anselm's? Beginning this week, St. Anselm's coffeehouse will be open every afternoon and evening from 2-11:30 pm. You'll even find a big pot of coffee on Monday through Friday evenings. Just come in and make yourself at home. Part of the coffeehouse area will be used on Sunday, Tuesday, and Friday evenings for other St. Anselm's activities, but there should be plenty of room for everybody. Coffee, lots of room to work, quiet, and even a fireplace, make this an ideal place to study. So drop by St. Anselm's right under the water tower on the Redstone Campus.

Nov. 21, 7:00 pm. and 9:30 pm. "SKI MOVIE I" A 90 minute feature, 235 Life Science Auditorium. Sponsored by Sigma Phi Epsilon.

W.R.A. Activities

The purpose of the Women's Recreation Association (W.R.A.) is to provide sports activities for all UVM on a recreational basis, including intramurals and individual activities. There are meetings of this organization every Tuesday evening at 5:30 in the downstairs of Southwick Hall, and anyone who is interested is welcome to attend.

Budapest Symphony Orchestra Performs Nov. 29

The Budapest Symphony Orchestra, one of Europe's major ensembles, appears on the Lane Series on Monday, Nov. 29, 8:30 p.m., in Memorial Auditorium.

A limited number of tickets, priced at $5.25 and $3.75 are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, tel. 656-3418.

Led by its chief conductor, Gyorgy Lehel, this orchestra of over 100 musicians has gained an international fame throughout Europe, and now makes its American debut.

Programmed for the Nov. 29 concert are Schubert's Symphony No. 3 in D major, Mozart's Concerto for Horn and Orchestra No. 3 in E Flat Major (K.447), Kodaly's Dances from Galanta, and Bartok's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra No. 1. The flute soloist in the Mozart is Ferenc Tarnai.

The current tour of the Budapest began in October of this year, and will take the group from the east coast to Colorado. There will be performances in all major cities of the U.S., including New York's Carnegie Hall and Washington D.C.'s J.F. Kennedy Center.

The Budapest Orchestra, an outgrowth of the Hungarian Radio and Television, was reorganized after the second World War into the Budapest Symphony Orchestra. Since 1952, it has performed in the leading concert halls of Europe, including those in Poland, France, Italy, Romania, the German Federal Republic, Japan, Switzerland, Belgium, England, and the U.S.S.R.

Conductor Gyorgy Lehel will be head in America on this tour for the first time in his career. He was born in Budapest in 1926, studied in the renowned Academy of Music, but was arrested at the age of 17 and sent to a fascist forced labor camp in the copper mines of Hungary. However, he managed to escape and, after hair-raising adventures, reached a camp of partisan resistance.

He first conducted the Budapest Symphony in 1947, and began early to champion Hungarian composers as well as the classics. Recordings featuring Lehel and the Budapest have been released throughout the world by the Deutsche Gramophone and Westminster Records. There are more women performing with the Budapest than any other major orchestra, including two leaders of the viola section, Mrs. Ferenczy and Mrs. Ungvari. Other women also have responsible positions in the orchestra.

The critic of the London Sunday Times wrote as follows of the orchestra's performance in London: "It needed no more than its brilliant octave passages to show the fine tonal technical quality of the string ensemble, or the nuances of the song-like interpretations in the finale to reveal a conductor of heart as well as head in Gyorgy Lehel."

And the Le Monde of Paris noted "the perfection of phrasing, magic of microscopic precision, dazzling poetry."

For mother...

She was smiling when it was summer and I was frolicking in the waves, and when fall chased me through the leaves, when winter chilled
my nose, and I ran through spring's rain.
All these I can do when I know
she'll smile again.

I don't think it's unusual for an old woman to enjoy flowers.
Nor for a gentle smile to speak across her face when the geraniums are especially bright.

She took with uncertainty the warmth from his smile, knowing he was loving her all the while.
Could he hope, or should he try to really understand or trust that she'll be calmed by the touch of his hand?

A LITTLE BIT OF PURPLE PROSE ABOUT LEARNING TO SKI.

A lot of people will give you this thing about the courage of the first man who ate an oyster.

We would respectfully suggest that he had nothing on the first guy who strapped himself to a pair of oak staves and headed for the nearest mountain.

Whoever he was, wherever he roamed, anyone who's learned that same old way will tell you that if the first skier had nothing else, he had guts.

And, quite recently, guts was the most important single ingredient in learning to ski.

A dramatic development.

Recently, within the last 9 years, a new method of ski instruction has been developed and perfected at Killington.

It is called the Accelerated Ski Method (formerly known as G.L.M.). If you have even a shred of desire, plus enough coordination to have picked up this newspaper, you can learn to ski the Accelerated way.

Cuts is no longer the pivotal requirement.

A great idea.

Instead of strapping you onto a pair of 6 or 7 foot skis and sending you onto the hill, the Accelerated Ski Method works you up to full-size gradually.

Your first lesson is on 39 inch instruction skis. If you can walk you can get around on these.

Once you've mastered the rhythm and gained confidence you move up to 60 inch, mid-length, training skis. When you have them conquered, you move on to skis which are standard for your weight and height.

Instead of struggling for days with "herringbones" and "sidestepping" you will be skiing, unassisted, in your very first hour. You will amaze yourself.

Some fabulous plans.
Learning to ski is not impossible.

It's also not as expensive as everyone's told you.

At Killington we've put together amazingly inexpensive learn-to-ski vacations, which include everything but your "long-johns." The finest metal skis, mounted with the most advanced release bindings. Top quality buckles, boots and poles. Hundreds of dollars worth of equipment better than most beginners buy for themselves.

All this, plus lift, plus lessons costs $60 for a 5-day introductory vacation. For 5 days mid-week, we throw in a few extras and charge $70.

Don't expect any miracles with the weekend plan unless you can put together three or four weekends back-to-back. But if, at the end of a 5-day mid-week vacation, you're not a proficient skier, then you are very probably unteachable.

Some terrific skiing.

Once you learn, you'll find that Killington won't bore you. There are four mountains to ski. Among the more than four dozen trails, you'll find the longest one out of the Rocky Mts.

Of our eleven lifts, one, the new Killington gondola, is the longest ski lift in the world! And, as you might expect, there are a great many places to rest your bones and pick up your spirits when the lifts have closed.

Poster (he's our marketing director) Chandler will send you the facts. Poster Chandler 540 Killington Road Killington, Vermont 05751

If we know old Foster he'll absolutely bombard you with brochures, pamphlets and all that.

World's capital of learning to ski.

'72 Ariel

The 1972 Ariel will return to a single volume hardbound book in response to the criticism received of the experimental 1971 double volume yearbook. In addition, the yearbook will contain color photographs for the first time since 1969.

The 1971 Ariel came under considerable attack by those who contended the photographs in the two volumes to be pertinent only to a minority of the student body, thus accounting for the poor sales of the book. Another refinement of the book will be the return of the traditional senior section rather than the greatly controversial senior section carried in the 1971 book.

The Ariel staff anticipates ordering only that number of books from the publisher as subscriptions indicate necessary. Therefore, all those interested in receiving the 1972 book must pay in advance of publication five dollars to ensure receiving a copy.

The yearbook staff welcomes all those interested to participate in the production of the 1972 Ariel, whether one's contribution is photographic, literary, or involves actual page assembly production.

I Remember When Women...

Flash Back

The evolution of women at UVM, if nothing else, has been an interesting, downbeat, and amusing one. We decided to ask some people to reflect about their recollections of how it used to be when they "remembered when women..."

It deserves mention that the accumulative years of service to the University by this select group totals 243 years!

Dr. Donald Gregg

"I remember when I thought women were just attractive physically. I especially enjoyed having them in class and after teaching at Amherst admit they were rather a novelty. Now that I'm getting older, and 'wiser' I appreciate and am beginning to realize that women are people and are growing more attractive mentally, intellectually and physically. They're getting better as students and have a great deal more to offer than their gender. I still can't help looking at them, though..."

Dr. Gregg (Class of '35) joined the University faculty in 1946. He is Professor of Chemistry.

Dr. Truman Webster

"I remember when...smoking was a 'No No!' for girls at UVM and after dinner dates could usually be picked up under the west porch of 'Campus House' (replaced by Waterman Building) where the girls in that dorm went to enjoy a forbidden cigarette. I remember when...UVM men and women held formal dances, complete with white ties and long gowns, and danced; and every girl expected to have at least the first and last dance on her program with her escort."

I remember hearing my mother (UVM '99) tell that her four years of college had cost $1000.00. With $2.50 a week for board and room and $1.00 a week to keep her horse and carriage in a down-town livery stable it didn't count up so fast."

Dr. Webster (Class of '31) has been on the faculty since 1945. He is Chairman of the German department.

Dr. George V. Kiddier

I remember that the first two women ever admitted to the University were later also the first women ever to be initiated into Phi Beta Kappa, setting a precedent which has been widely followed. I remember when women were readily distinguishable from the men on campus; were not allowed to smoke or stay out beyond early closing hours in dorms, or ever visit men's residences. Women were not allowed to wear slacks, to say nothing of jeans, to go barefoot, or to 'bob' their hair. They were considered to have automatically cancelled their enrollment if they married while in college. They were the outstanding students, a delight and an inspiration to their professors, and a prod to their more indolent male classmates. For the most part women had no desire to be merely on a par with men, valued their privileged status as being apart and superior, and acquiesced with grace and charm their position on a pedestal."

Dr. Kiddier (Class of '22) is Dean Emeritus of the College of Arts and Science. Except for three years spent at Oxford, he was on the faculty for 46 years until his retirement in 1967.

"One of the things I remember is when most of the rules and regulations at the University pertained to the behavior of women. At one point, a group of men were concerned enough to come to me and question why the University didn't care about them, too. As a student, I remember when the young ladies on campus were the only bright spots in a rather bleak atmosphere. I remember too, when the Dean of Women was the only personnel officer we had and men students considered it a privilege to go to seek her advice. Last, but not least, I remember when women wore bloomers to gym!"

Dr. Rowell, President Emeritus and Class of '25 joined the faculty directly following his graduation. Until his retirement in 1970, he served in many capacities including teacher, Acting President, Dean of Administration and President.

Miss Helen Everett

"I remember when women were spoken of as 'ladies' and they were not 'squares' to be referred to as such. They seemed to enjoy being feminine but you wouldn't have found 'hot pants' worn in public. By comparison they were more 'enthusiastic' about extra-curricular activities and seemed to have a better idea of what direction they wanted to go in - academically and personally. They were meticulous about their grooming and this was important to their own identity. It had to be 10 degrees before women were allowed to wear 'snow pants' on the campus. It was a rule."

Miss Everett has been the secretary for the Dean of Women since 1943 and has served Deans Mary Jean Simpson, Anna Rankin Harris, and presently Jackie M. Gribbons in this capacity.

"I remember when the dress code for women permitted only cotton stockings and not silk. Woe betide any cood walking on Prospect Street when soldiers marched, singing lustily, to meals at Waterman. Sunday afternoon amusement for Burlington children was watching the soldiers and their girlfriends make love - with a wall between since women weren't permitted to venture behind the stone wall" (Burlington campus buildings were occupied by soldiers during World War II).

Way back when, Dr. Dykhuizen also recalls when "sheep" were driven down Main Street, and deer could be spotted in the vicinity of Patrick Gym."

Dr. Dykhuizen is Professor Emeritus of Philosophy. He joined the faculty in 1926 and retired in 1969. He and his wife still live in the quaint former gate-keeper's house on the edge of the circular drive at Redstone.

Dr. Eleanor Luse

"I remember when sunning on dorm roofs within the sight of a passer-by was forbidden. When you look at it, it wasn't so much the fact that women could sun but that they could be seen. I remember too that when a girl married she was dismissed from the University and her husband was permitted to remain. I remember when women wore hats and gloves to church. When you get right down to basics, women today are the same real people they were but more emancipated in many ways - I think they need to be."

Dr. Luse is Emeritus Professor of Speech. She came to the University in 1947 and retired in 1970.

Book Review

Jessie E. Wright An Active Woman Of The 1880's

by Paul Betty Randall

It is widely unlikely that you will do so, but if you should chance to pick up a little book, FRESHMAN AND SENIOR, next time you are in Bailey Library, you will have in your hands the only novel written about this university during its 180 years of history.

If you venture to read a few pages, you will find you are in another world. It is a world that may be retorted familiar to you if your grandmother's house still preserves some of the books given as prizes to Sunday School children in the 1890's. It's author was "Elvira Wright."

Elvira Wright is the discreet pen-name of Jessie Elvira Wright, the one woman in a class of ten seniors to be graduated from UVM in 1884—ten years after the legendary Lida Mason and Ellen Elizabeth Hamilton, graduating in 1875, became the first two women to receive degrees from any co-educational college in New England, and the first two women members of Phi Beta Kappa anywhere in the world. Today's large commonwealth—Mason, Hamilton, and Wright—honors these three pioneers.

Now Jessie Elvira Wright was a woman of the soundest and hardest kind of common sense, of true intellectual stature, and of great perceptiveness regarding human nature. The record of her life attests to Jessie's common and uncommon sense. Her achievements in many fields of endeavor were recognized when the University asked Jessie Wright Whitcomb to speak at Founder's Day in 1921—on the fiftieth anniversary of the admission of women to UVM. Yet the story which she wrote about college life on this campus in the 1880's will strike many modern college students as pure fantasy regarding human nature, and particularly human student nature.

Let us first know the author's life story. Born in 1864 in Princeton, N.J., Jessie Elvira Wright was the daughter of Rev. William F. Wright, and Julia McNair Wright. Her father was a prominent clergyman and mathematician, her mother the author of a substantial number of books, largely fiction. During her student days at UVM Jessie lived in the home of the parents of John Dewey (just south of Allen House.) The later great philosopher had himself been graduated from UVM in 1879, just one year before Jessie began her course here.

Jessie's son, Robert Fay Wright Whitcomb, writing to UVM at the time of the dedication of Wright Hall in 1964, said, "As a boy I firmly believed that if, perhaps, of all prominent people had attended the University of Vermont, the probabilities of eminence were, at least, greatly enhanced thereby."

Jessie went on from UVM to receive her Bachelor of Law degree from Boston University in 1887 and an honorary Master of Arts degree from UVM in 1904. In 1888, after a further year's study in the British Museum, she married George H. Whitcomb, a native of Stockbridge, Vt., whom she met at law school in Boston. Together they speedily established the law firm of Whitcomb and Whitcomb in Topeka. In the then quite young state of Kansas, Mr. Whitcomb as late as 1913, despite the fact that she was by then the mother of six children, wrote of maintaining her law office in Topeka. By that time she was also "author of a number of children's books and writer of magazine fiction." Her eldest son Philip was a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford; the next three boys were in college; and Mrs. Whitcomb herself had just returned from "a several months' trip to Europe with my eleven-year old twins." One of those twins, Isabel, the only girl among the children, became Mrs. Isabel McNeill of Denver, Colo., mother of Jean F. McNeill, who attended UVM in 1955.

Within Mrs. Whitcomb died at the age of sixty-five in 1930 she was eulogized not only as a good lawyer, writer, homemaker, and mother but also as a founder and builder of a Presbyterian church in Topeka, as a person whose special interest in education had been of value to her community, and as a public speaker of distinction.

If her book about this University, FRESHMAN AND SENIOR, would seem to many modern students to be laid in Never-never Land, Mrs. Whitcomb's own able children raised it highly. As late as World War I, when they were scattered over the face of the earth, the children were fighting over who would get the family copy. Written on the fly-leaf of UVM's copy are: "Philip Wright Whitcomb, London, England, 1917." Then: "Richard - Honolulu." Next: "No!" This book belongs to Robert - Panama." Then: "William Whitcomb-Russia." And finally, "All off Mine-George. And Mine! Isabel!" Presumably the family decided that the best thing to do was to give the copy to the school which inspired the story—and so it is that copy which is now in the UVM Library's Special Collections.

Perhaps the most interesting thing in the book is comment upon educational procedures of the 1880's. Since Sternhold brings his orphaned five-year-old brother Jamie, to college; and calmly undertakes the child's upbringing, the whole college has a hand in the boy's education. This procedure brings on various discussions of education and - most to the point in this centennial year of UVM's - welcoming of women students—the education and role of women in society.

At one point a girl exclaims, "Can't get even a senior and a freshman together to talk about a boys' reading-room; but they" (continued on page five)

From now on, there's a better way to buy stereo equipment at tremendous discounts than consulting a mail order catalog. You just consult Fisher's student representative, instead.

He'll show you a catalog of Fisher equipment, and give you advice on the equipment that suits your needs. And, if you want, he'll arrange for a demonstration so you can hear what you'll be buying. Then, he'll process your order, at a tremendous discount. Fisher selected this student because he is uniquely qualified to act as your Fisher representative. He knows a lot about high fidelity. He's a reliable person. And since he's a student himself, he knows what students need in the way of stereo equipment.

And since he's the Fisher representative, he's got what you need. Because Fisher makes practically everything.

Women Are Here To Stay

It isn't every day that the female populous of a university or, indeed, of any community, can acknowledge one hundred years of existence in one place during a century span of time. To the women of UVM, we say "right on" or "here's to the second hundred" or "what a feat!"

What truly can be said is that women have been and will continue to become human and worthy in their own right. No longer will they be satisfied to merely exist for they have come to be viable persons who are dedicated to making mankind more sensitive and aware. Whatever will become necessary to achieve these ends, women will persevere...for themselves to become fulfilled; for those who follow to persist.

The Centennial Celebration for the admission of women to the University of Vermont tells us many things. Moreover, that this institution has a vested interest in education for women. To ensure that women are afforded opportunities in the future, the University must respond by developing policies and programs which provide equality in admission standards, curriculum and career emphasis, university governance, employment and promotion, and an end to all discriminatory practices which currently prohibit mobility laterally or vertically because of presupposed ability.

It seems safe to say that women at the University of Vermont are here to stay. Many are hopeful that women will strive to be among the forceful, influential, and positive leaders at all institutional levels - students, faculty and administration. Their absence has become obvious and critical and the wasted and thwarted potential can be viewed as nothing less than tragic. JMG Dean Gibbons

S.A. Senate Meetings

This is a guest editorial reply to one of last week's editorials entitled "A Senate Meetings," by Jeff Yacker, Assistant Editor.

Jeff, when I read your editorial, my initial response was one of anger. But then I sat down and thought about what you had written.

I agree that the Senate meetings could be improved, but so far few ideas on how to improve them have come forward. Our new chairman, Rich Most, is curtailing the endless and repetitive discussions. He has received some criticism from the Senate, but I feel that the problem is that as a new Senator, Rich is unfamiliar with Senate rules which differ from standard Rules of Order. I personally agree with his belief in using parliamentary procedure for "fast, smooth meetings" and feel that, as chairman, he will improve the workings of Senate meetings.

Jeff, attendance of Senators is far higher than you related (56%). Last week only 5 out of 43 Senators were absent. However, the problem with attendance is that more than just a few dorms and fraternities do not have Senators. I have sent letters to the R.A.'s and to the house presidents asking them to correct this, and have offered assistance if they need it.

About the November 3 meeting where "the chair was placed in embarrassing position of not being able to tally the percentages in a roll-call vote." No, we did not have this year's figures, because the fraternities had not given us their numbers. It was also difficult because the adding machine was in Billings, and we were holding the Senate meeting in MAT Lounge.

I agree that sometimes Senators only vaguely comprehend the issues but there is nothing that you or I can do about this. I send the Senators their minutes and am available for questioning at any time. The S.A. Offices in Billings are always open, and Senators, or any other students, if they have any questions, can usually find a member of the Executive Board there to help them.

The Senate Meeting on Wednesday, December 1 will be held at Harris-Millis Lounge at 6:30 PM. All interested students are invited to attend. Students who are interested in working with their Student Government are invited to come to the SA Office in Billings anytime.

President Andrews, Others, Comment On The Status Of Women At UVM

Dr. Edward Andrews
Dr. Edward C. Andrews Jr. is the twentieth President of the University of Vermont, and the twentieth man to hold that position. What moment, we asked, are being taken to give equal consideration in the hiring of women for Departmental Chairmanships, Deans of the Colleges, Administrations, and Presidency on the UVM campus?

"I think that women candidates should have equal consideration for all of these jobs, and when the time comes, I would be delighted to turn over my office to a woman determined by the Trustees to be the best qualified candidate."

"Most people automatically say that they subscribe to the ideal embodied in the U.S. Constitution but many of us fail, by carelessness, or deliberation, when it comes to applying them to our society. Consequently we need to prod ourselves, or to be prodded, and UVM's response to this process in the past few years have been healthy."

"Women's opportunities on our campus (and those of minority group members) are getting better because we have established specific means of making this so. For example, equal opportunity policies, procedures, and progress in hiring and advancement and in student recruitment have been articulated in three 'Affirmative Action Plans' filed with the Federal Government, and we are following up on these."

Things are better because of the University's appointment a year ago of an Equal Opportunity Officer to plan, coordinate and push our efforts; because faculty, students, and staff are involved in monitoring institutional progress in this whole area; because Trustees have enunciated and are considering a further statement of anti-discrimination policy; because Personnel Office practices have been oriented to our equal opportunity goals; and because Deans, Vice Presidents, and search committees charged with filling senior jobs have been specifically and repeatedly instructed to seek both female and minority applicants who may be qualified."

"In short, I believe that we are succeeding in improving the equal opportunity environment at UVM. Much of course remains to be done. I intend to keep trying to narrow the rhetoric/reality gap and welcome the efforts of all who want to help."

Gene Beaudoin

The President of the University of Vermont Student Association is Eugene Beaudoin, and when we asked him what the Student Association is doing, or could be doing, to provide opportunities for women to assume leadership positions at all levels of institutional governance, his response was basically that women were involved in S.A.—the problems S.A. faces are problems of students, not of men, students or women students.

"The Student Association does not differentiate between men and women when electing, appointing, nominating, selecting or drafting people for vacant positions. A person serves on the basis of quality rather than sex. This applies to any position of governance at the University with which the Student Association is concerned."

The question of the lack of women in governance positions is a deep-rooted social problem. In this sense, the University of Vermont is a microcosm of the society. The question of women's role in society must be answered first.

The University should not sacrifice quality for the sake of sexual equality. However, the University can be a part of the process that helps to change our societal values pertaining to women. Since the University of Vermont was (one of) the first institutions in New England to admit women, and since this is the 100th anniversary of the admission of women, it would perhaps be appropriate for the University to have a female graduation speaker and to award Honorary Degrees to noted and deserving women.

Women such as Pearl Buck, Margaret Chase Smith, Rose Kennedy and many others, who have ties with New England and are certainly deserving, should be considered for such a degree.

Only when both society and the University seriously ask "where are the courses about women?" "where is the initiative for a women's organization?" and "when does begin recognizing females as capable human beings?" that we can begin to overcome the problem of sexual discrimination."

Mr. Kenneth Scott

Mr. Kenneth N. Scott, chairman of the UVM Board of Trustees, was asked about the make-up of the board since the University is a coeducational institution, whether or not he taken to place qualified women on the Board of Trustees as vacancies occur?

"I believe that the best way to answer that question is from my own experience on the nominating committee for alumni members of the board. As you know, the other members are elected from the Legislature and appointed by the Governor. Each of the last two times that we have elected alumni members I know that women have been considered, and the only reason a woman or women weren't among those elected was on the basis of qualifications. Over the years we have had a number of women members and they have made a fine contribution."

Mr. Scott no longer serves on the alumni nominating committee, but says, "I'm sure that the nominating committee for alumni members would welcome recommendations from alumni, and I do know that there are women among the alumni who will be considered next February. I believe it is, when alumni members of the board are again elected."

How does he know?

"I have suggested one myself."

Dr. William White

We asked Dr. William White, chairman of the Faculty Senate, about representation of women in the Senate. Of the standing committees of the Senate, not one has a woman chairman, and there are no women members on the curriculum, planning, academic policy and research committees. In addition of those faculty members who sit with committees of the Board of Trustees, there is only one woman (She is on sabbatical leave this year). What measures are being taken to insure equitable membership?

"I think asking questions like this of different organizations is a good thing to do," he says. And taking an opportunity to recruit any women faculty members who may be reading this, he adds "I would be very happy to have women volunteer for our committee. There is a lot of work involved, and I'm always looking for willing people."

CYNIC: In terms of your candidacy for president what are some of the problems you expect to encounter? What support do you think you can rely on from black leaders and in the black community? Where do you think your support will come from and how strong is it?

CHISHOLM: First of all it must be clearly understood that I did not initiate the candidacy. About six months ago groups of women and young people came to me, after they realized some of the persons who were aspiring to this high office, had asked me to consider being some sort of viable alternative. They were sick-and-tired-of-conventionally looking at the same politicians coming back quadrennially to secure the votes of the American people, coming up once again with their marvelous platforms, only to find out later that after these people got into office, their platform were meaningless and irrelevant. And they felt that on the basis of having watched me in action for three years on the American national scene, that was indeed a new breed of emerging politician. I have integrity—which is very important to many people who seem to have negative feelings about a majority of our politicians. Secondly, they told me frankly that they admired my courage and guts to move ahead and do what I have to do if really felt it was important. They liked the fact that I do not straddle, and am not afraid to step into a controversial area though many persons would not step into a controversy because of political expediency. In other words, they admire my stamina, my courage, my guts. Last but not least, they feel that I have real leadership potential. Therefore, they came to me and asked me to consider making the bid.

I was a bit reluctant at first because I'm constantly cognizant of the fact that I'm black and a woman. I threw the challenge back to them—told them if they were really seriously considering system.

Those who have been benefiting from the system are not going to turn anything over or give

1. What is University year for ACTION?

University Year for ACTION has two basic objectives: to alleviate poverty through the application of resources to the problems of poor people in which surround it. The second broad objective is to provide the students with an education in providing their students with an education—one which provides the student with the ability to solve actual problems in real situations. The accomplished by having students receive some working in poverty areas.

2. How Does UVA Work?

There are four partners in the University Year for ACTION, which provides technical assistance, and funds for student allowances and administrative program. The university, which provides academic student's work, faculty supervision and its students, who serve for one year as full-time volunteers, who actually define jobs and volunteer's work. The program is an alliance between government, universities, their students and incomes.

3. What makes this program different from VISTA? Primarily college credit for doing a full-time community, and the availability of university example: An economics student at Eastern Vermont is working with the black community in their develop new businesses. He has the business college doing a research project on what kinds should start, and where, and he has committed students who have volunteered part-time to efforts have also resulted in access to computer to the research facilities at the college's research volunteer's enterprise shows how the resources can be made directly available to poor people.

4. What kind of support does ACTION provide? ACTION is the primary source of funding for the student. In addition, ACTION will help universities to develop their own training facilities available to them the people who have had experience Corps and VISTA volunteers. Participating draw upon the combined experiences of the assistance in program development, select methods of evaluation, etc.

5. How does the University benefit from UVA? UVA universities receive financial assistance which enables them to expand existing programs, or begin new student-volunteer projects assistance in training, selection, evaluation and

Dear Editor:

The current stylish trend of UVM students to affix their signatures to VPIRG petitions exhibits, in many cases, what I'd hypothesized is true. I've asked many students why they're signed petitions, and they've said things like, "Because I was asked to sign three times and finally did it to get them off my back," or "Because I don't think it'll do any harm." Not many people know much about what it's all about, but so what? "Here's my signature and because, just so long as I know I can get my $3 back."

It seems we only hear the positive side of VPIRG. But okay. We'll help people everybody! Well research - and hopefully use to good advantage what we find out. We'll tear apart everything and get down to the Knitty Gritty of products and things that concern us middle class Americans. First I'm all for that. In fact, if one were to look closely, one would find that much of this is already being done now - by concerned individuals, by groups of concerned individuals, and even by agencies that aren't being used to their full capacity. Indeed, this even happens right here in Burlington. Why, why must the students of the University of Vermont be used as a captive audience to subsidize a program that isn't necessary? I've gotten no answer to that from anybody except a claim that money received from donations wouldn't be sufficient backing. Then why force the issue? If the people VPIRG is going to "serve" don't care enough to donate sufficient capital, what can the ultimate merits of VPIRG be?

Hey, all you people out there. Don't down grade the value of your signature. There aren't "just some more petitions that I might as well sign." Do yourselves a favor: ask questions and get objective information before you give in to the overwhelming pressure VPIRG is putting on us. —M.L.B.

Dear Editor:

The twenty-sixth amendment in the process of being totally undermined by those forces in the country which fear and oppose the new addition of voters which it represents. Events now indicate that the young and the poor may be entirely eliminated from the nominating process of the nation's major political parties.

While a great many legal problems still remain in opening up the Republican nominating convention to greater popular participation, it had been assumed in the past that the reforms off the McGovern Commission would mean greater access to the Democratic party. This now appears less and less likely. The rejection of Sen. Harold Hughes for temporary chairman of the credentials committee by the party professionals is a clear indication that they would rather avoid enforcement of the new nominating rules. In addition, the Democratic Party has instituted a loyalty oath requiring potential delegates to pledge support to the party's nominee before the balloting and regardless of whom the candidate may be. Many observers believe this provision is intended to keep left-leaning delegates out of the convention.

For this reason, ASG is sponsoring the Emergency Conference for New Voters, December 3-5, at Loyola University of Chicago.

Please assist us in this serious effort to involve the nation's young people in the total electoral process. We will appreciate your help and look forward to seeing you in Chicago in December.

President Andrews, Others, Comment On The Status Of Women At UVM

Dr. Edward Andrews, Jr., the twentieth President of the University of Vermont, and the twentieth man to hold that position. What measures, we asked, are being taken to give equal consideration in the hiring of women for Departmental Chairmanships, Deans of the College, Administration, and Presidency on the UVM campus?

"I think that women candidates should have equal consideration for all of these jobs, and when the time comes, I would be delighted to turn over my office to a woman determined by the Trustees to be the best qualified candidate."

We asked Dr. William White, chairman of the Faculty Senate, about representation of women in the Senate. Of the standing committees of the Senate, not one has a woman chairman, and there are no women members on the curriculum, planning, academic policy and research committees. In addition of those faculty members who sit with committees of the Board of Trustees, there is only one woman (She is on sabbatical leave this year). What measures are being taken to insure equitable membership?

He adds that the simple fact of raising the question of representation of women on Senate Committees has made him think, "Sometimes people may discriminate, not through intention, just by neglect."

Although his research shows that Senate Committee membership, when averaged, represents women fairly well, he says that next time he has to appoint a committee, he will speak to the academic policy committee just to remind them to include women among their nominees.

"I think asking questions like this of different organizations is a good thing to do," he says.

And taking an opportunity to recruit any women faculty members who may be reading this, he adds "I would be very happy to have women volunteer for our committees. There is a lot of work involved, and I'm always looking for willing people."

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

The current stylish trend of UVM students to affix their signatures to VPIRG petitions exhibits, in many cases, what I'd hypothesized as true. I've asked many students why they're signed petitions, and they've said things like, "Because I was asked to sign three times and finally did it to get them off my back," or "Because I don't think it'll do any harm." Not many people know much about what it's all about, but so what? "Here's my signature and here's my money. Just so long as I know I can get my $3 back."

If there are only fifty of the political life of VPIRG. But okay. We'll help people everywhere! Well research - and hopefully use to good advantage - what we find out. We'll tear apart everything and get down to the Knitty Gritty of products and things that concern us middle class Americans. Fine! I'm all for that. In fact, if one were to look closely, one would find that much of this is already being done now - by concerned individuals, by groups of concerned individuals, and even by agencies that aren't being used to their full capacity. Indeed, this even happens right here in Burlington. Why, then, must the students of the University of Vermont be used as a captive audience to subsidize a program that isn't necessary? I've gotten no answer to that from anybody except a claim that money received from donations wouldn't be sufficient backing. Then why force the issue? If the people VPIRG is going to "serve" aren't enough to donate sufficient capital, what can the University do?

Hey, all you people out there. Don't down grade the value of your signature. There aren't "just more petitions that I might as well sign." Do yourselves a favor: ask questions and get objective information before you give in to the overwhelming pressure VPIRG is putting on us. M.L.B.

Dear Editor:

The twenty-sixth amendment is in the process of being totally undermined by those forces in the country which fear and oppose the new addition of voters which it represents. Events now indicate that the young and the poor may be entirely eliminated from the nominating process of America's major political parties.

While a great many legal problems still remain in opening up the Republican nominating convention to greater popular participation, it had been assumed in the past that the reforms off the McGovern Commission would mean greater access to the Democratic party. This now appears less and less likely. The rejection of Sen. Harold Hughes for temporary chairman of the credentials committee by the party professionals is a clear indication that they would rather avoid enforcement of the new nominating rules. In addition, the Democratic Party has instituted a loyalty oath requiring potential delegates to pledge support to the party's nominees before the balloting and regardless of whom the candidates may be. Many observers believe this provision is intended to keep left-leaning delegates out of the convention.

For this reason, ABC is sponsoring the Human Conference for New Voters, December 3-5, at Loyola University of Chicago.

Please assist us in this serious effort to involve the nation's young people in the total electoral process. We will appreciate your help and look forward to seeing you in Chicago in December.

CYNIC: In terms of your candidacy for president, what are some of the problems you expect to encounter? What support do you think you can rely on from black leaders and in the black community? Where do you think your support will come from and how strong is it?

CHISHOLM: First of all it must be clearly understood that I did not initiate the candidacy. About six months ago groups of women and young people came to me, after they realized some of the persons who were aspiring to this high office, they asked me to consider being some sort of viable alternative. They were sick and tired of constantly looking at the same politicians coming back quadrennially to secure the votes of the American people, coming up once again with their marvelous platforms, only to find out later that after these people got into office, their platform were meaningless and irrelevant. And they felt that on the basis of having watched me in action for three years on the American national scene, that was indeed a new breed of emerging political figure. I have integrity - which is very important to many people who seem to have negative feelings about a majority of our politicians. Secondly they told me frankly that they admired my courage and goals to move ahead and do what I have to do. I really felt it was important. They liked the fact that I do not straddle, and am not afraid to step into a controversial area though many persons would not step into a controversy because of political expediency. In other words, they admired my stamina, my courage, my guts. Last but not least, they feel that I have real leadership potential. Therefore, they came to me and asked me to consider making the bid.

I was a bit reluctant at first because I'm constantly cognizant of the fact that I'm black and a woman. I threw the challenge back to them - told them if they were really seriously considering system. Those who have been benefiting from the system are not going to turn anything over or give

It isn't every day that the female populous of a university or, indeed, of any community, can acknowledge one hundred years of existence in one place during a century span of time. To the women of UVM, we say "right on" or "here's to the second hundred" or "what a feat!"

What truly can be said is that women have been and will continue to become human and worthy in their own right. No longer will they be satisfied to merely exist for they have come to be viable persons who are dedicated to make mankind more sensitive and aware. Whatever will become necessary to achieve these ends, women will persevere...for themselves to become fulfilled; for those who follow to persist.

The Centennial Celebration for the admission of women to the University of Vermont tells us many things. Moreover, that this institution has a vested interest in education for women. To ensure that women are afforded opportunities in the future, the University must respond by developing policies and programs which provide equality in admission standards, curriculum and career emphasis, university governance, employment and promotion, and an end to all discriminatory practices which currently prohibit mobility laterally or vertically because of presupposed ability.

It seems safe to say that women at the University of Vermont are here to stay. Many are hopeful that women will strive to be among the forceful, influential, and positive leaders at all institutional levels - students, faculty and administration. Their absence has become obvious and critical and the wasted and thwarted potential can be viewed as nothing less than tragic. JMG Dean Gibbons

This is a guest editorial in reply to one of last week's editorials entitled "S.A. Senate Meetings," by Jeff Yacker, Assistant Editor.

Jeff, when I read your editorial, my initial response was one of anger. But then I sat down and thought about what you had written.

I agree that the Senate meetings could be improved, but so far few ideas on how to improve them have come forward. Our new chairman, Rich Most, is curtailing the endless and repetitive discussions. He has received some criticism from the Senate, but I feel that the problem is that as a new Senator, Rich is unfamiliar with Senate rules which differ from standard Rules of Order. I personally agree with his belief in using parliamentary procedure for "fast, smooth meetings" and feel that, as chairman, he will improve the workings of Senate meetings.

Jeff, attendance of Senators is far higher than you related (56%). Last week only 5 out of 43 Senators were absent. However, the problem with attendance is that more than just a few dorms and fraternities do not have Senators. I have sent letters to the R.A.'s and to the house presidents asking them to correct this, and have offered assistance if they need it.

About the November 3 meeting where "the chair" was placed in embarrassing position of not being able to tally the percentages in a roll-call vote. No, we did not have this year's figures, because the fraternities had not given us their numbers. It was also difficult because the adding machine was in Billings, and we were holding the Senate meeting in MAT Lounge.

I agree that sometimes Senators only vaguely comprehend the issues but there is nothing that you or I can do about this. I send the Senators their minutes and am available for questioning at any time. The S.A. Offices in Billings are always open, and Senators, or any other students, if they have any questions, can usually find a member of the Executive Board there to help them.

The Senate Meeting on Wednesday, December 1 will be held at Harris-Millis Lounge at 6:30 PM. All interested students are invited to attend. Students who are interested in working with their Student Government are invited to come to the SA Office in Billings anytime.

President Andrews, Others, Comment
On The Status Of Women At UVM

Dr. Edward Andrews Jr. is the twentieth President of the University of Vermont, and the twentieth man to hold that position. What measures, we asked, are being taken to give equal consideration in the hiring of women for Departmental Chairmanships, Deans of the College, Administration, and Presidency on the UVM campus?

"I think that women candidates should have equal consideration for all of these jobs, and when the time comes, I would be delighted to turn over my office to a woman determined by the Trustees to be the best, qualified candidate."

"Most people automatically say that they subscribe to the ideals embodied in the U.S. Constitution but many of us fail, by carelessness, or deliberation, when it comes to applying them to our society. Consequently we need to prod ourselves, or to be prodded, and UVM's responses to this process in the past few years have been healthy."

"Women's opportunities on our campus (and those of minority group members) are getting better because we have established specific means of making things so. For example, equal opportunity policies, procedures, and progress in hiring and advancement and in student recruitment have been articulated in three 'Affirmative Action Plans' filed with the Federal Government, and we are following up on them. Things are better also because of the University's appointment a year ago of an Equal Opportunity Officer to plan, coordinate and push our efforts; because faculty, students, and staff are involved in monitoring institutional progress in this whole area; because Trustees have sanctioned and are considering a further statement of anti-discrimination policy; because Personnel Office practices have been oriented to

"In short, I believe that we are succeeding in improving the equal opportunity environment at UVM. Much of it is going to be done, I intend to keep trying to narrow the rhetoric/reality gap and welcome the efforts of all who want to help."

Gene Beaudoin

The President of the University of Vermont Student Association is Eugene Beaudoin, and when we asked him what the Student Association is doing, or could be doing, to provide opportunities for women to assume leadership positions at all levels of institutional governance, his response was basically that women were involved in S.A.-the problems S.A. faces are problems of students, not of men, students or women students.

"The Student Association does not differentiate between men and women when electing, appointing, nominating, selecting or drafting people for vacant positions. A person serves on the basis of quality rather than sex. This applies to any position of governance at the University with which the Student Association is concerned."

The question of the lack of women in governance positions is a deep-rooted social problem. In this sense, the University of Vermont is a microcosm of the society. The question of women's role in society must be answered first.

The University should not sacrifice quality for the sake of sexual equality. However, the University can be a part of the process that helps to change our societal values pertaining to women. Since the University of Vermont was (one of) the first institutions in New England to admit women, and since this is the 100th anniversary of the admission of women, it would perhaps be appropriate for the University to have a female graduation speaker and to award Honorary Degrees to noted and deserving women.

Women such as Pearl Buck, Margaret Chase Smith, Rose Kennedy and many others, who have ties with New England and are certainly deserving, should be considered for such a degree.

Only when both society and the University seriously ask "where are the women about women?" "where is the institution for a women's organization?" and "when do we begin recognizing females as capable human beings?" that we can begin to overcome the problem of sexual discrimination.

Mr. Kenneth Scott

Mr. Kenneth N. Scott, chairman of the UVM Board of Trustees, was asked about the make-up of the board since the University is a coeducational institution. What steps are being taken to place qualified women on the Board of Trustees as vacancies occur?

"I believe that the best way to answer that question is from my own experience on the nominating committee for alumni members of the board. As you know, the other members are elected from the Legislature and appointed by the Governor. Each of the last two times that we have elected alumni members I know that women have been considered, and the only reason a woman or women weren't among those elected was on the basis of qualifications. Over the years we have had a number of women members, and they have made a fine contribution."

(Mr. Scott no longer serves on the alumni nominating committee, but says, "I'm sure that the nominating committee for alumni members would welcome recommendations from alumni, and I do know that there are women among the alumni who will be considered next February, I believe it is, when alumni members of the board are again elected.")

How does he know? "I have suggested one myself."

Dr. William White

We asked Dr. William White, chairman of the Faculty Senate, about representation of women in the Senate. Of the standing committees of the Senate, not one has a woman chairman, and there are no women members on the curriculum, planning, academic policy and research committees. In addition of those faculty members who sit with committees of the Board of Trustees, there is only one woman (She is on subcommittee this year). What measures are being taken to insure equitable membership?

"I think asking questions like this of different organizations is a good thing to do," he says. And taking an opportunity to recruit any woman faculty members who may be reading this, he adds "I would be very happy to have women volunteer for our committees. There is a lot of work involved, and I'm always looking for willing people."

Those who have been benefiting from the system are not going to turn anything over or give anything to anyone else. Why should they? They've been the beneficiaries. So you always need people who have daring and courage, and I am prepared to take the consequences.

Many ask if I realize that I might be damaging myself, politically. But I'm not interested in politics just to keep a seat. I'm interested in my country and to do more than give me lip service and moral support, although that's important. I said I would not be backed by big business interests or by big labor interests. The very fact that I dare to say that I'm going to run for the presidency of this country immediately makes these interest groups, who have been beneficiaries of the status quo politically, begin to try to stop Shirley Chisholm.

The American people have to raise the money for me to go into three or four primaries where I can make an excellent showing, and go to the convention in July and be a real force to be reckoned with.

I found my supporters were really serious. They began to form organizations and groups for fundraising endeavors, and today in 25 states, there are rudiments of Shirley Chisholm for President organizations in the making. Over 21 fundraising benefits are being planned, not only in about 20 areas here, but one in Africa and a Caribbean country, in order to give me the financial backing that I need. Shirley Chisholm, is now a household word in this country.

I ran because of the need in America for a different kind of leadership and a different kind of change. I truly believe that change can come about within the system. I am a part of this system, I'm a part of the Establishment. I believe that this system can be made to work, but it's going to need people who have the courage to make some dramatic changes and movements within this politics in terms of how I can shake the system up to make it responsive.

CYNIC: In your book you talk about the possibility of being punished for breaking tradition, for instance, challenging your first appointment to the forestry subcommittee of the Agriculture Committee. Do you think that this would have any effect on your campaign?

CHISHOLM: I don't think about it too much. I know that I'm a maverick, that I'm a rebel. You don't come out and do some of the things I do without recognizing that perhaps these things are really going to catch up. When all of the power and all of the money is put together in this country, people can be destroyed, and people have been destroyed. So I'm very cognizant of that, but I am interested in shaking the system up to make people realize that white males should not dominate conventions where the highest elected official of this land is selected. Constantly at the conventions, women do not have a real input and blacks do not have real input. They just take blacks and white women because they know nothing—they might grumble, and they might mumble, but they always say, "they're good Democrats, they're going to come along with us." God help the Indians and the Chicanos. The coalition candidacy that I have right now is based on the fact that all of the people I have just mentioned are moving behind me as the instrument of these forces at the convention, so that all of us together will have some input on that ticket. Of course, I know, and all women are going to support Shirley Chisholm because she's a black, not all young people are going to support her because she has a wonderful relationship with younger people, and not all Spanish-speaking people are going to support her because she speaks Spanish. That would be ludicrous, to say that I'm so strong that I have all this support.

What I'm saying is that I have a broad segment of each of these groups in this country who are planning and forming the organizations in the different states for me.

CYNIC: At the Northlake conference, one of the concerns was just which interests you would represent—would there be a conflict between women as a political force and black people in this country. Are these problems in reconciling the interests of both groups?

CHISHOLM: There would be absolutely no problem. What many of the men don't want to say, or say in the open, is that their egos are very hurt by my candidacy. While they have been repping, I have been mapping, and planning, and while they were at the conference, I was in New Mexico and Texas talking to people to get behind me. I've got the ball, and I started with it six months ago.

What has happened is some of them are embarrassed. Some of them have realized that, whether or not they endorse me, I am going to run.

The nerve of them to feel that I am more concerned about women than blacks. It is a very insulting tone. The reason it is insulting is because if there is any black leader in this country today that fights for her people, and takes stand on unpopular issues, it's me. When some of these same people I have approached will not take stands because it's not politically expedient. I don't know what you call that, but they have to find reasons for not backing me. As I have said, I am not taking anybody to back me, I know what I am doing.

An article was in the New York Times on October 20, in which Julian Bond mentioned that the blacks may now have to go behind Shirley Chisholm by default?

Shirley Chisholm has backing in this country, and I am going to answer that article. He's not going to get away with that. Because they have not been interested, and are caught now, they are trying to attack me in a very subtle way which I don't appreciate.

If there is any black man in this country today that can get the kind of backing that I have, representing a broad segment of this society, I'll back that man. Why don't they put the cards on the table? Black male politicians are no different from white male politicians. First of all they're both human beings and it's hard for them to deal with a woman who is aggressive, and has developed a following: a woman who knows where she is going, and says to them, "come with me if you want to, don't come with me if you don't want to." And that's what's hard about it, they can't accept women being in the political arena.

CYNIC: In terms of your platform, what sorts of issues do you intend to raise?

CHISHOLM: I have not put my platform together yet, because I don't want to get into the bag of uttering the beautiful political clichés that every candidate says. I am putting thought into my platform, the platform that I am going to take to the people of this country, in terms of what the problem is, how I view it, how it's being handled now, and how I think it should be handled when I become the president of the United States. I want to have a platform that will have a platform that will have a credibility in my intelligence, in my ability to assess the problems that confront this nation, and to show how the executive of this land can use the powers that many executives have not used to satisfy the needs of the American people. I realize that because I am a woman and because I am black people are going to be looking very, very carefully at how I feel. I'm so different from the rest of the persons that are running for candidate, and I think that they would be much more critical of me.

OVP Receives Federal Funds To Initiate Community ACTION

1. What is University Year for ACTION?
University Year for ACTION has two basic objectives. The first is to alleviate poverty through the application of a university's resources to the problems of poor people in the communities which surround it. The second broad objective is to assist universities in providing their students with an experience-based curriculum—one which provides the student with an opportunity to solve actual problems in real situations. These objectives are accomplished by having students receive academic credit for working in poverty areas.

2. How does UYA work?
There are four partners in the University Year for ACTION. ACTION, which provides technical assistance, overall direction and funds for student allowances and administrative costs of the program. The university, which provides academic credit for the student's work, faculty supervision and its resources. The students, who serve for one year as full-time volunteers, and local organizations who actually define jobs and supervise the volunteers' work. The program is an alliance between the federal government, universities, their students and people with low incomes.

3. What makes this program different from VISTA?
Primarily, college credit for doing a full-time job in the poverty community, and the availability of university resources. For example: An economics student at Eastern Washington State at Cheney is working with the black community in Spokane to help them develop new businesses. He has the business department of his college doing a research project on what kinds of business they should start, and where, and he has commitments from several students who have volunteered part-time to advise them. His efforts have also resulted in access to computer time and access to the research facilities at the college's research institute. This volunteer's enterprise shows how the resources of any university can be made directly available to poor people.

4. What kind of support does ACTION provide?
ACTION is the primary source of funding for the university and the student. In addition, ACTION will help colleges and universities to develop their own training facilities by making available to them the people who have had experience in training Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers. Participating universities can draw upon the combined experiences of the agency and ask for assistance in program development, selection techniques, methods of evaluation, etc.

5. How does the University benefit from UYA?
UYA universities receive financial assistance from ACTION which enables them to expand existing community-focused programs, or begin new student-volunteer projects. They receive assistance in training, selection, evaluation and even more important constituencies—the poor. It provides a focal point for student interest in social problems. It is particularly appealing to the rapidly growing number of universities who encourage experiential-based, problem-oriented education.

6. How are jobs identified?
Universities, in developing their UYA programs, ask the community agencies and residents to define their specific needs. From these needed studies, and from specific requests from agencies serving the poor community, jobs are identified. The schools make a concerted effort to match the talents and/or interest of the student-volunteer with requirements of the job to be done.

7. How are students supervised? Graded?
Each student-volunteer in UYA has two supervisors—one in the agency, school or project where he works, the other at the university. They will evaluate the student's progress, help him with problems he encounters, advise him on how he can use university resources. After training, the day-to-day supervision is undertaken by the community or agency supervisor. Grading is usually a joint effort of the two supervisors.

8. How is credit given?
Volunteers will receive academic credit for their year of work in poor communities through study-service programs individually designed by their colleges or universities.

At some colleges the volunteers and faculty members are entering formal learning "contracts" for independent study based on community service. At others, volunteers are earning course credits—without daily classroom attendance—through the related reading, papers, seminars and round-table reports assigned to them by their faculty advisors. It is up to the university to decide how the volunteer should link his service project with his formal education to gain academic credits. An academic program will be developed which meets the needs of students and departments of the University of Vermont.

9. How are student volunteers selected?
Students attending UYA schools must be at least 18 years old before they can be considered for this volunteer program. They are selected for their motivation, their ability to do a job, and their experience. A student-volunteer must be a U.S. citizen or full-time for one year in the community near his university.

10. How does a student benefit from participating in UYA?
UYA offers the student-volunteer an opportunity to learn in a new environment. Each student is being trained to do a specific job—forming a co-op, operating a day care center, teaching adults who have had no basic education, prison counseling. He will get a thorough exposure to the intricacies of community agencies and be able to increase his own skills as he works on solutions to the problems of his adopted community. Student-volunteers will have community supervision and support and university-wide resources to draw on in their work. UYA is a rich experience through which a student can gain a real sense of accomplishment from having done a job that would not have been done without him.

11. What kinds of jobs are student volunteers doing?
UYA volunteers are concentrating their work in several areas. Approximately 49% are in education programs; 26% in health and related programs; 9% in administration of justice and 5% in manpower and job development. Other volunteers are working in housing (4%), welfare and social work (4%), economic and business development, etc. (1%). Specific job descriptions are now being developed with community agency and projects.

12. How is the student trained for his new role?
Training lasts three to four weeks, and is divided between classroom training sessions and visits to the sites where they will learn skills they will need on the job. They learn the basics in preparation for their field work: the purposes of University Year for ACTION, the problems and resources of the community where they will work, still training, how to mobilize additional help, etc.

Volunteers are trained by faculty, community leaders and trainers experienced with VISTA and Peace Corps. No two training programs are identical, since each must reflect the needs of the jobs to be accomplished and the needs of the poor community. While the range of lectures, practical experience and cross-cultural orientation varies, the training period gives each volunteer a thorough look at the problems and prospects for his new community and understanding of what he can realistically accomplish.

13. What is a student-volunteer in UYA paid?
Each student-volunteer receives an average of $200 per month to cover his living expenses. Allowances vary from place to place, but are generally based on room and board allowances for VISTA.

14. How does UYA benefit the poor community?
The primary objective of UYA is service to the poor. UYA provides poor communities with manpower and services which cannot be obtained elsewhere, and persons who are in direct contact with resources previously unavailable or unknown to them. UYA brings people and institutions together to create a greater understanding and to foster an integration in our society between the rich and poor.

15. What kinds of agencies—government, private, community—are involved in the program?
Community Action Agencies (13%), Hospitals (9%), Schools (21%), Model Cities (5%), Indian Tribes (5%), Urban League (4%), Housing Corporations (6%), Correctional Institutions (11%), Local Government (12%), Mental Health Clinics (5%), Day Care and Head Start Centers (3%), Youth Organizations (2%), Centers for retarded/handicapped (3%), Courts/Legal Aid-Centers, etc. (4%).

16. What is the role of the sponsoring agency in defining jobs, in training volunteers, in follow-up and supervision?

Since local organizations have the most intimate contact with poor people, universities ask them to define the problems, to identify jobs and to help in training volunteers by supplying community leaders. Their day-to-day responsibility is to supervise, advise and evaluate the work and progress of the student-volunteer. They will work closely with the students and universities in an effort to help bring all available resources to bear on poverty areas. In the process they become educators themselves, teaching the students assigned to them.

If you are interested in being an Associate VISTA Volunteer in ACTION, have specific skills which would benefit the poverty community, and would like to spend a year giving service while learning, come to OVP in Billings Center for a preliminary interview and additional information.

17. Are graduate students eligible?

Yes. Graduate students can be involved for shorter periods. A semester and a summer of higher skilled input would be beneficial to this program. Graduate students could work in teams with undergraduates to develop maximum impact on a community problem. Credit arrangements will be negotiated with individual academic programs.

What Educators Can Do For The Cause Of Women's Liberation

judge academic performance test scores, grades, and intellectual values—women are able, interested, and high-achieving students.

Test Scores
Data are not lacking on the abilities of men and women as measured by tests. Long before women's rights movements began receiving national attention, test norms were being published separately for males and females simply because they were easily identifiable groups that showed consistent differences in performance.

The results may be broadly summarized by stating that women score higher tests of verbal skills and men score higher in quantitative abilities.

The single best indicator of college performance is the high school record. And there can be no equivocation about the superior academic achievement of women. When measured by the traditional grading system, studies going back as far as 1929 show better grades for females than for males from elementary school through college (Anastasi, 1958).

Cultural norms dictate that if young males to appear conscientious about studies than for females, but it is also that women spend more actual hours on homework than men do. Seventy-four percent of the women and 59% of the men in a nationally unrepresentative sample of college freshmen said that as high school seniors they had studied more than two hours a day (CSQ, 1966). If girls spend more time studying than boys, it seems reasonable that their grades should reflect it.

Women As Workers
Most women who work at paid jobs today are married, living with their husbands, and have children in school (U.S. Department of Labor, 1970). When college women state that they look forward to a future that includes husband, children, and career, they are in a sense simply being realistic. What kinds of careers would they prefer, given unrestricted choice?

The SCOPE project at the University of California asked high school seniors to list their career choices. The results showed that the most popular choices were those of high school teachers. It appears that talented college women will be ready for more challenging jobs when society is capable of handling demanding responsibilities. Meanwhile, most college women plan education that lead to jobs that can be combined with home and family. They as well as many of their counselors, seem to believe that jobs that do not utilize their intellectual capacities are better combined with family responsibilities than jobs that call for greater imagination and talent. Unfortunately, role models who demonstrate the fallacy of this reasoning are all too rare.

Women As Women
Women face certain problems in education because they are women. We know, from many studies, that encouragement from parents bears a high relationship to college attendance. In our society, parents seem to feel that it is important for a son to go to college than for a daughter. But acceptance of an educational double standard depends in part on socioeconomic status. Census Bureau interviews found that the higher the educational level of the parents, the less they were likely to differentiate between the education needs of sons and daughters. For example, 73% of the mothers wanted college for their sons, but only 60% expressed the same desire for their daughters. Among mothers who had attended college, there was virtually no difference in the education desired for males and females. 98% wanted sons to go to college and 97% wanted their daughters to go to college.

And again, in the same publication:
"women's status before the law in one area, such as employment, relates both practically and theoretically to her status in other areas, such as education or responsibility for family support. Coming to grips with the dynamics of discrimination against women requires that we recognize the indications of, the excuses for, and the problems presented by women's inferior status. An understanding of these dynamics in any one field informs and enlightens understanding of sex bias elsewhere in the law. This is because, in the past, the legal and social systems have been permeated with a sometimes inchoate, but nevertheless pervasive, theory of women's inferiority."

Several groups involved in higher education are taking steps to confront this problem. The American Association for Higher Education "commits itself to support the removal of all practices, and procedures that result in failure to reward the talents of women in education that lead to jobs that can be combined with home and family. They as well as many of their counselors, seem to believe that jobs that do not utilize their intellectual capacities are better combined with family responsibilities than jobs that call for greater imagination and talent. Unfortunately, role models who demonstrate the fallacy of this reasoning are all too rare.

more passively c—the questions to be answered are: What should planning begin and what actions can be initiated?

Since women of low socioeconomic status who are not now attending college span the entire range of academic ability, all colleges—from open-door to highly selective institutions—should take active steps to make sure that women are provided equal educational opportunity.

Finally, what should the universities do to bring about equality of educational opportunity for women? First and foremost, an examination of practices that operate to discriminate against women is in order. Most such practices are seemingly related more to historical tradition than to rational decisions; they fall in three major categories: (a) Housing regulations frequently limit women's enrollments to the number of dormitory spaces available. (b) Compared with the better choices of majors offered men, the academic majors that have been attractive to women have been limited. Thus, there have been more "male spaces" in the classrooms. Precollege and college counseling to encourage women to follow their own interests rather than those dictated by cultural stereotypes seems a better long-range solution than attempting to increase the numbers of traditional women's fields. But arbitrary sex quotas—as in colleges of liberal arts for example—frequently operate as a discriminatory mechanism by placing a ceiling on the number of qualified women admitted while permitting the acceptance of men with lower qualifications. (c) Society has tended to look upon universities as male institutions, and females have been slower to apply. The predominance of men on faculties not only perpetuates this view but deprives young adults—both male and female—of the opportunity to interact with talented female scholars. Universities need to make it widely known that women are welcomed into academe on an equal basis with men.

Although this review is optimistic that educators will welcome the fuller participation of women in academic life, past experience with social change indicates that the adjustments will not be easy. The rising aspirations of women, the impatience of the young, the entrenchment of old ways, and the resistance of a tradition-bound enterprise to change all suggest problems ahead if colleges do not begin now to make reforms that take cognizance of this important dimension of social change.

Interview

instance, in these text books you occasionally hear of Dolly Madison, and maybe a quick look at the women at Seneca Falls, and they look at the vote in 1920 and there are your women! Never mind the other levels. Even though women were shut out of the political hierarchy they did make themselves felt in such areas as social reform. It bothers me to hear a professor say to me, "I have been teaching a course in American History, since 1865 and I do not think I have mentioned one woman in the course." I think that this does a great disservice to the student body, one half of whom are women.

CYNIC: What kind of principles do you think are behind the men's liberation movement?

Felt: I see men's liberation as a part of people's liberation, which means simply, it's high time to get out of these sexual stereotypes, it's high time to stop running the family as we've been running it. I'm not arguing either pro or con here, but I would say that if (the family) certainly needs to be changed. It's no male dominated and male oriented now, that I think it's both harmful to the males as well as to the females and children. I think the men will enjoy a society in which there is real equality, in which men are not forced to bring in the total income, in which the whole responsibility does not rest on the male's shoulders.

Felt: Well, I would say that there are as many different structures as there are people, but I think that the traditional family has the father as the head of the household, then the mother and the children down below. I would simply say that I would have equality straight down the line, and by this I mean that the women should be part of the bread winning operation as much as the male, that the child care should be divided, that our economic structure should be changed so that women could be included in the economy. Women should take time out to have the babies the same as men take time out to go to war. Men take two to four years out of their lives, women do this for their childbearing to carry on the race if they so desire. Also, if they don't want to, they shouldn't have to. I think that the children suffer. I think that male psychologists are always yelling that the young children are female dominated, and I think that this may be quite true, that children are exposed to only females. Yet, I think that it is nowhere written that I can scrub floors better than my husband or that he can't change a pair of pants better than I. I think that as it is, structured traditionally, the male is always outside the home, the female is always inside the home, but there are variations on this, of course. I would only encourage that there be more such variations.

CYNIC: What do students here get involved in if they agree with you, or if they have the same ideas?

Felt: Well, I don't know. If the student is interested in Women's Liberation, she should contact the local Women's Liberation Group. The women in the Experimental Program, I would guess, is a historical study of women. For instance, this semester, we are covering the historical background of suffrage movements; the similarities, and dissimilarities between the modern feminist movement and the earlier women's liberation movement. Next semester, we will go into much more of the 19th century in order to examine the way women express themselves historically. But this is not a course stressing that everyone who takes it should belong to Women's Liberation.

Men's Views On

The following survey was conducted on the UVM campus in order to gain some insight into the ideas of men about the continually evolving role of women. Questions were directed to faculty members, administrators, and students (including foreign students). Both the questions and their replies cover a broad range and hopefully will prove thought-provoking.

Do you feel women are discriminated against at this University? In what areas?

Herman Christian, student: When I was growing up and going to school in Norway, boys and girls went to separate schools and that seems normal. When you come to the University level there shouldn't be any difference. Women are equal to men. My impression from the girls I know here, is that there is no discrimination at all. I know I'm not trying to discriminate against them! When they finish here and go out and try to get a job, then maybe they'll be faced with discrimination, but here they're not as far as I can see.

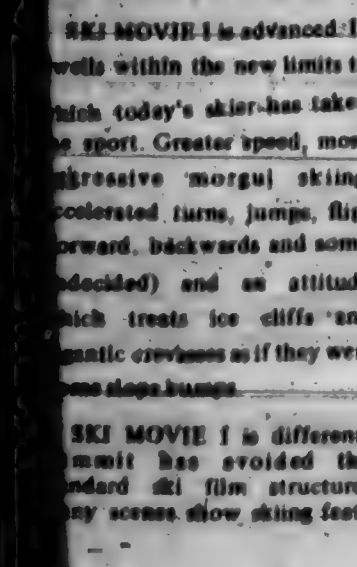

Do you feel a woman is capable of being the President of a large University?

Steve McDonnell, student: Yes, it could happen here, but probably not within the next ten years. I think the trend is to accept women as having the same qualities of leadership as men have traditionally been thought to have.

How do you feel about women's liberation?

Ross McDermott, student: I am not likely to accept it. I think the matter of it is just how it is. It's not a matter of style, it's a matter of substance.

Do you feel a woman is capable of being the President of a large University?

Steve McDonnell, student: Yes, it could happen here, but probably not within the next ten years. I think the trend is to accept women as having the same qualities of leadership as men have traditionally been thought to have.

judgment, academic performance, test scores, status, and intellectual values - women are able, interested, and high-achieving students.

Test Scores
Data are not lacking on the abilities of men and women as measured by tests. Long before women's rights movements began receiving national attention, test norms were being published separately for males and females simply because they were easily identifiable groups that showed consistent differences in performance.

The results may be broadly summarized by stating that women score higher tests of verbal skills and men score higher in quantitative abilities.

Grades
The single best indicator of college performance is the high school record. And there can be no equivocation about the superior academic achievement of women when measured by the traditional grading system. Studies going back as far as 1929 show better grades for females than for males from elementary school through college (Anastasi, 1958).

Cultural norms dictate that it is somewhat less acceptable for young males to appear conscientious about studies than for females, but it is also true that women spend more actual hours on homework than men do. Seventy-four percent of the women and 59% of the men in a nationally unrepresentative sample of college freshmen said that as high school seniors they had studied more than two hours a day (CSQ, 1966). If girls spend more time studying than boys, it seems reasonable that their grades should reflect it.

Women As Workers
Most women who work at paid jobs today are married, living with their husbands, and have children in school (U.S. Department of Labor, 1970). When college women state that they look forward to a future that includes husband, children, and career, they are in a sense simply being realistic. What kinds of careers would they prefer, given unrestricted choice?

The SCOPE project at the University of California asked high school seniors from four states to indicate what jobs they would really enjoy doing regardless of whether they had the choices of women scoring in the lowest third of the class on a test for academic ability with those scoring in the upper third. I found that the choices could be grouped into three clusters, a group of jobs liked by the majority of low-ability but not by high ability women, a group of jobs popular with high-ability but not low-ability women, and a group of jobs liked by women without respect to ability. Most popular among the low ability women the majority of whom did not plan to attend college were the traditional women's jobs - typist, secretary, and office clerk. Jobs liked by high ability women, most of whom were headed for college, included author of a novel, high school teacher, and college professor (college president and doctor were next in order). The top three choices that showed no difference by ability groupings were the frequently romanticized feminine jobs of housewife, airline hostess, and social worker.

Although much has been written about the low aspirations of women, high ability women show abundant aspiration when faced with the instruction to "be realistic." The only job that is likely to be realized by a sizable percentage of these young women however, is that of high school teacher. It appears that talented college women will be ready for more challenging jobs when society is ready to consider women capable of handling demanding responsibilities. Meanwhile, most college women plan education that lead to jobs that "can be combined with home and family." They as well as many of their counselors, seem to believe that jobs that do not utilize their intellectual capacities are better combined with family responsibilities than jobs that call for greater imagination and talent. Unfortunately, role models who demonstrate the fallacy of this reasoning are all too rare.

Women As Women
Women face certain problems in education because they are women. We know, from many studies, that encouragement from parents bears a high relationship to college attendance. In our society, parents seem to feel that it is important for a son to go to college than for a daughter. But acceptance of an educational double standard depends in part on socioeconomic status. Census Bureau interviews found that the higher the educational level of the parents, the more likely were their daughters to attend college. For example, 73% of the mothers with a grade school education wanted college for their sons, but only 60% expressed the same desire for their daughters. Among mothers who had attended college, there was virtually no difference in the education desired for males and females 98% wanted sons to go to college and 97% wanted their daughters to go to college.

Women as women in our society share a problem with other groups of people that have not been a part of the dominant culture, and that is one of diminished self confidence. Much as members of ethnic minorities have been encouraged to set their aspirations realistically for jobs that would be open to them, women have been encouraged to think about elementary school teaching rather than college teaching, about typing instead of business management, and about becoming nurses rather than doctors. These constant reminders of secondary status in society result in self concepts that are in accord with cultural expectations. Not many colleges collect information about student attitudes year after year, but were they to do so, they would find some very interesting trends with respect to female students. One women's college has administered the College Students' Questionnaire to the entering freshman class each year since 1964. The most dramatic changes to take place over the six-year period occurred in student perceptions of women's roles. One question asked what the respondent would like to be doing 15 years hence. Sixty-five percent of the 1964 freshman class opted for the role of housewife with one or more children. In 1970 only 31 percent of the entering class preferred the traditional female role.

Implications for Action
A knowledge of information about the academic interest and abilities of young women and about the dramatic changes taking place in the multiple roles of women in modern society suggests that actions a and b proposed in the opening paragraph of this review are inappropriate responses to the women's rights movement. The drive of young women to attain education and to use their knowledge and their minds is no less than that of young men. There is no reason to think that the demands for full educational rights for women will or should subside. Assuming that most educators will select the stance described by alternative d - and somewhat more passively c - the questions to be answered are: Where should planning begin and what actions can be initiated?

Since women of low socioeconomic status who are not now attending college span the entire range of academic ability, all colleges - from open-door to highly selective institutions - should take active steps to make sure that women are provided equal educational opportunity.

Finally, what should the universities do to bring about equality of educational opportunity for women? First and foremost, an examination of practices that operate to discriminate against women is in order. Most such practices are seemingly related more to historical tradition than to rational decisions; they fall in three major categories: (a) Housing regulations frequently limit women's enrollments to the number of dormitory spaces available. (b) Compared with the broad choices of majors offered men, the academic majors that have been attractive to women have been limited. Thus, there have been more "male spaces" in the classrooms. Precollege and college counseling to encourage women to follow their own interests rather than those dictated by cultural stereotypes seems a better long-range solution than attempting to increase the numbers of traditional women's fields. But arbitrary sex quotas - as in colleges of liberal arts - placing a ceiling on the number of qualified women admitted while permitting the acceptance of men with lower qualifications. (c) Society has tended to look upon universities as male institutions, and females have been slower to apply. The predominance of men on faculties not only perpetuates this view but deprives young adults - both male and female - of the opportunity to interact with talented female scholars. Universities need to make it widely known that women are welcomed into academe on an equal basis with men.

Although this review is optimistic that educators will welcome the fuller participation of women in academic life, past experience with social change indicates that the adjustments will not be easy. The rising aspirations of women, the impetuosity of the young, the entrenchment of old ways, and the resistance of a tradition-bound enterprise to change all suggest problems ahead if colleges do not begin now to make reforms that take cognizance of this important dimension of social change.

instance, in these text books you occasionally hear of Dolly Madison, and maybe a quick look at the women at Seneca Falls, and they they look at the vote in 1920 and there are your women! Never mind the other levels. Even though women were shut out of the political hierarchy they did make themselves felt in such areas as social reform. It bothers me to hear a professor say to me, "I have been teaching a course in American History, since 1865 and I do not think I have mentioned one woman in the course." I think that this does a great disservice to the student body, one half of whom are women.

CYNIC: What kind of principles do you think are behind the women's liberation movement?

Felt: I see men's liberation as a part of people's liberation, which means simply, it's high time to get out of these sexual stereotypes, it's high time to stop running the family as we've been running it. I'm not arguing either pro or con here, but I would say that it (the family) certainly needs to be changed. It's no male dominated and male oriented now, that I think it's both harmful to the males as well as to the females and children. I think the men will enjoy a society in which there is real equality, in which men are not forced to bring in the total income, in which the whole responsibility does not rest on the male's shoulders.

Felt: Well, I would say that there are no many different structures in there now people, but I think that the traditional family has the father as the head of the household, then the mother and the children down below. I would simply say that I would have equality straight down the line, and by this I mean that the women should be part of the broad winning operation as much as the male, that the child care should be divided, that our economic structure should be changed so that women could be included in the economy. Women should take time out to have the babies the same as men take time out to go to war. Men take two to four years out of their lives, women do this for their childbearing to carry on the race if they so desire. Also, if they don't want to, they shouldn't have to. I think that the children suffer. I think that male psychologists are always yelling that the young children are female dominated, and I think that this may be quite true, that children are exposed to only females. Yet, I think that it is nowhere written that I can scrub floors better than my husband or that he can't change a pair of pants better than I. I think that as it is structured traditionally, the male is always outside the home, the female is always inside the home, but there are variations on this, of course. I would only encourage that there be more such variations.

CYNIC: What do students here get involved in if they agree with you, or if they have the same ideas?

Felt: Well, I don't know. If the student is interested in Women's Liberation, she should contact the local Women's Liberation Group. The course in the Experimental Program, I would stress, is a historical study of women. For instance, this semester, we are covering the historical background of suffrage movements, the similarities, and dissimilarities between the modern feminist movement and the earlier women's liberation movement. Next semester, we will go into much more of the 19th century in order to examine the way women express themselves historically. But this is not a course stressing that everyone who takes it should belong to Women's Liberation.

consequent impact on existing laws and institutions.

And again, in the same publication:

"... woman's status before the law in one area, such as employment, relates both practically and theoretically to her status in other areas, such as education or responsibility for family support. Coming to grips with the dynamics of discrimination against women requires that we recognize the indications of, the causes for, and the problems presented by women's inferior status. An understanding of these dynamics is any one field informs and enlightens understanding of sex bias elsewhere in the law. This is because, in the past, the legal and social systems have been permeated with a sometimes inchoate, but nevertheless pervasive, theory of women's inferiority."

Several groups involved in higher education are taking steps to confront this problem. The American Association for Higher Education... commits itself to support the removal of all practices and procedures that result in failure to reward the talents of women in education on the same basis as those of men." The Intercollegiate Association of Women Students passed a resolution stating that "... each local AWS organization develop a Commission on the Status of Women to explore in depth such areas as: education, home and community services, private employment, employment in the Federal Government, labor standards, and the legal treatment of women in respect to civil and political rights." Later the group established a set of guidelines for schools wishing to establish such commissions.

Among the resolutions passed at the 1970 and 1971 conventions of the NAWDC were: support of the Equal Employment Opportunity of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; support of the IAWS to change its programming emphasis to enable women students to understand and take action against sex discrimination; urge passage of the Equal Rights Amendment; support employment of women in education; work for establishment of counselor offices in women study courses.

In closing her remarks about the educated woman's future, Miss Harris stated: "I believe that basic legal equality for women is a prerequisite for equal access to education, to financial aid, to graduate education, to equal consideration in the curriculum and activities and especially as equal voter and vote on campus in student groups, in the faculty and administration."

Men's Views On

The following survey was conducted on the UVM campus in order to gain some insight into the ideas of men about the continually evolving role of women. Questions were directed to faculty members, administrators, and students (including foreign students). Both the questions and their replies cover a broad range and hopefully will prove thought-provoking.

Do you feel women are discriminated against at this University? In what areas?

Herman Christiansen, student: When I was growing up and going to school in Norway, boys and girls went to separate schools and that seems unnatural. When you come to the University level there shouldn't be any difference. Women are equal to men. My impression from the girls I know here, is that there is no discrimination at all. Ski Movie I

Fresh air, blue sky, and freedom are in the mountains. Skiing is fast becoming the nature lovers' number one escape. Learn what skiing can offer you - SKI MOVIE I - from Summit Films, offers you the opportunity to "escape" and enjoy. Enjoy SKI MOVIE I on November 21, at 7:00 and 9:30 and escape to the UVM Life Sciences Auditorium for ninety minutes of the best footage from Summit Films of Denver, Colorado.

It excerpts and expands sequences previously introduced in such award winning films as THE MOEBIUS FLIP, THE GREAT SKI CHASE, SKI RACER, and SKI THE OUTER LIMITS. SKI MOVIE I is a potpourri of all the fun, mistakes and crazy happenings that didn't fit the ponsor's script, but most important of all, it includes miles of exciting current action that only Summit has viewed.

SKI MOVIE I is advanced. It tells within the new limits to which today's skier has taken sport. Greater speed, more aggressive mogul skiing, accelerated turns, jumps, flips forward, backward and some (scooped) and an attitude which treats ice cliffs and scenic viewings as if they were some slope bumps.

SKI MOVIE I is different. Summit has avoided the standard ski film structure. Any scenes show skiing feet

Would you apply to a graduate program geared primarily towards women?

Gary Hazard, student: If it was my field of interest it wouldn't matter if it was geared primarily towards women. Most men don't make these types of fields of interest, however. The fact that men nurses are far out numbered by women is an example of this.

Do you feel that women should take part in the working world?

Dr. Mark Stoler, History Dept. Yes, I can't think of any reason why they shouldn't. It's very hard for me to believe there's any serious thinker who still believes that a woman's "place" is in the home. I find it extremely difficult. If not impossible to comprehend such logic at this stage.

How do you feel about women running for the presidency?

Ross McDonald, student: It is not likely within the near future, because the attitudes of the nation aren't ready to accept it. It's not so much a matter of discrimination, it's just how they'll think of it...maybe it's discrimination...not conscious, however.

Where do you feel a woman fits into the social structure of this University?

Pete Montagna, student: Women on campus lack the initiative to organize and plan in the social sphere of this University. Because of this most of the activity is carried out by male interest groups. Consequently if women complain about the lack of social activity it's their own fault. If they left their chairs by the dormitory and sorority telephones, they really could get something going on campus.

How do you see the role of women in society?

Joe Foley, student: Women are getting away from the straight housewife stereotype and are becoming freer and more individualistic. Everyone is getting away from being so inhibited by society's morals especially women.

Do you feel that women are taking or should take a more active role in University affairs?

Dean Roland Patzer, Dean of Students: The role is increasing. I think they should take a more active role particularly since the population UVM has a greater percentage of women per capita than most Universities. If for no other reason than the role model, indigenous to either sex, women should take a more active role.

Juilliard String Quartet To Perform At Ira Allen Chapel

The Juilliard String Quartet, the world's leading chamber ensemble, will perform on the Lane Series on Fri., Nov. 19, at 8:30.

The hall is Ira Allen Chapel (and a lot of Memorial Auditorium). A limited number of seats are available in the Lane Office, 234 We termen. Tel. 656-3418 for reservations.

Programmed for Friday's performance are Haydn's Quartet in G major (op. 77, no. 1, 1799) Bartok's Quartet No. 3 (1927), and Beethoven's Quartet in F major (op. 59, No. 1, 1807).

The group comprises Robert Mann, violin, Earl Carlyn, violin, Samuel Rhodes, viola, and Jean Adam, cello.

It is common knowledge that "the Juilliard String Quartet represents the very model of modern quartet playing at its best," as Harold Schonberg of the New York Times put it. "The Juilliard has long held the loftiest place among world quartets and last night when they played Beethoven it was a genuine meeting at the summit," according to the Pittsburgh Press.

The highlights of the Juilliard String Quartet's 1970-71 season were Bartok cycles in New York, Chicago, and at the University of California in Berkeley, their traditional fall and spring concert series at the Library of Congress, three concerts with Jean-Pierre Rampal, and one with Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau.

Last season included Beethoven cycles in Chicago, New York, and Los Angeles, and a very successful three concert series at Stanford University. The Juilliard String Quartet spent the four summer months of 1970 concertizing throughout Europe, including guest appearances at the major festivals. They played at the Vienna Festwochen, the Israel Festival, the Dubrovnik Festival, the Lucerne Festival, and gave several concerts with Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau.

An aura of glamor surrounds each of the Quartet's appearance. When they celebrated their 20th anniversary in the spring of 1967, New week tried to define the reason: "The extraordinary unity the Juilliard Quartet achieves is not the compromise of four musicians mixing a rich homogenized brew with every musical ingredient at hand; instead, the players dynamically assert their individuality, intensifying the tension between the one and the many. The Juilliard's uninhibited performance crackles with electricity as they gamble on a promised fusion that can be almost nuclear in its explosiveness."

In addition to their activities as quartet-in-residence of the Juilliard School of Music in New York, they have been quartet-in-residence at the Library of Congress since 1962. The latter makes the Juilliard Quartet the official First Family of Chamber Music in the United States and also gives them the privilege of using the invaluable Stradivarius instruments willed to the people of the United States by Mrs. Gertrude Clarke Whittall in 1936.

The Quartet's first violinist, Robert Mann, was born in Portland, Oregon, where he received his initial musical training. A Juilliard alumnus, he studied violin under Edouard Dethier in addition to composition. Among those who frequently performed his works was the late Dimitri Mitropoulos. After winning a Naumburg Award, Mr. Mann made his debut in 1941, touring from then on as soloist as well as first violinist of the Albuquerque Festival String Quartet. He still appears as a soloist and has recorded a number of solo works, among them the Bartok Sonata for Unaccompanied Violin.

Second violinist, Earl Carlyn, also a Juilliard alumnus, is a native of Chicago. After having won a grant from the David Epstein Memorial Foundation in California, then a two-year scholarship from the Paris Conservatoire, he was awarded a six-year scholarship by the Juilliard School of Music in 1957 from which he graduated with the school's highest award of excellence, the Morris Loeb Memorial Prize for Strings. He made his professional debut with the Pasadena Symphony, toured Scandinavia twice, and was concert master of the New York City Ballet Orchestra. 1962 marked his recital debut in New York.

Samuel Rhodes, violist, was born in New York City. He first studied with Sydney Beck and later with the distinguished violist Walter Trampler, a composer as well as a violist. Mr. Rhodes holds a Master Fine Arts degree from Princeton, where he studied with Earl Kim and Roger Sessions. For nine summers Mr. Rhodes has participated in the Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont. He has been featured several times in the Music from Marlboro series at Town Hall and on tour. He took a prominent role in Marlboro's State Department sponsored tour of Europe and the Near East in the summer of 1965. Mr. Rhodes has also been a member of the Calmar String Quartet.

An exotic touch is added by the Quartet's cellist, Jean Adam, who was born of Austrian parents in Indonesia, the son of an ethnologist father and a singer-mother. He attended schools in Europe, beginning his formal musical education at the comparatively late age of fourteen. His first professional appearance was as a soloist, but with a boy's choir in Salzburg, Austria. He then came to the United States where he earned a Ph.D. in Musicology and finally studied with Emanuel Feuermann. Thereafter, he served as solo cellist with the National Orchestral Association and the Minneapolis Symphony under Dimitri Mitropoulos, and later on joined the New Music Quartet to which he belonged for seven years. He too is an acknowledged composer; his piano sonata and other of his works were performed at the 30th Anniversary celebration of the International Society for Contemporary Music in Salzburg.

The next concert on the Lane Series is the Budapest Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Gyorgy Lehel, with Ferenc Tarjani as horn soloist. The concert takes place on Mon., Nov. 29. A limited number of tickets are available at $5.25 and $3.75.

Lane Series Review:

Gordon Lightfoot

By Bob Miller

On November 15, the Seventeenth Lane Series brought to Burlington's Memorial Auditorium, Canadian folk artist Gordon Lightfoot. The concert started at exactly 8:30, which surprised and delighted the almost capacity crowd. Appearing first on stage were his sidemen, a lead guitarist and a bass guitarist. They accompanied him on most of his numbers. Next Lightfoot lumbered onto the stage with guitar in tow and launched into his opening number which was the title song to his most recent album "Summer Side of Life."

During his first set, he performed many of the songs that have given him fame here in the States. Among these were: "For Loving Me," "Did She Mention My Name?" "Early Morning Rain." Undoubtedly the high point of the set and perhaps of the evening was his exquisite performance of "If you could read my mind," a hit single of his earlier this year. But unfortunately the others lacked emotion although besides this, their execution was flawless. Even though flawed by the lack of intense feeling, Lightfoot's voice was especially beautiful Monday night bringing to many songs a complexity, a tonal flavor.

Throughout both sets were sprinkled new songs that will appear on his next album which he said will be taped in January. They were well-received on the whole to which Lightfoot seemed more relaxed during the second set, more at ease with the audience, even to the point of blowing quite a bit. The set seemed short although it is true that the first set was extremely long. After receiving a standing ovation, he came back for an encore which was a song which has been made into a children's book. It was soft and beautiful and it ended the evening as if with a hush.

Although the only adjective that one can use about this concert is "really fine," it still does not come close to the Lane Series concert of Tom Rush's last March either in intensity or in freshness of material although much of the material used by Rush was not new as indeed was much of Lightfoot's repertoire. This comparison is unfortunate but because he is highly respected in his field, one just expects more of an effort than what was given Monday night. Of course, it is a sign of how talented Lightfoot is that you can call even one of his half-hearted concerts "really fine."

Cats Lose Final Season Tilt

The Vermont Football team has shown a marked improvement over the last, next year should see more sophistication and success as the team will be laden with returning experience. Last Saturday's game proved to be somewhat uneventful until the end of the first quarter. It was at this time that the Huskies drew first blood for the contest on a 30 yard pass play, the first of many such touchdown passes for the afternoon.

However, the Cats were quick to retaliate as they moved 55 yards in nine plays, culminating the drive with the score as Bob Rodger dashed over the scoring stripe next to the right sideline. Successful kicks by both sides left the game at a 7-7 tie at this point.

The Cats were fortunate in the fact that they will only lose twelve members of their squad through graduation. If the recruiting campaign of Coach Joe Scarella proves to be as successful as this year has shown it can be, the prospectus for the coming year continues to improve, just as the team as a whole will hopefully improve.

The season as a whole was not as bad as the final statistics would indicate. Despite the loss of seven games, four of those contests were not lost by the inferiority or superiority of either club, but merely due to inexperience and careless mistakes. Just as this season

If the recruiting campaign of Coach Joe Scarella proves to be as successful as this year has shown it can be, the prospectus for the coming year continues to improve, just as the team as a whole will hopefully improve.

The season as a whole was not as bad as the final statistics would indicate. Despite the loss of seven games, four of those contests were not lost by the inferiority or superiority of either club, but merely due to inexperience and careless mistakes. Just as this season situation proved almost disastrous. Steve Coon, who has shown himself to be the most consistent runner for the Cats during most of the season, caught four passes for 30 yards and contributed another 33 on five carries.

Bob Rodger completed his college career on a fitting note, scoring the only Vermont touchdown of the afternoon.

Tim Sullivan who was double teamed most of the day and hence had a lot of trouble breaking free for the reception, made a significant contribution to the offense as he had three receptions for 39 yards. However, he fell seven receptions short of the Yankee Conference lead.

The final statistics of the contest show that the Cats were overwhelmed in just about every aspect of the game. They managed to get only nine first downs to the opposition's 19. The Huskies ground attack netted a total of almost 200 yards, but Vermont was only able to drive for the discouraging total of 21, and the passing picture was not much more optimistic as Northeastern surpassed the UVM total by over 100 yards.

UVM suffered four fumbles but still managed to keep the ball in their possession. However, the Northeastern club was not so lucky as they bobbled the ball three times and lost possession twice.

Looking Back

On UVM Hockey

Way back in 1968, an area hockey squad struggled to finish above the break even mark. Although exhibiting an exciting brand of hockey, they failed to come up with the "big play." Spectators left saying to themselves "Just wait a couple of years," knowing that when the kids matured, they would be tough.

Suddenly it was the fall of 1969 and a "couple of years" was the University of Vermont Cats, sitting with a 4-4 record, exploding for eight straight wins including a 6-3 shocker against the Division I power New Hampshire. The Cats were in the play-off picture and nothing would stop them now.

Two 100+ daughters over Williams and Connecticut highlighted the second half that brought them to a 16-8 record. Following a 5-1 defeat over Middlebury, Vermont traveled to Brunswick, Maine for the Championship Contest against Bowdoin. Faced by the stick handling Jim Yeates and the reflexes of David Reece the Cats pulled an upset and a 4-1 victory for the Division II crown.

What would the Cats do in the 1970-71 season to equal the previous year? Even Jim Cross, the coach of the defending champions said that duplicating the previous year would be next to impossible. After all wasn't Jim Yeates, last year's MVP gone and with him All-American George Kriener, "flamboyant" Jeff MacDougall, steady Bob Krebs, Dick Mullany and "Mr. Spirit" Bob Bonestahill?

Not only did the Cats duplicate the previous year record but they knocked off thenationally ranked Harvard twice on Harvard's home ice, the final score being 3-2. Again youth plus experience provided victory. Solid seniors like reckless Tim Bickford, arrogant George Minarsky, whose efficiency oozed disdain from the opposition, Owen Jenkins and Tom Crane molded in with the underclassmen created a well disciplined unit in front of the "great one," Dave Reece.

David can only be described in superlatives. Occasionally, Reece had a bad game, but when he was hot no one could touch him. Again and again, Reece would stop shots from all angles. Even a harrowing "5 and 3" situation with two Cats in the penalty box did not phase the "Moon."

The Cats finished last season on the losing end of a 5-4 decision to Bowdoin in the championship contest. But like any Jim Cross team, Vermont accepted defeat with pride in themselves. Twice the Cats rebounded from two goal deficits to tie the score.

This brings us to the present. Little 5' 7" Patty Wright, last year's leading scorer, is back. Wright will again be teamed with Fred Hunt, the man with the greatest number of actual goals last season. Along with captain Ted Yeates, Brad Cooke, Ned Grant, and Sam Simmons, Vermont has the nucleus for the possibility of the best team ever.

Right now, the weight of the team is on Steve Eckerson's shoulders. If he can replace Reece effectively, the Cats may set a new win-loss record. Knowing Jim Cross and the team past and present, it can't be against it.

Ice Cats Dump Visiting Canadians

A myth of sorts was shattered on Saturday night when Vermont defeated the West-Lapointe Claire Flyers 5-2. The mystic surrounding Canadian hockey would have remained intact if Vermont had edged out the Flyers but the Cats dominated the entire contest.

The game characterized by hard-checking, crisp passing, and a tight defense.

Vermont controlled play for the first nine minutes of the game before Ted Yeates put the Cats out in front 1-0. Yeates scored on a 25 foot slap shot which went past goalie Mike Corcoran's glove side. Corcoran played a good game for the Flyers despite the fact that he allowed four scores during the contest.

The second goal of the evening for Vermont came as a result of a power play situation. Jamie Batemann went out at 10:09 for checking in the offensive zone. Ted Castle lit the lamp 35 seconds later after getting a fine pass from Patty Wright.

The Flyers big problem throughout the entire game was clearing the puck from their own zone. They just weren't able to escape from their end of the rink. Poor passing was a major factor in their inability to move the puck.

The Cats third goal came at 14:40 in the first period on a fine display of passing. Patty Wright had the puck behind and to the right of Corcoran. Wright passed to Castle who swept the puck over to Fred Hunt, who put the shot past the Flyers goalie, again on the glove side. Steve Eckerson played an excellent game in the goal for Vermont.

Vermont. Eckerson made some fine saves on point blank shots by the Flyers. The only goal scored against him was when he was partially screened and Bill Davidson put a wrist shot over Eckerson's left shoulder.

Brad Cooke put Jamie Batemann out of action after a devastating check late in the first period. Batemann was reported to have injured his hip. The second period showed a good deal tighter play as each team managed to score one goal apiece. Rick Burns scored the fourth Vermont goal as he put a slap shot over the right side of Corcoran. Willie MacKinnon got an assist on the play. Corcoran was screened on the play by one of his team-mates.

Bob Hodde, Mt. A scoring his first goal of the season by two inches. Hodde slammed a hard slap shot from the left, which in turn hit the goalie's left arm and then the left side of the cross-bar of the net.

With the start of the third period, both teams had changed goalies. John Kiely from Vermont was the first to get his feet wet as Jim Mills rocketed a slap-shot to Kiely's right and into the goal. However, the opposition's goalie Greg McKee didn't escape unscathed as Ned Grant put in a shot the final score of the night.

Vermont opens its season against Clarkson at 7:00 PM. in a home game.

You know, sitting on the bench is not half as bad as it looks. Oh, I'll be the first to admit that you do get a little sore in a few places, but it has its advantages too. I get one of the best seats in the house, courtside right in front of all the action, and it's free too. I sit to hear Coach Art Locke whisper sweet nothings into the referee's ear.

But besides all that, I sit to see the little things that can't be seen from the stands. They're just little things but they make a team a team. Little things like the pressure that Ray Ortiz is under because he knows for us to win he has to be putting the ball in the hoop. Or the pressure on Nate Reeves to get it all together before December 1. Then I see the never dying desire exhibited by Greg Ashford each day, the desire to want to do it all, and he can. Then there is Jim Ducey. He can be as smooth as silk once he knows he can do the job, but until he knows it's an uphill battle.

Or how about Neil Herman, a perfectionist from the word go, but when things aren't clicking, it's tough for him too.

I've watched Mark Miller for two years. One year from the stands, one year from the bench, and so far this year...you guessed it...from the bench, and I really think that this could be his year. He always had the ability, and this year he has the desire too.

And then there are those of us who sit on the bench, and watch, and listen. But it really isn't all that bad because there are some nice legs in the stands worth looking at.

THE INSIDER

by Sam Simmons

A rink rat can be defined in several ways, but at UVM's rink they are generally known as anyone who devotes a considerable amount of time to following the hockey team. Some think themselves "afficionados," but most are interested because they know or know of someone involved with the team. I have found that the UVM species of the rink rat may be classified into three very general categories: 1) those whose attendance record at practices is probably better than the players on the team; 2) those who would travel to Boston or Portland or Waterville or Philadelphia to watch their team play and 3) those who sit in groups at games and cheer only for their favorite player. Most of the rink rats fall into one of these categories; several belong in all three.

The "afficionados," are usually found in the first two classifications. They spend their afternoons huddled together in the stands, speaking quietly among themselves, nodding or shaking their heads from time to time in approval or disapproval of a play on the ice. Some will drive anywhere, at any time, under any conditions to see a UVM away game. Since traveling to and from these games consumes a considerable amount of time, I tend to wonder when certain rink rats would have the time to write term papers and others find time to take care of Christmas trees.

The third category is usually made up of the female of the species and can be found in packs of five or six, sitting together at home games. Two such groupings come to mind because of the particular characteristics. In the first group, not one is over 5'2" tall and everytime "madcap" Pat Wright touches the puck, they squirm and squeal with delight. The other group is on the taller side, has a much more serious attitude. Whenever "Eckto-Chango" makes a save, their glasses fog up and they begin to wonder who really lurks behind that omnipresent white mask.

In finishing up, I think it proper to remark that if the term "rink rat" seems derogatory to anyone, they have taken the wrong meaning. Rink rats are actually great people who have helped as much as anyone else to make hockey at UVM what it is today.

Trustees To Consider UVM-VSC Merger At Saturday's Meeting

by Ariene Erikson
The Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont is about to be presented with a proposal that will be of very special significance to the future of higher education in the Green Mountain State.

Tomorrow the Board will be considering the recommendation of a joint committee of UVM and Vermont State Colleges Trustees that the institutions be joined to form one fully coordinated system of higher education. The institutions involved are the University of Vermont and State Agricultural College, Lyndon State College, Castleton State College, Johnson State College, Vermont Technical College, and Vermont Community College.

The enabling act being presented before the Board provides for the creation of a public corporation known as "The Vermont University." The primary purpose of the corporation will be to coordinate the academic programs of the individual institutions and to thereby avoid unnecessary duplication of effort. If the proposal meets with the approval of the UVM Board of Trustees and the other colleges, an act incorporating provisions for the establishment of the Vermont University will be submitted to the General Assembly in January 1972. It is hoped that the corporation will become effective on July 1, 1972.

According to the report of the Joint Commission on Higher Education Planning, the Vermont University will "assume all of the purposes, powers and assets and perform all the duties" of the aforementioned schools. It is stressed, however, that the individual schools will still remain largely autonomous. They will be designated as separate educational components of the Vermont University. Each school will have its own president and provisions will be made for each institution to use bequests and gifts made to it.

Besides coordinating efforts within the Vermont University, the report also recommends that specific direction be given to encourage coordination of educational plans between the Vermont University, Vermont's private colleges, the Vermont Student Assistance Corporation, the Vermont Higher Education Facilities Commission and the State Department of Education.

One of the most innovative aspects of the proposed merger is the creation of a single Board of Trustees to govern all the institutions within the Vermont University. The Board will have the administrative responsibility for all programs of public higher education in Vermont. The Board will be made up of twenty-one members, with the Governor as an additional, ex-officio member. Six members will be elected by the General Assembly for six year terms, with two members, terms expiring each biennium. With the advice and consent of the Senate, nine members will be appointed by the Governor, they will serve six year terms, with three members' terms expiring each biennium. Six members will be self-perpetuating, being elected for six year terms by the Board from nominations made by themselves, with two members' terms expiring each biennium. No member of the Board of Trustees can serve more than one full term consecutively.

According to President Andrews, the idea of finding a way in which UVM and VSC might work more closely and fruitfully together has been talked about for the last ten years. However, serious efforts for cooperation between the schools did not gain genuine momentum until most recently. The impetus to form one system of public higher education began with informal talks among the colleges' administrative officials last spring. The UVM-VSC cooperation was given a formal status last summer when the VSC Board invited President Andrews to attend its meetings and the UVM Board of Trustees did likewise for VSC Provost Robert S. Babcock.

Governor Davis gave formal notice to his intent by naming Mrs. Ruth Page, editor of the Suburban List and a former VSC Trustee, as his special liaison to meet with both UVM and VSC Boards.

A further step was taken by the naming of three members of each Board to a special joint committee to study the matter. The VSC Board named Dr. Frank Smallwood of Norwich, Vermont, a faculty member at Dartmouth; Richard Wadham of Burlington, and Dr. Edward K. Raiman of Rutland. The UVM Board named Luther F. Hackett, and George Little, Jr., both of Burlington, and Thomas Candon of Rutland. In addition President Andrews, Paul Andrews, Dr. Robert Babcock, Ruth Page and Dr. Wayne Patterson have served as ex-officio members of this Joint Committee on Higher Education Planning.

According to Dr. Wayne Patterson, Executive Vice President, the main advantage of the Vermont University will be the inevitable improvement of the educational system in this state. Through centralization, the post-secondary institutions of Vermont will be able to offer their students more flexible and coordinated programs in such areas as technology, education and the allied health sciences.

The creation of the Vermont University will also help to alleviate financial pressures. With a single Board of Trustees, there will be a consequential savings on administrative expenditures. The efficiency of a single Board of Trustees will also result in efficiencies in program allocations of resources. Thus the taxpayer and the student will get a greater return-per dollar on the higher education budget.

Neither President Andrews nor Dr. Patterson foresees the UVM-VSC merger as having an immediate effect on tuition or as having any effect at all on the in-state out-of-state ratio. It is anticipated that there will be a liberal arts curriculum on each campus and that the greatest modifications will come in the areas of technology and education. There will be a breakdown in many traditional curricula for students; that is, there will most likely be a significant development in ETV as an educator on the college level and a better utilization of science labs in off-hours.

When questioned as to the possible disadvantages of such a merger, Dr. Patterson replied that the only element which could greatly hurt it would be that of poor leadership. Presently Vermont and Delaware are the only two states without higher education programs. In a comprehensive survey of the higher education program in other states, it was found that the program's success weighed

VPIRG Offers Board 4,000 Signatures

by Ariene Erikson
For the past few weeks a highly motivated group of students has been actively petitioning the resident and off-campus students of UVM in support of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group. This weekend the VPIRG workers hope to have their efforts rewarded by gaining the approval of the Board of Trustees and thereby obtaining a means of collecting funds on the college level.

Today and tomorrow Gary McQuesten and Gene Beaudoin will be speaking to members of the Educational Policy Committee, the Student Activities Committee, and the Budget and Finance Committee. They will be presenting to the Board approximately 4,000 student signatures as well as petitions of support from deans in the various colleges of UVM.

If approval is granted on Saturday, each student will be assessed three dollars for VPIRG on his bill for next semester. Students not wishing to support VPIRG, however, will be entitled to a full refund during the third week of the semester.

Regarding the progress of other schools in Vermont, Johnson has the signatures of 66% of the student body; Middlebury 50%; Castleton, 60%; and Marlborough's VPIRG has already passed its Board of Trustees. On Sunday there will be a statewide meeting of VPIRG at Proctor Hall in Middlebury College. A meeting for the UVM VPIRG is also scheduled for 7:00 pm. on Sunday in the Roundhouse of Billings.

The goal of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group is to form an organization in which students can employ a professional staff (lawyers, engineers, scientists) to bring about social betterment effectively, legally and non-violently.

It is felt that the staff of professionals will help Vermont students to overcome difficulties they have had in the past in coming to grips with issues. The staff of professionals would (1) work full time, uninterrupted by classes, exams, or student vacation breaks, (2) have the expertise to follow issues through to their conclusion, (3) provide continuity to the mobile campus population and (4) focus student energies to secure maximum leverage and effect.

The interim leaders of VPIRG have chosen five general areas in which to work. The five areas are consumer protection; services and utilities; taxes; environmental problems; and health and legal aid.

The VPIRG professional staff and student members will work together on social problems of general public concern. Initially they will research and analyze problems. The results of their work will then be publicized in order to educate the public. In addition their research will be used as evidence when VPIRG appears before administrative and regulatory agencies, lobbies for legislative action at local and state levels and litigates in the courts.

Since the projects that VPIRG will undertake will be decided upon by the student bodies and their elected representatives on VPIRG's State Board, no one can predict exactly what VPIRG will do. However, Donald Ross, one of the Nader Raiders who assisted the VPIRG workers last month in outlining some model projects which the VPIRG could undertake.

Dyson Responds To Queries; Possible Reduction Of Unnecessary UVM Staff

by Jim Judd
The University of Vermont has been in serious financial trouble for some time now, the problem being a $1.5 million deficit.

To find out what is being done to alleviate this deficit, Dyson went to Mr. Melvin A. Dyson, The Vice President for Business and Financial Affairs. He said that the University is in financial trouble, but he believes that it can be overcome. He also said that his department has some specific plans to help lessen the amount of the deficit.

When asked if transfer students will play a large part in the alleviation of this deficit, Dyson said that the University is seeking as many new transfers as possible. But at the same time the standards for transfer students will not be lowered. He also said that the University is seeking more out-of-state transfers to help lower the deficit.

It is believed that certain salary increases will be cut back, and that the University will not be able to hire as many new faculty members. Dyson stressed that all departments are being examined to see if possible cutbacks can be made, such as reductions in unnecessary staff members.

When asked if this is a new problem for the University, Dyson said no; we have been operating under a deficit for about three or four years. But he also said that this deficit has been getting smaller. At the end of the June 30, 1970 fiscal year the University had absolutely no balance. For the fiscal year of June 30, 1971, however, the UVM books showed a balance of $462,414.61. The latter shows a direct increase in University income.

Dyson speculated that by 1972 the University should end up with a balance of $800,000. Dyson stressed the point that a great deal of the ability to alleviate this deficit will depend upon how much money the state legislature will allot to the University. When asked if tuition costs will be raised if the necessary money is not allotted by the state, Dyson replied "we do not feel that tuition costs will be raised. We are doing everything possible not to raise the tuition costs." But he said, as was announced at the last board of trustees meeting, that Room and Board Costs will go up about $100 by 1973. However, Dyson said, that the University still ranks in the middle-low bracket as far as Room and Board Costs are concerned.

Dyson noted that it will be necessary for the University to get out of this deficit operation within three years. At the same time he said that they will continue to run the University as a non-profit making business, since it is the University's duty to supply an education, and not to make money. He feels that the University can spend twice as much money and still not meet the needs of the students.

Photography Contest

Photography Editor's Note: Due to unforeseen circumstances, the CYNIC photography contest judging was not held as expected. The judging will take place this week and the winners will appear in the next issue of the CYNIC.

No. 125 Is Tops; 2-S Can Still Be Dropped

Young men who wish to drop draft deferments in favor of 1-A classifications may still do so. Local boards will continue to grant these requests even though the young men continue to meet the conditions for which the deferments were granted: Six categories are included: 1-S, high school students; 2-A, occupational deferments; 2-C, agricultural deferments; 2-D, divinity students; 2-S, undergraduate college students, and 3-A, hardship deferments.

This policy was instituted in late 1970 and was of particular interest to young men with random sequence (lottery) numbers above the highest RSN called for induction. By dropping their deferments at the end of the year, they became part of that year's prime selection group. On January 1, they were placed in a second priority position. Because of this, they are not subject to induction until the manpower supply in the first priority selection group is exhausted; a development likely only if a major national emergency occurs.

The policy was reaffirmed in a Local Board Memorandum sent this week by Draft Director Curtis W. Tarr to all 4,000 local draft boards. Registrants who desire to take advantage of the policy in 1971 must have been born in 1951 or earlier, have RSNs of 126 or above, and "not" be a member of the extended priority selection group. Moreover, they must submit their request in writing. To be considered as part of the 1971 prime selection group, the request must be postmarked no later than December 31.

RSN 125 has been set as the year-end ceiling for 1971 draft calls. Unlike 1970, when the year-end ceiling was not

Retroactive Pay Increases Remain Frozen

By William A. Sivert
Chronicle of Higher Education
The federal Pay Board has decided, for the moment at least, that teachers are not eligible for retroactive pay increases.

Editor's Note: President Andrews has told the CYNIC that the faculty wage increases that have been withheld as a result of President Nixon's wage freeze are being held in escrow. The University will not use these funds for any other purpose we were told.

George H. Boldt, chairman of the panel, told the House-Senate Joint Economic Committee that the board "determined not to treat teachers as a class."

"They will be governed by rulings and policies governing all workers," Mr. Boldt said.

Thus far the 15-man Pay Board has barred almost all retroactive payments of raises that fell due during the 90-day wage-price freeze that ended

Nov. 14.

The board has established a general guideline of 5.5% for average, annual pay increases during "Phase II" of President Nixon's economic stabilization program. However, if increases were provided under contracts signed before Nov. 14, the board has decided to permit them to take effect, no matter what their size, unless the raises are challenged for review by management or by at least five members of the Pay Board.

Increases May Be Averaged
The guideline allows employers, including colleges and universities, to average the pay increases they award to various employees in order to give some employees raises of more than 5.5%. It is an employer's overall expense for salaries and fringe benefits that must not rise above 5.5% a year, not individual compensations.

As for the ban on retroactive payments, the board has exempted only cases of "severe inequity." It specifically excluded teachers from the exemption. Mr. Boldt also told the Joint Economic Committee that further consideration of teachers' salaries was not a high-priority item at present.

If teachers apply for an exemption to the retroactivity rule, "then we will examine it," he said.

Dohaid Morrison, president of the National Education Association, has asked to appear

Columbia Records Guarantees Cost Of The 'Byrds' Concert

This week a seemingly unique transaction in the financing of a campus concert took place between Columbia Records and the UVM Concert Bureau.

A contract was signed engaging The Byrds for December 10, at UVM. Although the concert will be run by the Concert Bureau, its financial backing will be solely the responsibility of Columbia Records. The uniqueness of the transaction lies in the fact that, if a loss is incurred, it will be absorbed by Columbia Records. However, should a profit be made, it will be the gain of the Concert Bureau. Moreover Columbia Records is also paying for all the concert's publicity.

The Friday, December 10 concert will be held at 8:30 PM in Patrick Gymnasium. Tickets are on sale at Bailey's and the UVM Bookstore. The cost of the tickets is $2.50 per person with a student ID and $3.00 per person without an ID.

Since the Byrds was formed five years ago, it has come out with such hits as "Turn, Turn, Turn" and "Mr. Tambourine Man." Included in the group are Roger McGuinn, the lead; Skip Battin; Gene Parsons and Clarence White. Their new release is "Father Alone," featuring such songs as "Tiffany Queen" and "Bristol Steam Convention Blues."

Accompanying this folk-rock group on its current tour of New England are two other groups. One is a New York club band, the "Blus Oyster Cult," and the other is John McLaughlin's "Mahavishnu Rock Orchestra." The latter group is composed of five members: John McLaughlin, guitar; Billy Cobham, drums;

Richard Laird, bass; Jan Hammer, piano; and Jerry Goodman, violin. McLaughlin, who is perhaps best known for his work with Miles Davis, and his group are about to release a new album entitled "The Inner Mountain Flame." This album contains such songs as "Meeting of the Spirit" and "Down!"

CYNIC Editorial Positions

The CYNIC is now accepting application for editorial positions on the 1972 CYNIC staff. Any student interested in applying for an editorial position should submit their name to Ralph Robbins, Editor-in-Chief, no later than Tuesday, December 7, 1971, 10:00 p.m. Names submitted prior to this time can also be placed in the CYNIC mailbox in Billings Center. A short explanation of an applicant's qualifications should also be included.

Parties Rally For Student Vote

(CPS) - Over one hundred student body presidents from colleges and universities across America joined with the Association of Student Governments this week in calling for an Emergency Conference for New Voters to organize students as voting delegates to the nationwide party nominating conventions in 1972.

The Emergency Conference is slated for December 3, 4, and 5 at Loyola University in Chicago.

"The events of the past month clearly indicate that neither of the two major political parties welcome the young, left-leaning voters as fully enfranchised participants in the parties," said Duane Draper, President of ASG and Chairman of the steering committee for the Emergency Conference.

"These events create a crisis situation for the millions of young people who wish to effect constructive change through existing institutions. Unless we begin the task immediately of organizing students within the party processes, we will find ourselves totally excluded from the delegate selections and the Presidential nominating procedures, thus effectively disenfranchising the 26th amendment. The events Draper referred to were the Democratic Committee's selection of Pat McGovern as temporary chairman of the credentials committee over liberal Senator Harold Hughes (D-Iowa), who had been viewed by many as the key to enforcement of the McGovern Commission reforms at the Democratic convention in Miami.

On the Republican side, pressure from high echelon Republican officials to thwart Congressman Pat McCloskey's campaign, and could essentially eliminate him as an alternate candidate.

"It is imperative that the twenty-five million 18-24 year olds in the country are aware of the mockery that both Democratic and Republican party officials are making of the reform movements in the parties," continued Draper.

The Emergency Conference for New Voters is the last national gathering of students before the delegate selection process begins, which in some states is as early as February.

The conference at Loyola will include a number of workshops, seminars, and panels to discuss voter registration and political organization.

Indian Land Threatened By US Government

responsibility for fulfilling the trust obligation to the Indians and administering the laws relating to Indian Affairs.

Instead of fulfilling the trust, the Interior Department is allowing a serious conflict of interest to damage the Indian's interest. One of the largest recipients of the coal-fired electricity is the Bureau of Reclamation, which lies within the domain of the Interior Department. Five hundred megawatts of power (1/5 the amount consumed by New York City) is carmarked by the Bureau of Reclamation for the Central Arizona Project, which "needs" the electricity to move vast quantities of water from Lake Havasu on the lower Colorado River to southern Arizona.

Far from protecting the Indians, the Interior Department approved the strip-mining lease negotiated by the unrepresentative Hopi Tribal Council: of the 18 seats on the Council, 7 representing traditional villages were unfilled. (At no time were the Kikmongwi of these villages consulted or notified of the pending lease.) Of the remaining 11 seats, only 6 had been certified in accordance with the tribal constitution.

Apart from their technicalities, an ecological disaster may be in the making. The strip-mining will cover 64,000 acres. Roads necessary for such mining in some places stretch 200 feet wide. These scars will be permanent, because the arid, desert and semi-desert, is almost as vulnerable and slow to heal as tundra.

The Four Corners Plant, the first completed, spews out 300 tons of particulate matter daily—more than all the industrial polluters of New York and Los Angeles combined.

Mojave Power Plant will be supplied by a 275 mile pipeline through which "slurry" (half pulverized coal, half water) will be pumped, requiring from 2,000 to 4,500 gallons of water per minute. The water will be drawn from deep wells at Black Mesa, but nobody knows what 69,204,500,000 gallons over a 35-year period will do to the water table of the region.

In return for this plunder and waste, the Hopi will receive $14.5 million over a 35-year period, while Peabody Coal takes in $750 million—approximately 90% of the purchase price.

This lopsided deal will continue the anti-Indian policy which Hopi life is based. Black Mesa will be ripped apart, the water drained, and the air polluted. Are not the doomday predictions of the Hopi simply a plea that man is part of nature, and must live within its bounds?

John Adams, an environmental lawyer, is Director of the Natural Resources Defense Council, working with the Black Mesa Defense Fund (107 Cienega Street, Santa Fe, N. M. 87501). Distributed by ACCESS—The Communications Corporation.

When a Movement media-bookmobile known as "Education-Liberation Front..." (ELF) traveled 30,000 miles visiting 50 campus communities in '69 and '70, people on the bus collected so much valuable information, they decided to pass it all on in the form of a catalog.

They believe the sharing of information is primary in the struggle to return control of America to its people, and that sharing is at the heart of revolutionary activity.

ELF staffers, members of the Source Collective of Washington, D.C., intended the catalog as a way of making information about the Movement more available, so Movement resources, projects, skills and dreams could more effectively liberate this country—and ourselves.

From the idea of a single catalog, the Source Collective ambitiously expanded its project to include a production of

The Whooper is coming back

According to recent government wildlife reports, North America's largest bird; the whooping crane, is winning its battle for survival. On the verge of extinction in the 1940's, the whooper population in the wild now numbers about 60. The census of the birds reached its low point in recent years, when only 14 were counted in their special winter refuge area on the Texas Gulf Coast. An exact count of the present population will be taken when the birds arrive for the winter at Aransas National Wildlife Refuge.

While it was never exactly known how many of the birds existed, biologists do know that at one time they ranged over much of the continent, from the Arctic to central Mexico, and from the Rockies to the Atlantic. As a result of gradually changing the habitat lands, their numbers shrank to the point of virtual extinction.

In order to save the cranes, an effort was launched to find their summer nesting grounds, their migration routes, and their winter habitats. Finally, the birds were spotted in a remote wilderness area in northern Alberta and the adjacent Northwest Territories, in a land of muskeg and stunted spruce so isolated that few white men or Indians had ever ventured there. This summer area where the cranes lay their priceless eggs, is now protected within the boundaries of Canada's Wood Buffalo National Park.

The winter habitat, the Aransas Refuge, was established in 1937 to protect whoopiers and other threatened wildlife. The first accurate count of whoopiers made there, in 1940, showed 22 adults and 6 young on the refuge; or on nearby Matagorda Island. The 1970 winter count showed 51 adults and 6 young, and a slightly increased population is expected this year.

Standing five feet tall or more, with a crimson crown, the whooping crane, known for its ringing, buglelike call, is pure white except for black-tipped wings and legs.

transform of all is a broad plan to stage an alternative convention that would completely ignore the Republican conclave and address itself to peddling the wares of the "New Culture." The scheme involves the support of the Community Congress, a loose-knit organization manned primarily by street-service groups (Free Clinic, etc.). Unfortunately, the class war has been kicking when it enlisted the aid of Community Congress, but that's exactly what has happened; competition between Congress three primary leaders has left plans for an alternative convention (dubbed the August Project) in a sticky quagmire.

frustration or rhetoric the group pulled itself together enough to come up with concrete programs for a face-down in August.

The touchy area of planned action around convention time has been handled neatly by not requiring any group or individual to take part in any operation. This move should go a long way in avoiding public displays of friction over policy, thus insuring maximum unity.

Of course the question of action on the picket line hasn't been worked out yet but there is definitely no strong organizational sentiment favoring violent moves. The problem of "civil disobedience" hasn't been fully dealt with yet, either, but it appears likely that some will be planned with or without the picket line.

Condition has tentatively decided to include various luminaries on a twenty-man steering committee to begin the move and typical of the careful thought that characterizes the Coalition. The San Diego organizers are not provincial enough to think national leadership would either follow their every move or not appear and they are simply inviting any movement celebrates into an already functioning apparatus to which they can contribute.

Jerry Rubin said recently that the "biggest mistake" that the SDS has made is that it is headquartered in the east and is planning to involve themselves in the San Diego project and some are even planning to move to the west coast. What they and their followers will be surprised

Radical Counter Measure

Superficially, it looks like the coming of the convention has been handled with precision and efficiency by its establishment hosts. A nice impenetrable package. But other forces are at work, too—forces which may well put the lessons of the past movement history to good use in an all-out effort to every conceivable need. Research on the convention itself, services for the great influx of people expected in August, recruitment of able workers, internal and external communication systems, action-planning and even internal security.

Incredibly, all of the planning has been done on a collective basis and instead of

What organizers fear most now is a takeover by national figures or organizations—a takeover that would be based instead of logical, determined planning. Not only would this destroy their work so far, but it would likely compromise the chances for a massive, united and graphic show of strength in San Diego. Accordingly the

Editorial Professor Parenti

The case of Professor Michael Parenti now rests before the Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont. In considering Mr. Parenti's re-appointment, the Board might wish to keep the following points in mind:

Michael Parenti has received strong support and endorsement at several levels of the University. The Department of Political Sciences, of which he is a member, has overwhelmingly endorsed him, as has its Chairman. The Faculty Policy Committee spent three minutes - yes, three minutes - in approving him for re-appointment. The Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences has given him a positive recommendation. The Academic Council, comprised of the deans of several colleges, has endorsed Parenti unanimously. Professor Parenti is acknowledged as an outstanding scholar in his field. He has published a book and six other articles in various journals. He is respected by his students and fellow faculty members, and is regarded by many as one of UVM's finest professors.

These are the qualifications upon which the Board members should make their decisions. Mr. Parenti without question is more than qualified - he is outstanding - and would undoubtedly be an asset to this University. Upon this basis, the Cynic urges the Board of Trustees to approve him for re-appointment.

The fundamental issue, however, seems to be Mr. Parenti's politics. As long as the Constitution of the United States guarantees each citizen the rights of free speech, press, and redress of grievances, the Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont should not make a faculty member's politics one of the conditions for re-appointment. If the Board chooses to refuse Mr. Parenti re-appointment, the effects and repercussions could be detrimental, dangerous and far reaching. First, such a decision might very well signal to many faculty members here a new McCarthy Era, similar to the one of the early fifties, instilling fear in them to speak their minds, thus affecting their competencies as teachers. In addition, outstanding faculty members from other schools would probably think twice before applying for a position at the University of Vermont. Lastly, the Board would be establishing a new criterion for re-appointment and tenure, acceptable political beliefs, an entirely new precedent, and something which smacks of totalitarian regimes in the Soviet Union and Nazi Germany.

What is needed here is objectivity and fairness. If Professor Parenti is judged as others have been judged, on competency and qualifications, his record is indisputably outstanding. The Board of Trustees last year proved itself capable of fair, objective decisions in the heat of emotionally charged issues. We hope that they will again arrive at such a decision, and approve Michael Parenti for re-appointment.

Letter To The Editor Cynic Misquoted Professor Parenti In Interview

To the Editor:

I was hesitant to grant an interview to the Cynic because it is my experience that the press is possessed of an incapacity to quote anyone accurately - even when invited by a tape recorder, as was your reporter. Sure enough the interview appeared in your November 12 issue replete with non-sensical words, wrong meanings, garbled lines and hopeless misprints. I find this regrettable since I do believe that the radical ideas offered in the interview are deserving of serious and accurate representation - something yet to be achieved in Vermont newspapers.

Incidentally, there was a curious caption appearing under my picture which read, "Michael Parenti wants and expects to be reappointed." In fact, I refrained from making any statement as to wants and expectations, and there was no need for the Cynic to invent an opinion on my behalf.

If you desire the cooperation of others and if you desire to be taken seriously as a newspaper then try to exercise more care in your reporting and editing.

Sincerely,

Michael Parenti

'Bad Day At Black Mesa'... Indian Lands Threatened

Copyright 1971 by John Adams

"It is prophesied," warns Hopi Indian David Monongye, "that the Indians will have their lands confiscated or ruined, by forces of fire, and that the Hopi Indians would be the last to go. When this happens, no one will survive." Primitive babble? Perhaps.

But the Hopi believe their land is the spiritual center of the earth, and when it is destroyed, the destruction of humanity will follow. For over 800 years, the Hopi have lived on the Black Mesa in Arizona and New Mexico. One of the villages, Oraibi, is claimed by some historians to be the oldest continuously inhabited village in North America.

Israel And Canada Beat American Marriage Rates

New York, N.Y., Nov. 24 - Seeking a spouse? Where in the world to go?

Surprisingly, and despite frequent commentary to the contrary, you might try staying at home. The marriage rate in the United States has risen 26% in the last decade, according to a recently released study on international marriage trends by Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Last year, the United States recorded 10.6 marriages per 1,000 population, compared to a record low of 8.4 in 1961, and now has the highest rate in the world.

Nevertheless, note Metropolitan Life's statisticians, although the United States ranks high, our neighbor to the north, Canada, might also be a good bet. In the past seven years alone, Canadian marriages increased more than 27%, with the annual number of marriages reaching new highs in each of the last three years.

Indeed, all of the English speaking countries around the world are reporting increases in marriage. Another example is Australia, which recorded a rise of 24.3% in the past decade.

Puerto Rico's marriage rate is also high, paralleling that of the United States and Canada - 10.5 per 1,000 population, or a 15.4% increase. European areas showed diverse marriage trends. According to Metropolitan Life the marriage rate for the period between 1960-64 and 1969 (or 1970 where available) increased in 10 countries, decreased in 11, and showed little change in Denmark and Yugoslavia. A journey to the Netherlands, where the newlywed rate of increase is the highest in all of Europe - 18.5% - might prove successful. Bulgaria, on the other hand, might be less promising, for it recorded the lowest rate of increase in all Europe - 4.5%.

And trips to Romania and Sweden, where the rate of marriages decreased by 25.8% and 25.4% respectively, should probably be scratched from the (continued on page three)

The Hopi have survived on this arid hostile land through careful observance of the natural ecological balance. Their way of life is founded on the belief that the land was given to them by the Great Spirit to be protected and held in trust. To preserve the fragile balance one must take from the earth no more than can be returned.

The Hopi settled in autonomous villages guided by village chieftains called "Kikmongwi." There was no central governing authority representing the whole tribe until 1936. At that time a constitution was imposed on the tribe by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Although a minority of the Hopi, called "progressives," accepted the constitution, the traditional Hopi refused to acknowledge it because of their tribal beliefs.

A Tribal Council was, nonetheless, instituted with the power "to prevent the sale, disposition, lease or encumbrance of tribal lands." But many traditional Hopi are not represented on the Council, because they refuse to elect members and prefer, instead, to continue with the Kikmongwi as their leaders.

Traditional Hopi life and culture were immediately threatened when the mushrooming population of Western America demanded more electric power. The Black Mesa holds an estimated 16 billion tons of coal. Not surprisingly, in 1966, a strip-mining lease was negotiated with the Hopi Tribal Council and the Department of the Interior by Peabody Coal Company. Now a 22-company consortium (Western Energy Supply and Transmission Association) plans a major coal-fired electrical generating plant in the area.

The Native American Rights Fund of Boulder, Colorado has filed a lawsuit on behalf of 63 traditional Hopi Indians against Peabody Coal and Rogers C.B. Morton, Secretary of Interior. He is the principal officer of the government charged with (continued on page two)

Is The United States A "Planetary Disease"?

By John P. White

A recent issue of a local "underground" paper reprinted on its front page an article with the above title. The writer proved to his satisfaction that the United States is indeed a kind of political botchman.

The crudity and malevolence implied in the title are such that the absurdity of the "Evidence" presented is hardly a surprise. A few statistics are presented, tending to show that the United States has the highest standard of living in the world, and our affluence is contrasted with the poverty of much of the rest of the world.

Then, without even a pretense of proof, it is assumed that our prosperity is achieved solely by grinding it out of the poor in all other nations. We "extract the majority of the raw materials essential to (our) standard of living from the property (of the 93% of the world which is non-American)." We are thus held responsible for the miserable standard of living prevailing in the Communist world, although what raw materials we are currently extracting from China is not entirely clear.

Then too, the dismantling of the American economy might indeed allow the Bolivians to keep their tin instead of selling it to us, but the nutritional value of tin had not yet established. And once the American economy has been reduced to sand-bartering and subsistence agriculture, it is certain that no more American grain will be available to alleviate famine in India or elsewhere.

But the recent history of American's economic relations with the rest of the world is available to anyone who wishes to study it. Those who describe the United States as a "planetary disease" are clearly not interested in any such study, nor are they interested in the peaceful development of the economies of other nations. The destruction of the United States has become an end in itself to the more frantic elements of the New Left. Their hatred is not restricted to the bloated capitalists who were the traditional targets of the vituperation of the Old Left.

The New Left extremists have come to believe that the common people of America are a bunch of red-necks who are unworthy to go on living. The crisis of the New Left gurus for the destruction of America are remarkably similar to the denunciations heaped on the German people by Hitler just before he blew out his brains. The Germans were unworthy of him; they did not deserve to survive him. He gave orders that whatever had been spared from destruction in the war he had started be blown up. Thus was revealed to the world the horrible face of the nihilism which was always just below the surface of Nazi rhetoric.

It has become fashionable to dismiss the most violent language as "mere rhetoric" and no doubt the description of the United States as a disease will be excused in that fashion. But we should have learned by now that rhetoric which reduces one's opponents to sub-human status is very likely to produce behavior in which people are treated as vermin and exterminated like insects.

The verbal debasement of political opponents can and has provided justification for "final solutions." Hitler, like our own New Leftist, was fond of the "disease" metaphor. The Jews were depicted as deadly bacilli in the Aryan blood-stream, and their mass extermination became a hygienic measure. How easy it was, believing that terrible metaphor to be fact, for an SS man to drop a can of Zyklon B fumes into a gas chamber or into the ventilation system of the "showers" room at Auschwitz.

By the same token, if it is true that the United States is a disease, it follows that any decent person should wish for its destruction, and more than that, should do his bit toward this particular final solution. Those who manufacture bombs and plant them in public places do not think of themselves as murderers. Neither did the SS men. Both have been transformed into agents of destruction by the political pornography which programs them to believe that the intractable problems of the human condition can be resolved in blood baths.

The Environmental Exchange was born last January. Its original members (students from Dick Warner's Politics of Ecology class) envisioned the Exchange to be primarily a clearing house and information center. Keeping this in mind, we decided to first compile a film containing information on environmental problems. We also hoped to become known in the community well enough to establish a telephone information service, but this never materialized. For that matter, with the exception of the file and a listing of environmental organizations prepared for the Environmental Fair, very little was actually accomplished. The office, located at the Government Research Center, was never really conscientiously staffed by members of the general student body or even by members of the class itself. We lacked a real commitment as well as a direction.

This year there is a direction. We decided to change the basic format of the Exchange. Along with building up the filing system, we've decided to make an attempt to inform the community (campus and otherwise) on environmental legislation coming from Montpelier through the use of a mailing list. We've also sent out a questionnaire dealing with environmental issues, to all the Congressional candidates. Unfortunately the response to it has been extremely limited. Apparently many of the candidates aren't that interested in revealing all they know (and don't know) about the environment. Our next project will be an attempt to get recycling of garbage started in Burlington, and make it into a political issue. Hopefully we'll be able to get the local high schools and perhaps some churches to allow the use of their parking lots for weekend collection points. It is hoped that the Fine Street recycling place will be able to increase their capacity. But perhaps the most important thing we can do right now is to try to unify or at least bring closer together the various environmental organizations on campus so that they can be strength. We hereby invite other organizations to communicate with us.

The Environmental Exchange (along with many other organizations) is falling now for lack of active student support. What's going on here???? Maybe people just aren't into getting involved anymore. Is this the latest fad or something? For a generation who is supposedly so enlightened and desirous of a modification of life styles, we are really blowing it. Maybe everyone is ego tripping on all the comments from our critics, and feel that they don't need to get involved any more. If everyone is so enlightened, then explain the obnoxiousity of all those beer cans thrown mindlessly to the ground.

Hypocrites!!! There must be active involvement at the Exchange desperately need your help. There's plenty of work and lots of room for new faces and ideas. If you really care about this, or even if you just want to learn more about the politics behind the environmental issues, join us. Without your support, the Environmental Exchange is doomed to a swift demise. Please contact Dale Armstrong at the Exchange (656-2601) or at Robinson Hall (656-3084). We meet every Wednesday at 8:30 in Robinson Hall. Again, please help us and at the same time, help yourself.

Hunting... Sport, Or Glorified Killing?

by Frank Ladd

What does it mean to destroy life? Some very good and very sincere men feel that hunting should not be seen as a tragic destruction of life, as it is something natural for man. Indeed, it is a sport that invigorates oneself, creating a feeling of vitality and a kind of pride. It is putting oneself in the wilderness of nature, spending hours and sometimes days searching for the prize buck. And then, after the long struggle, coming home with that "big baby," and showing it to the neighbors and taking that trophy for the best set of antlers. Men! What a feeling, to get out in the woods, just you and that animal, and to win the struggle with you and nature. I guess it's like the Boston Patriots winning the Super Bowl, or the UVM football team taking the Conference Championship. But whatever, winning the struggle and coming home and putting that "big baby" on your wall, really gives you the feeling that you've accomplished something. It gives you a sense of pride in yourself, and maybe for the first time, you really feel like a man.

Well, this feeling is something that a sport can really do for you. If you're like to find out for yourself, ask the guys on the hockey team how they felt last year after beating Harvard in Boston, or ask the UVM football team how they felt after beating U. Conn. 21-7, a team that was formerly the Yankee Conference champions. They felt like men, because they worked hard for a goal, they sacrificed, and they overcame a challenge. And in this challenge lies the essence of sports. It is the challenge, the test which makes us men. It is the challenge of crisis under which we prove our manhood. Truth is not "truth" until it has been tested, tempered, until it has endured the burden and weight of crisis. When we have endured, we know we are men.

But do we need to kill to prove ourselves as men. Need we take on a challenge which demands that we kill something that lives and breathes as we do. Is there any real distinction between killing this kind of life and killing a human being? They are both forms of life, though one be higher than the other, yet we should value both very highly. To kill a deer because there is no other way of obtaining food is one thing, for you are killing only to preserve and sustain your own life. There is no other alternative, you must kill the deer to live.

But the hunting and killing cannot be justified when it is done merely as a sport, for there are other alternatives. The hunting and killing cannot be justified when the individual sees himself as a victorious kind of "Hemingway" hunter. How can he glorify himself when he is destroying life, destroying something that really breathes and lives and feels? This is a very sad and tragic thing both for the life that is destroyed and for the man who destroys. Regardless of the hard fact that there is a shortage of food for the deer, or that a large number of the deer will die because of it over the winter - the point really is - what is happening psychologically to the person who glorifies killing and destroying life? The majority of people who hunt do so, because it is a sport that they enjoy, not because this is their only way of obtaining food. Hunting is a sport that gives man a sense of pride and accomplishment. But can he not direct this drive through some other sport or activity where the tragic destruction of beauty and life is not the end result? If he wants to have this special feeling of pride within, why not try basketball or hockey or football? And if he wants to be alone with himself and with nature, he can run Cross-Country, something that presents the challenge of mastering his own body against the distance and the terrain of nature. But the point is - there are other ways.

Graduate School Students Value

In an interview with Dean Macmillan, Dean of the Graduate College, it was learned that a very useful service is going to be very much unexploited. A library of reference books is available at the office of the Graduate School for the yet undecided graduate candidate; and, personal counseling with those whose plans are more definite.

Some of the more useful books present in the office are: 1) Peterson's Guide, an annual publication, breaks down graduate schools in terms of their costs, facilities, academic programs and cost of living in the college area.

2) Rating of Graduate Programs, provides a rating of the different graduate schools by members of these schools who hold a doctorate degree. This reference attempts to qualitatively rate the facilities and degree programs of the different graduate schools.

3) Programs of Graduate Study in Business is a guide of a more specialized nature which attempts to direct itself towards a field of interest rather than to graduate schools in general. Other guides according to fields of interest are available as well in the reading area of the Graduate School Office.

Dean Macmillan emphasized the extreme importance of meeting any specific deadlines

Probing Our Third Eye

Buried deep in the brain of humans grows a quarter-inch mushroom-shaped body of nerve cells called the pineal gland. Galen wrote 1700 years ago that the pineal body was a valve to regulate thoughts. Some Daoistists 300 years ago said that it was the seat of the soul, receiving information about the world through strings to the eyes, and transmitting directions to the muscles by sending humors through hollow tubes. Yoga says the pineal body is the third eye, the doorway to the inner world.

Strangely enough, there may be some truth in each of these descriptions, but the detailed account of the pineal gland (when we have all the pieces of the puzzle) is likely to be even more fantastic.

Until a decade ago, biologists thought the pineal body in mammals was a useless vestige of the primitive light-sensitive organ of cold blooded vertebrates. (In these animals the pineal body has cone cells, just like the eye, and is thus a third eye that is a doorway to the outer world. Then in 1958, Aaron Lerner at Yale, discovered melatonin in the pineal bodies of cattle.

Melatonin turned out to be a hormone made only in the pineal gland by the following chemical change: tryptophan goes to serotonin goes to melatonin. Tryptophan is an essential amino acid in the human protein diet. It is the only amino acid that contains an indole ring in its structure, and it should be of considerable interest (to alchemists) that the family of indoles includes not only serotonin and melatonin, but psilocybin, bufotenine, LSD, and DMT. In fact, DMT is dimethyltryptamine, which is to say that it is tryptophan with its carboxyl group (COOH) taken off a double methyl group (CH₃)₂ in its place. (The enzymes that perform these two operations, decarboxylase and N-methyltransferase are quite ubiquitous in nerve cells.) Another pineal hormone, adrenomedullin, contains a structure very close to telepathy, the psychedelic in yage (banisteria cappa). It is quite likely that the pineal gland produces active psychodelics.

Unlike the third eye of cold-blooded creatures, the pineal gland of mammals is not directly light sensitive, but nerves from the eyes do carry information about light changes, and these changes influence the production of serotonin and melatonin. (Light increases the serotonin level, darkens the melatonin level.) These hormones are the bio-chemical mainspring of a clock mechanism that, through a series of Rube Goldberg chemical chains of events, regulates the fine tuning of daily, yearly, and other cycles, and through the pituitary gland, paces the sexual maturation of the body.

Paul Segall and others have shown that depriving weanling mice of 80% of their normal dietary tryptophan (the precursor of serotonin and melatonin) keeps them in a juvenile state until tryptophan is restored to their diets, and that this peters out effect may keep them alive twice as long as they would ordinarily live. Segall believes that this effect has to do with melatonin synthesis in the pineal gland.

As if eternal youth were not enough, the pineal has its finger in yet another alchemical pie. One of the reasons the pineal body was thought to be a vestigial organ was that after puberty the human pineal is hardened by calcification. But it turns out that this calcium buildup does not seem to affect the ability of the pineal gland to produce hormones and respond to nerve signals coming from the eyes. Calcium has recently been shown to be a very important signal transmitter between cells and especially between nerve cells.

Graduate School Offers Students Valuable Service

In an interview with Dean Macmillan, Dean of the Graduate College, it was learned that a very useful service is going very much unexploited. A library of reference books is available at the office of the Graduate School for the yet undecided graduate candidate; and, personal counseling with the Dean can be arranged for those whose plans are more definite.

Some of the more useful books present in the office are:

- 1) Peterson's Guide, an annual publication, breaks down graduate schools in terms of their costs, facilities, academic programs and cost of living in the college area.

- 2) Rating of Graduate Programs, provides a rating of the different graduate schools by members of these schools who hold a doctorate degree. This reference attempts to qualitatively rate the facilities and degree programs of the different graduate schools.

- 3) Program of Graduate Study in Business is a guide of a more specialized nature which attempts to direct itself towards a field of interest rather than to graduate schools in general. Other guides according to fields of interest are available as well in the reading area of the Graduate School Office.

Dean Macmillan emphasized the extreme importance of meeting any specific deadline.

In the next issue of the Cynic, we will be carrying a section which will be devoted to rides.

This will be a free service for students needing rides or riders at the end of the semester. The procedure to follow is simply to write on a piece of paper:

Name Address
Phone Destination
Ride needed or ride offered.
Leave the paper at the Cynic office in the Feature Editor's mail box on or before Monday December 6.

It may be that the calcium in the pineal gland is very carefully controlled to form an exactly constructed calcium crystal, which could be sensitive to unusual modes of communication—such as extra sensory perception.

Biologists call the pineal gland a neuroendocrine transducer. This means it is an organ that changes nerve signals into hormone signals (and vice versa). There are only three other such transducers known in the human body, but as others are found they may be seen to be analogous to the network of chakras of yoga.

It is interesting that melatonin affects the sex glands and that in turn the sex hormones affect the pineal gland. This effect may be related to the kundalini force that yoga says rises from the base of the spine to turn on the higher chakras especially the third eye.

University's Role Defined

President William J. McGill of Columbia University recently told an audience at the College of Holy Cross that the nation's colleges and universities are moving into a new role as "society's special laboratory for testing the dynamics of social change."

The policy of several governmental agencies seems increasingly directed toward using the campus as an experimental area for testing the potential of a number of liberation movements, he said. Among them he listed day care activities, women's rights, civil rights for homosexuals, and ethnic studies.

Dr. McGill said that he did not resent the singling out of the universities as the testing ground for new social forms. "I welcome it," he declared, "but our new role promises some hot years ahead because no one yet knows how to do any of this."

Universities, he explained, are being asked to assume leadership in this new service to society because no other part of society is as responsive to social change.

He said it was vital that the country understand that campus tensions continue but seem now to be undergoing "striking and fundamental changes." You may safely conclude that what we are about to experience this year, society at large will probably experience two or three years down the line," President McGill said.

American students are no longer displaying diffuse anger with society, he stated. Instead, he added, the nation is witnessing a new and powerful growth of a variety of narrowly defined "liberation movements" peculiarly related to the event-garde character of campus life.

Dr. McGill said one of the most interesting features of the new campus pluralism is the involvement of federal and state agencies in a number of organized movements. Federal involvement, he noted, usually takes the form of compliance enforcement of the equal rights provision of an executive order.

"As the liberation movements develop," President McGill stated, "we in the colleges must seek earnestly to play our leadership role in building a new society sensitive to the aspirations of previously excluded groups."

"We are prepared to do this by using all the university's resources to discover the forms of institutional pluralism compatible with stable institutional functioning," he said.

Dr. McGill pointed out that if the universities and colleges across the country choose such a course, it would be wise to attempt to manage the inevitable conflicts associated with such discovery by constructing formal mechanisms which would insure a fair hearing for both sides while the testing is going on. We do not have such formal procedures, explained Dr. McGill.

"Thus for a while we may safely expect much agitation, much pressure for liberation, and repeated tense confrontations," Dr. McGill declared. "If somewhere someone slips in the heat of such action we may again see occasional outbreaks of real violence."

AMA Saves The World

Sometime while you weren't looking, the American Medical Association solved the nation's health problems.

"I don't know of anybody that's dying in this country for want of medical care — who applies for it," said AMA President Wesley W. Hall in a speech in August before the National Press Club in Washington.

"He said the AMA has 'a pretty good batting average,' in cracking down on doctors who fail to meet standards of practice."

"Hall claimed AMA's 'Medicredit' proposal for national health insurance will 'give every person in America under the age of 65 equal access to high quality medical and health care."

"It bugs me more than anything," the 64-year old physician from Reno, Nev., said, "to hear people low-rate the quality of U.S. medicine."

Hall also made the following surprising statements in a setting where ground rules forbid reporters from asking for clarification of answers.

"He said marijuana is a worse drug menace than alcohol. Chronic use of pot, he said, 'invariably' leads to other forms of drug abuse."

"He defended the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's record in protecting the public from dangerous foods. (Vichyssoise, anyone?)"

"He claimed that doctors' fees have not risen faster than the cost of living. [Bureau of Labor statistics show that, from 1967 to 1971, doctor's fees rose 40% faster than the general Consumer Price Index.]

The reaction to Hall's statements by one reporter present, William Hines of the Chicago Sun Times, was incredulous.

"In a day when the medical profession's prestige and reputation are sagging badly (Hines wrote), one would think the AMA would be looking for front men who would enhance the organization's credibility rather than compromise it further. But Hall didn't get where he is through a coup d'etat; he was elected."

WEST POINT GRADUATE and winner of three Silver Stars, Major Joseph Westbrook resigned during his second tour of Vietnam, as a conscientious objector. He now believes all wars are immoral. "I made it a point never to look at the people I killed. But one day I decided to do it, and I was devastated."

Berkeley Creates Draft Sanctuary

Early November 10th, the Berkeley City Council voted 6-1 (with 1 abstention) in favor of a resolution that "the City of Berkeley supports those men (unwilling to participate in military action) who decide to take sanctuary." The Council also affirmed that Berkeley would support any church congregation in Berkeley which engaged in sanctuary, and pledged that the City of Berkeley was willing to provide a facility for sanctuary.

No city employees will violate the established sanctuaries by assisting in investigations or arrests for health and safety, VPIRG, can monitor the Industrial Hygiene Division to determine its effectiveness and to insure that it is performing up to its capacity. This is a crucial area, for last year, some 50,000 workers were killed and over 200,000 were injured on the job in the U.S.

VPIRG can help legislators draft strong laws. It can mobilize citizens opinion so laws that once drafted, the laws will be passed. Student research and investigation then can scrutinize enforcement procedures and pass on to legislators accurate data on the effect of their laws.

Legislative follow-up is especially crucial in Vermont where there is a history of strong environmental laws with weak or non-existent enforcement. Several state agencies have already indicated that they would welcome student investigation and research monitors.

VPIRG can monitor employment practices and, if discrimination is found, call in federal enforcement or file suit to force compliance.

Regarding consumer protection, the entire state of Vermont has only one solitary lawyer working full time in this area. VPIRG can help the consumer by establishing consumer complaint centers. Backed by professional expertise from the VPIRG staff, these student run complaint centers can help inform, educate, and protect the consumer. They can work with the State Agency to give it the resources it now lacks. Serving as advocates, student workers can champion consumer causes to the business community.

QUESTION: My boyfriend and I have had intercourse several times in the past six months. Lately, I have been having guilt feelings, being especially worried about getting pregnant. Every time I express my fear, we decide we won't have intercourse anymore, and yet we still do. Last month and this I have really been concerned about the time of my period for fear it would not come.

Could my periods become erratic from being tense? A couple of times my periods were very irregular. My last cycle was 34 days long; could I be pregnant even though I had a period then?

We have decided to refrain from intercourse until we are married (two years because of my guilt feelings, but I am still worried about being pregnant now).

ANSWER: Anxiety is one of the most common causes of a delayed menstrual period. In stressful situations, hormonal changes occur within all people. In women, an alteration in hormone levels can result in delayed ovulation and therefore a delayed menstrual period. In cases of severe stress, an entire cycle may be passed by. Many women have experienced irregular menses around exam time but there is nothing like anxiety about becoming pregnant coupled with guilt over having intercourse to mess up a menstrual cycle. In a panic, many women have gone so far as to seek abortions believing they were pregnant after a missed period. Fear of pregnancy can become a severe distorting influence in a relationship, whether or not the couple is married.

In a serious relationship, there are some signs that a couple is handling sex successfully. These signs include the couple discussing what they are doing openly with each other and mutually deciding on their level of sexual activity; they also respect each other's values and seek to protect each other from feelings of guilt, anxiety and jealousy. If they are having intercourse, the assumption is that they have discussed this beforehand and they have made absolutely certain that they are using effective contraception. If they have decided that intercourse is not acceptable to them, for whatever reason, they elect to engage in other sexual activities about which they feel more comfortable. When a person feels that no sexual activity is acceptable, then he or she makes sure that the find a person who shares that view.

There is a logical way to handle the problem you write about. Mutual petting to orgasm provides a sense of closeness, sexual excitement and release without fear of pregnancy. You and your boyfriend might decide to plan to engage in this sexual activity and to seek situations where you can do so in comfort. Such planning tends to decrease the occurrences of impulsive intercourse. If you both decide in the future to have sexual intercourse, you can also plan to use contraceptives.

Many people, including parents, get upset at suggestions such as the one I've made. They feel that there is some special value in a couple not engaging in close sexual contact, especially intercourse, until after they are married. It seems to me that the real value in doing or not doing anything depends upon exercising responsibility. A couple going together for a long time have a responsibility to meet each other's sexual demands.

QUESTION: For the past two years my roommates have been complaining that I start to grind my teeth together from side to side in my sleep. I thought they were putting me on until they made a tape recording of it one night and played it back for me.

This has me worried. Why would anyone grind teeth in their sleep? Is this going to wear my teeth out? The tape also revealed that I talk in my sleep, but I don't remember what I talk about. Is any of this serious? And is there anything I can do about it?

ANSWER: The problems you and your roommates are facing have a number of possible causes and solutions. The onomatopoeic technical name for teeth grinding is bruxism. It occurs both during waking and sleeping. Most of the time, it is a sign of tension or anxiety. This does not mean that it is a serious symptom, and is found in a great number of people. Perhaps you have been under more pressure since coming to MSU. On the other hand, roommates running around with tape recorders at 5 a.m. are enough to make a nervous wreck of anyone.

Consultation with a dentist leads to several suggestions. It is possible that you have developed a condition called occlusal interference, which means your teeth aren't meeting like they should. This can cause bruxism and can be determined by a skilled dentist by means of taking impressions of your bite.

If your bite is normal, my dentist friend suggested that a violations of federal laws relating to military service on sanctuary premises.

The "Concerned Berkeley Citizens" organization called upon two thoroughly unradical Berkeley councilmen (Ed Kallgren and Borden Price) either to withdraw their support of the "sanctuary" resolutions or resign.

Congressman Ron Dellums endorsed the Council's actions and invited sailors from the Coral Sea and all other military commands who claimed they were subjected to harassment for anti-war activity to submit their grievances to him.

Berkeley City Manager Hanley refused to honor the Council's actions and claimed that oaths taken by Berkeley police officers to uphold the laws of the U.S., California and the City would take precedence if a conflict between the Council resolution and federal law enforcement arose. Some members of the Council responded to this by threatening to fire the City Manager.

The Council added their motions were "intended as support for the men on the U.S.S. Coral Sea and are not intended to influence them into specific actions such as sanctuary."

plastic gadget could be fitted over your teeth when you go to sleep. It would not disturb you unless you started to grind your teeth. This usually abolishes the condition painlessly. The condition should be corrected, as loose teeth can result.

In his unsophisticated days, this dentist was plagued with a roommate afflicted as you are. The fellow slept in an upper bunk and was cured of his bruxomania when the dentist booted him in the rear everytime he'd be awakened.

QUESTION: Is it true that when a girl goes on a diet the first place that the loose weight is in her butt?

My bust and hip measurements are fine but it is the waist where I want to lose inches. I can't afford it anyplace else.

ANSWER: When an overweight woman diets, she may indeed lose weight from the chest area resulting in smaller breasts. The potential for this depends in part on genetics and the best indication would be what you were before you gained weight, or what your mother and/or sister look like.

Reduction in the size of the waist line can be aided considerably by appropriate exercises to strengthen abdominal muscles. Sit-ups are quite helpful. Sensible weight should be dictated by general health considerations as well as specific cosmetic aims.

QUESTION: Is it true, as I have heard, that every blood test given at most college health centers, no matter what for, is also checked for venereal disease? Can dormant VD be detected by such a test? If VD is checked for at the health center can anyone who has had a blood test consider themselves free of VD if not otherwise notified?

ANSWER: Such testing is most unlikely as it would be extraordinarily expensive to check every blood test for VD. Syphilis is checked for by a blood test when a person has symptoms of that disease, when he or she applies for a marriage license, on most admissions to hospitals, and on entering the armed services. Gonorrhea, which is far more common, cannot be checked for by a blood test.

QUESTION: I have heard that an intrauterine device inserted during the first month or so of pregnancy can cause a spontaneous abortion. Is this true? Are there any risks involved? How effective is it?

ANSWER: An intrauterine device (IUD) is a contraceptive of very high effectiveness. It depends upon the presence of a small plastic loop or other shaped device semi-permanently installed in the uterus. In some fashion this prevents implantation of the egg. The IUD is inserted by a physician who slightly dilates the cervix in order to get it into place. It certainly would cause an abortion if this was done during pregnancy. The use of the IUD does not carry with it very many risks, is easily installed in the doctor's office and is highly effective. It is easily removed by the doctor when pregnancy is desired.

If you are wondering whether there is a possibility of a physician unwittingly involving himself in performing an abortion while honoring your request for an IUD, forget it. The IUD is inserted during the last couple of days of a menstrual period or immediately following one. While many people who write to this column are uncertain about when pregnancy can occur, most physicians I have spoken with have mastered the concepts involved and apply them appropriately.

QUESTION: I will be traveling in Europe this winter and expect to be eating very poorly for economic reasons. Can I maintain my excellent health if I take super-potency multi-vitamins and a protein supplement? I plan to make whole meals of bread and cheese and such and will probably use very little of vegetables and meat.

ANSWER: For a person in good health, it is pretty difficult to become run down because of poor eating for only a few months. I do not know what this super-potency jazz is, but multivitamins probably would be harmless.

I always like my bread and cheese with some fruit and wine. The combination gives you a good amount of protein, fat, carbohydrate, and vitamins (fresh fruit is good stuff). The wine will play your excretion about your nutrition.

QUESTION: My problem is a sexually inhibited boyfriend. We are both 31 and it seems strange to me that he should have so many hang-ups. During the past year we have seen each other for about one weekend every month. I'm the first girl that he has seriously dated and I realize that intimate experiences are new to him, but it bothers me that he is still ashamed of his body and its functions. Due to his education and home life, he considers sexual activity "dirty and not nice." We never have had intercourse but he has become excited to the point of ejaculation. He thinks this is wrong and even though he enjoys it, it upsets him greatly.

Because I have had more sexual experience than my boyfriend, this is a frustrating relationship for me. I tend to feel almost guilty because I often feel as if I am the aggressor and I am not accustomed to this role. I'm concerned about whether all his years of inhibitions can be undone. Do you think that with such a background he could ever have a guilt-free sexual relationship in marriage?

ANSWER: Some men remain inhibited about sexual matters well into adulthood. The common belief that it is only women who are affected is a myth.

A number of frustrating situations can develop when the sexual needs of one partner are not being met by the other partner. Unfortunately, many couples assume that marked differences in sexual attitudes become resolved automatically after marriage. This may not be the case. Kind understanding can go a long way to help your boyfriend. So can introducing him to a variety of writings on the subject. My favorite is a Bantam paperback by Donald W. Hastings called Sexual Expression in Marriage. After attempts of this type, if the problem still remains, you may be faced with a difficult decision that you are not for each other. You will both be doing each other a favor to acknowledge this now rather than waiting until after marriage. Many men such as your boyfriend can benefit from more experience and may undergo a change in attitude with time. The sporadic contacts you have had during the past year would make it hard to tell how things would go if you were together more often. Resolving your problem may depend largely on how your boyfriend feels after you explain your discomfort to him.

most heavily upon the capabilities of the people within the organization. Another negative element could arise if the organization becomes too large, such as in Mass. and New York, and loses its ability to relate to people.

No great opposition to the concept of a higher education program in Vermont is expected. Governor Davis is apparently in favor of a single higher education authority. President Andrews stated that "As a citizen, taxpayer, and educator, I'm all for it." Moreover, he is "reasonably confident that the vast majority of the Board of Trustees will approve of the concept to be recommended."

necessarily reached by all local "Commenting" on the continuation of the policy which allows the dropping of deferments, Dr. Tarr said: "Young men holding lottery numbers of RSN 126 and above can effectively limit their vulnerability to the draft by being classified into 1-A by the year's end. Since the law allows young men to apply for deferments, we believe those young men granted deferments should be able to drop them if they desire."

"Our purposes," Tarr added, "are to achieve fairness to all registrants in determining their priority status on January 1 of the new year and to limit the uncertainty that young men with high random sequence numbers face. Registrants with student, occupational, paternity, agricultural, and hardship deferments will be eligible to take advantage of this policy."

The Memorandum also amends Selective Service policy on allowing record changes in birthdates upon submission of adequate evidence. Starting December 10, if a birthdate change is submitted after the registrant has received a lottery number, the records will be changed, but the registrant will retain his original lottery number.

boards, the authorization in the 1971 draft amendments of a Uniform National Call ensures that all eligible registrants will be considered for induction if they: (1) are in Class 1-A on December 31, (2) are 20 years of age or older on that date, and (3) have RSNs of 125 or below. If young men meet these criteria, but are not inducted during 1971, their liability for induction will be extended into 1972. They will be prime candidates for induction during the first three months of the year along with other men who are now in the extended priority selection group.

Albrecht Durer Exhibit At Fleming

To celebrate the 500th anniversary of the birth of Albrecht Durer (1471-1528), the Fleming Museum has mounted an exhibition of prints by the great German master and his contemporaries. Three new Durers - The Rhinoceros (woodcut, 1515), The Small Horse (engraving, 1505), and St. Michael and his Angels Fighting the Dragon (woodcut, 1498-99) - which have come to the Fleming over the past year, are being exhibited for the first time.

In conjunction with the exhibit, Professor Christie Fenger of the Art Department will present a slide lecture on the artist's role as an "Apostle of the Renaissance." Wednesday evening, December 8th, at 8:00 p.m. All are invited to join Mrs. Fenger in the main gallery of the Museum.

CALIFORNIA ROCK 'N' ROLL THUNDER (BARK) Jefferson Airplane: BARK is really Airplane, if that weren't enough, departure of founder member Marty Balch, drummer Spencer Dryden by Joey Covington, and the new band, on top of all releases on the Airplane's own label, Grant.

But the music's the thing and on BARK then over and though those soaring tones, the vocals are tighter more economical. Jorma remains his own man on guitar, whose style isn't simply a mélange of Nicky and Cuddy is still one of the premier bass players in the world. Jorma's new solo is especially the instrumental "Bird's Song."

Almost everybody plays the role of doesn't chip in with anything company. "Greasy Heart," "Crazy Miranda," "Argue With A German If You're Tired," that she can still be seductively witty. Politics come second to music as far as J. Kanner writes damn fine rock 'n' roll songs. "When The Earth Moves Again," "Rock 'n' Roll."

But it's the Keaton and Covington who work. The lead guitarist wrote "Fast So Slow" and "Bird's Song in the Chorus," a song that not only sounds like acoustic Hot Airplane, but also the circumstances behind the Airplane's LPs have their share, though BARK is no exception. "Covington's 'Think,' are not nearly as 'Song For All Seasons,' Spencer Dryden's 'The End' is a masterpiece.

More consistent than the previous album, anything since "After Bathing At Airplane would've been hard pressed to company in finer fashion.

There are no co-ordinators, the rousing opener, "Candy Mountain," "No More," are so good-natured as keep from smiling yourself (and happen). Like, you see, the story behind this is that I and the other record reviewer (who shall remain nameless) decided last Friday to assault the record stores in Downtown Burlington. Nameless on the way down put some excitement into the situation.

"Just think, Miller, The Beatles' debut album must be in 'I replied with a snappy 'Oh Boy' or something to that effect. He seemed pleased with my enthusiasm. The leaves were falling. The first record store didn't have Beatles' but it did have the new Doors."

"Nameless, why don't you buy this?"

"I would, Man, but not here. The store's a rip-off."

Then we went to this other store, where we bought some posters and found this pamphlet which said that the Who had a new album.

"Sure has a weird collection of songs on it. All old singles," I said.

"Yah, seems to be like an American version of their English Direct Hits."

"It has the Seeker on it, though."

"Great, huh? Nameless asked."

"You bet."

Then we decided to make one last stop at a freak record shop, where, BELIEVE IT OR NOT, we found the new Sly and the Family Stone and also the new Who. Unable to buy the new Sly right then and there, Nameless bought the Doors and the new Chicago which we listened to for the rest of the latest effort. Also the maker of Women in Love and The Music

Rated X

This film is Ken Russell's

Lovers, Russell has a reputation as an offbeat individualist and whose films stand out from the ordinary. As usual when a new

Russell film is produced it becomes difficult to tell which is more interesting: the actual film produced or the story of how Russell made the film. The Devils is no exception and is the most talked about film of this season.

The Devils is a film that bucka the movie making trends of today. First, because of the sex, the film has an X rating.

This is a time when major studios have given up producing films of this type because of the fear of a bad reputation. The film is not a sexploitation flick, but many people will get this idea because of the rating. Second, because of this, Warner Brothers has launched an extensive advertising campaign to tell people of the historical nature of the film. If you wonder why the film is coming out is little advertising today it is because the studio are so broke that they have all but eliminated their publicity departments. Thus the films are released cold to the theaters. For Warner Brothers to spend so much for publicity means they have faith in the film and want the audience to come to it with the proper perspective. To this end they have made a short film telling about Russell and The Devils and printed a 24 page booklet explaining the history on which the film is based.

The film is based on John

Whiting's play and Aldous

Huxley's book The Devils of Loudon about the trial in 1633 of a priest, Ursin Grandier. It is also a loose, loose, loose documentation of the trial.

This time the film is about witches and in Strasbourg 5000 of them were burned between 1615 and 1635. To Russell the film is an examination of a brilliant political maneuver.

Cardinal Richelieu virtually ruled France in spite of Louis

XIII being king. Loudon was the only fortified city standing in his way of total control of this region so he tried to tear down the walls. The priest Grandier stopped him and to discredit

Grandier and remove him from power, Richelieu set out to prove him guilty of consorting with devils. These devils were supposed to have infested a group of nuns led by Sister

Jeanne, who happened to be in love with Grandier.

At this same time a plague was occurring in the city.

Between tortures, witch trials, and burning of corpses from the plague, the populace had plenty to keep them entertained.

There's nothing like good plague burning to liven up an afternoon. Armed with this brief historical background you are now ready for the film.

The Devils is a film of contrasts: between life and death; order and decay; evil and goodness; and sanity and insanity. The most striking thing about the opening of the film is that the people of Loudon seem little concerned with the death. The plague is fiercely raging and yet people have little fear of catching it.

A carnival spirit possesses the city and, except for the fact that bodies are continually being collected by the hundreds to be burned or buried, the plague goes unnoticed. Death is horrible only up to a point.

When it becomes the prevalent, whether by plague or by violence as in The Wild Bunch, human consciousness cannot continually recognize it and still survive. Thus the citizens of Loudon ignore its presence.

The rest of the film borders on the surrealistic. In spite of decaying bodies everywhere the walls and buildings of the city are immaculately clean and white. They do not even show signs of weathering. In some scenes they give the futuristic look to the film making it seem a science fiction film of the future. Thus the order of the sets contrasts sharply with not only the disorder caused by the plague but also the disorder in the minds of most of the characters in the film. Here

Russell shows chaos surrounding the orderly walls of the city.

Richelieu wants the walls torn down. This would destroy whatever orderliness that is left in the city and Grandier knows this. Therefore he must be destroyed. The only order and sanity in the entire film exists within the walls of Loudon. The city walls separate the order of Grandier from the countryside.

The convent walls separate the disorder of Sister Jeanne's mind from the other of Grandier, in the city. The pattern emerges:

disorder; city walls; order;

convent walls; disorder. It is when the disorder from outside the city and the disorder from within the convent unite that Grandier is destroyed.

Grandier is a remarkable character and is excellently portrayed by Oliver Reed. This priest puts the rights and freedom of Loudon above his own welfare and dies for these rights. Even though he is a priest

he makes merry with the women and marries one of them

(Gemma Jones). His life is not a well kept secret but no one seems to mind. His chief sin is bucking the power of the state trying to show that you can fight city hall. Even though he is burned in the end, he does win. By refusing to confess to ridiculous charges, he saves himself. People are amazed that he is innocent and one priest goes mad saying we have killed an innocent man.

Grandier is one of the few characters in the film in full control of himself. He knows his virtues and faults and handles both the best advantage. The horror of the film is that if society can destroy a man as good and strong as this, what can it do to the rest of us?

The cause of Grandier's persecution is the testimony of a nun, Sister Jeanne. She has dreams in which Grandier appears as Christ and makes love to her. All this in spite of the fact she has never met Grandier.

As Grandier explains it he really does possess her because he is a handsome man and she is a very frustrated woman. She really is possessed by devils for she hovers between sanity and madness throughout the film.

She tells of her dreams and along with her testimony after being tortured, provides enough

"evidence" to convict Grandier.

Vanessa Redgrave is excellent in this part.

This absolutely superb, carefully constructed suspense film starring Mia Farrow will keep you on the edge of your seat for most of its 90 minutes.

The suspense is built up bit by bit through the film and just when you think its going to come to a climax, the director pauses with a non-suspenseful interlude. The relief created heightens the suspense the next time a new element of it is introduced.

Mia Farrow is a girl who has been blinded by a fall from a horse. After five weeks in the hospital she returns to her uncle's house to live with the uncle, aunt, and their daughter until she can get a job in London. Murders take place at the house and although evidence of what has happened lies all about, the only knows what she can hear and touch.

For hours she lives among all this gaily evidence not knowing about it. Therein lies most of the horror.

Each scene in the film was carefully planned to add to the terror. The film opens by showing us a pair of cowboy

year, the caliber of Yankee Conference gets better and better, and this year is no exception. The UVM squad travels to Amherst to play the UMass. This year, unlike the last two, the UVM is optimistic about playing the UMass. In a year, they are without the services of Julius, an All-American who left school a year early to join the military.

When we played UMass early in December in Amherst, and they needed an overtime period to beat us, it was a tough game to lose so this year there is a touch of optimism in the air. Saturday's game should prove not only to the teams involved but to the rest of the conference as well.

Wednesday, the Dartmouth Indians will be at UVM. Ivy League teams are always tough so this should be a battle for us too, but each member of the team is eager and waiting for the challenge.

UVM has an All-American guard, Vermont also has a star player, Mike Brown. No relation by name or ability, but he would not attempt to make any predictions. Trustees Disregard Pleas From Administration, Faculty, Students, And Townspeople In 15-4 Vote

Bolwell's Shangri-La Turns Sour; Scott: UVM Image Overrides Academic Excellence

By Ralph Robbins
Professor Michael Parenti's reappointment was denied in a very one-sided vote of 15-4 by the Board of Trustees on Saturday. Parenti's present contract expires in June of 1972.

The vote overruled the recommendations made by several levels of the University, including the unanimous endorsement by the Department of Political Science, the Faculty Policy Committee, the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the Academic Council, and the Board of Trustees.

The meeting progressed at the usual rapid pace until the Education Policy Committee made the motion to drop Parenti from the reappointment list. The motion was passed in the committee the day before a vote of 6-4. A 60-minute "debate" followed the introduction of the motion. During this time about 15 faculty members, administrators, students and town people spoke on behalf of Parenti, using his retention.

While these people spoke, the entire board, excluding Representative George D. Little, Representative Francis Prichard, State Senator Arthur Jones, and UVM President Edward C. Andrews, (these voted in favor of reappointment), sat listlessly staring at the big finely finished oak table in front of them. Not one of those fellow Trustees, including Chairman Scott, offered a single explanation for the way each was about to vote.

Trustee George Little offered his reason for voting to retain Parenti.

"We must not respond to this question with our instincts and prejudices. If we don't vote to reappoint this man it will be a sad day and a step backward in the long history of this University, as well as the rebuke to the administration."

Dr. Alfred B. Rollins, UVM Vice President for Academic Affairs, said that he was the previous day while trying to convince the Educational Policy Committee of his view. At the meeting Saturday he stated: "I wish to make it quite clear that it will be a serious mistake for the Board to substitute its judgement for the professional judgement of the University."

Dr. Andrews cited that Parenti is "an outstanding scholar, nationally recognized in his field, and a stimulating teacher." He also stated, "The purpose of the University is not to make ideas safe for students; but to make students safe for ideas."

The complete statement of several other faculty members appears in this issue of the CYNIC.

During these testimonies, most of the Board members sat passively listening, or reading other matter in front of them. Not one member questioned a single statement offered nor did they offer any opposing views.

The Vote
A roll-call vote came at the conclusion of the statements. The outcome: 15-4 against. (It would have been 16-4 if Ken Scott would have voted.)

Immediately after the vote, Parenti made his way through the crowd of faculty and students to within visibility of the Trustees.

"I wonder if I could be extended the courtesy of being asked as to what was the basis on which you reached your decision, or is it that power unanswerable to no one like the Soviet Presidium?"

Act II: The Answers
With this challenge, some of the Board members presented what they believe were convincing arguments. Harry Bolwell was the first to respond:

"I have always thought of UVM as my Shangri-La, but now my memories have gone sour. I find it is political-very political. In fact there are more politics here than in business, believe it or not."

Bolwell denied that Parenti's actions in Illinois had anything to do with his decision.

"Apparently we hired a teacher who slugged a cop. I have friends who slug cops. But the people of this state are concerned. The legislature is concerned. To reappoint you would not be in the best interests of this university."

Peter Giuliani stated: "I hear this man no justice" after which the audience broke into laughter. Parenti "does not measure up" to the standards of the University of Vermont, Giuliani added. Giuliani did not elaborate on his scale of standards.

Ken Scott interjected his comments: "The final responsibility (of the Board) covers much more than standards of excellence in a classroom. It covers the responsibility to protect the image of this University."

Scott then talked about how he also found his wife at UVM (just as Bolwell had) and he implied that his Shangri-La had also been shattered.

The Chairman concluded: "...your actions and statements would never permit me to recommend either the hiring or the reappointment of a man such as you."

Parenti maintained his self-control in an atmosphere full of tension and excitement on behalf of the students and faculty while he responded to Scott:

"A man such as me" (Scott tried to interrupt but yielded to Parenti). It is fairly clear that you didn't give me any reasons - there was an allusion 'to a man such as me.' You have made it clear Mr. Scott as you did last year that you don't approve of my not saluting the flag at Rotary Clubs. You do seem to think you can poison my political activities. We will have to settle this somewhere else where we will have to get down to specifics."

Scott objected to Parenti's statements and stated: "I have not mentioned your political activities."

Defense Fund Is Established To Defray Parenti's Legal Costs

By Ralph Robbins
A defense fund had been established at the Chittenden Trust Company to help cover the cost of Professor Parenti's legal defense. The fund, which was spearheaded by Mr. Garrison Nelson of the Political Science Department, is called the "University Defense Fund."

Contributions should be sent to the "University Defense Fund," c/o Mr. Garrison Nelson, Political Science Department, University of Vermont.

According to Nelson, the defense fund will have two major purposes: The first is to provide money for Parenti's legal defense and any costs incurred with the defense. The second is to provide the money needed to educate the public through such media as newspapers. This publicity will be used to counter any one-sided arguments that may be offered concerning Parenti's case.

Faculty, students, and administrators, as well as members of the community, are asked to contribute to the fund. No desirable amount for contributions was designated, nor has any goal been set. Nelson added, however, that any contributions of $5.00 or more will be gratefully acknowledged by the fund committee.

Earmarked Money
If a contributor wishes the money to be used solely for the defense of Professor Parenti, and not for the education of the public, this should be specified with the contribution. Indication of this on a check will suffice, said Nelson.

Contributions not earmarked will be divided as is necessary to pay the incurred expenses, although Nelson indicated that most of the contribution will go toward the defense, even if it is not earmarked such.

The cost of the legal defense is unknown at this time and will depend on the nature of the action. Two types of law suits may be brought by Professor Parenti. The first type of action could be brought against individual members of the Board of Trustees for defamation of character, while the second type of action could be brought against the entire Board of Trustees for damage to Parenti. The first course of action will be more costly, Nelson indicated.

Nelson's statement: "If an individual truly believes the University is endangered by the Trustees' action, then he should act accordingly and make a contribution reflecting the importance of the defense." (continued on page eight)

VOLUME LXXXIX

DECEMBER 9, 1971

Professor Andrew E. Nuquist:

Veteran Vermonter And Scholar Speaks

I speak as the senior member of the Department of Political Science. I have spent more than half of my lifetime here on this campus in an environment that I love.

One of the great factors of this campus through these more than thirty years has been the fact that this institution has stood for academic freedom and the right to teach facts and ideas as they appear to the faculty member. This academic freedom has been one of the prize attributes of this great University and it has been here for many, many years.

Through these years we have seen all sorts of changes and I am old enough that I have seen many varieties of hysteria appear and disappear. I know that whenever this occurs those who have fostered the hysteria usually feel chastened that they have participated in it.

Now on this campus, too, we have evolved through the years a specific method of providing for promotions and for reappointment of faculty members. It begins with the departments and goes through many steps to the President.

This process has been devised for the purpose of protecting the University and its departments and the individual faculty members. Yesterday, by a vote of six to four, this whole process was thrown into the air.

The decisions of the six have been made, not on the basis of the presentation of the facts, but for some other reason that I do not know. I hope that today this Board will not violate the traditions of this great University and say that the only things that can be taught on this campus are those things that a few members feel at the moment should be taught.

I also feel that under our Constitution of the United States and of the State of Vermont that a man has a right to live his life. My study of the history of Vermont has shown that this state has stood from the very first days for the right of a man to do as he has a mind to as long as he did not interfere particularly with the rights of his fellow citizens.

I hope, therefore, that we will not take steps today that will cast this University into the mold of one of the degraders of the academic concepts of freedom and the scholarly pursuit of knowledge.

As the esteemed Professor Nuquist presents his arguments for the retention of Parenti, other interested faculty members and students listen closely.

Anne Ehrlich Refuses To Accept UVM Diploma

Anne D. Ehrlich was to graduate from the University of Vermont in two weeks, at the end of this semester. She had been a Rotary major and had acquired a total of 118 credits to date (120 credits are needed for graduation). On Tuesday, December 7, 1971, Anne submitted the following statement to Dean Abbot, Assistant Dean in the College of Arts and Sciences:

Members of the University of Vermont Community: Once again we find ourselves immersed in an exciting and compelling controversy here at the University of Vermont. This issue may face the same treatment that other mass movements have received at this institution. However, I and many others perceive this issue to be one of great depth and deserving of very serious action.

The event of which I write is the irresponsibility and apparent vindictiveness of the Board of Trustees, in regard to the reappointment of Professor Michael Parenti. Many admirable protests have been registered against the capricious and spiteful nature of his Board in its decision to suspend the Bill of Rights and destroy academic freedom. Efforts will certainly be made to reverse this decision, reappointment Dr. Parenti, and thereby restore UVM to its accustomed decency. I feel that the basic issue may be overlooked in our passion to do justice to one man. A more important question may be whether a group of people who

Special Board Meeting Set For Dec. 18 To Decide UVM-VSC Merger Details

By Arlene Erikson

Fearing a loss of identity as well as the future possibility of UVM being state-controlled, the Board of Trustees voted last Friday to only approve of the "concept" of a State Colleges-UVM merger.

In order to iron out some of the objections raised during the session, the Board decided to hold a special meeting on December 18. The Joint Committee of Higher Education Planning will then present a revised report.

The Trustees objected mainly to the proposed name of the new public corporation and to the proposed composition of the new board of Trustees.

The Joint Committee's report has recommended uniting the five institutions under the name of "The Vermont University." Strongly in favor of retaining the existing identity of every component involved, however, several members strongly objected to the changing of the colleges' names.

The Joint Committee's report has also recommended replacing the VSC and UVM boards by a new twenty-one member board. Nine of the members of the super-board would be appointed by the Governor, while an additional six would be appointed by the General Assembly. Thus, with the majority of the members being legislative appointees, fears were expressed that the state would be controlling higher education. This would be an inequitable situation for UVM, since the state finances only 20% of its budget.

The Board adopted the proposal of President Edward C. Andrews that a student and a faculty member be appointed to work with the Joint Committee during the revision of its deliberations.

Professor William A. White, chairman of the Faculty Senate, told the Board that there was little enthusiasm among the faculty for the proposal and "some really genuine misgivings." Besides insufficient time for full consideration, he noted that the senate lacked details about the program and its implications.

As compared to UVM, the Vermont State Colleges Trustees voted unanimously in favor of the unified higher education proposal. This occurred after only thirty minutes of deliberation last Friday.

The VSC trustees, in cooperation with the UVM trustees, will draft appropriate legislation and submit it to the General Assembly in January, 1972. It is hoped that the program will become effective July 1, 1972.

Faculty Senate:

AAUP Censure Will Hinder Accreditation

by Arlene Erikson

Tuesday afternoon the Faculty Senate passed long-range measures to avoid the detrimental repercussions which may arise if the Board of Trustees does not reverse its decision in the Parenti case. The body, assembled in the overcrowded Benedict Auditorium, saw the loss of accreditation and a repeated gross lack of accord with the Board as the harmful realities which will precipitate from the loss of academic freedom at UVM.

Dean John C. Weiger brought forth a resolution which had been passed by the College of Arts and Sciences. The resolution calls for "The Board of Trustees to present and discuss its reasons on December 17 to the Faculty Senate for reversing the recommendations in the case of Professor Michael Parenti."

In the discussion which ensued, Professor Michael Parenti stated that the reasons for non-reappointment offered by the trustees were either political in nature or were void of substance. One trustee rebuked Parenti for carrying the flag of a communist country while another trustee did so for his failure to salute the American flag at a Rotary Club meeting. Parenti continued, saying that there are two questions at hand. Did the Board make a just decision? Should they have the right to make such a decision unaccountable to no one?

Dr. Lyman J. Gould, Chairman of the Political Science Department, noted that he was present at both the Friday and Saturday sessions of the Board of Trustees. "The majority of the trustees," he said, "remained silent." Those who did advance reasons for their votes did so on the grounds of different philosophy, "on the grounds that he (Parenti) is not fit to walk in the shadow of their former professors."

"John Beckley always told me where he stood. John Beckley had no hesitation in coming forward, for better or for worse, and give his position. I respect him for it. And this resolution does ask of the trustees that they come to us and give us their reasons. If they won't do it for us, my God, why don't they do it in memory of John Beckley who has the decency and courage to state his reasons?"

The resolution requesting the Board to present its reasons to the Faculty Senate was passed.

The next issue raised was the fact that the University is under scrutiny for accreditation, with the decision due sometime next year.

Professor Parenti has asked the American Association of University Professors to review the decision of the UVM Board. Professor Samuel N. Bogorad of the English Department forewarned the Faculty of the weighty influence which censure by the AAUP has on re-accreditation judgements.

Professor Bogorad has just completed eight years as a member of the Commission on Michael Parenti (center of first row) listens to President Andrews along with about 400 other faculty members and students.

A&S Faculty Condemns Trustees Actions

by Arlene Erikson
"Drawn together by adversity," The College of Arts and Sciences' faculty unanimously censured the Board of Trustees for its refusal to reappoint Professor Michael Parenti. At the College's meeting in the crowded Ira Allen Chapel last Monday, the Board was emphatically denounced for denying the University its essential right to academic freedom.

The consensus was that the Board has acted irresponsibly. It had conspired a gross lack of accord with the University community by directly overruling the recommendations of the administration, faculty and students. It was felt that the trustees had based their decision, not on the facts presented, but on personal instincts and prejudices.

In a statement read aloud at the meeting, it was stated that: "In its action, the Board of Trustees has nullified the principles and procedures set forth in the University Officers' Handbook. The standards of academic scholarship and teaching have been subordinated to a vaguely defined standard of political and behavioral conformity."

Before concluding, the College of Arts and Sciences passed the following resolutions: Resolution No. 1: The College of Arts and Sciences of the University of Vermont condemns the implicit violation of the constitutional freedom of all faculty members exemplified by the action of the Board of Trustees in denying reappointment to Professor Michael Parenti on grounds other than those of academic scholarship and teaching.

Resolution No. 2: The College of Arts and Sciences calls upon its colleagues in the University Senate to join them in requesting the Board of Trustees to appear before the University Senate on December 17 to present and discuss its reasons for its actions.

The process of evaluation by those competent to judge academic scholarship and teaching has been reduced to mere formalism.

The actions of the Board moved Professor Jeremy Feld to say, "Following all of the established procedure is not the way to make a point. If subversion exists on this campus, it exists in the Board of Trustees."

ACLU Holds Conference At Middlebury College

The ACLU of Vermont is holding a conference at Middlebury College next Sunday, December 12, as a working effort to discuss and plan the affiliate's time.

the major civil liberties problems in the state. The conference is designed to enable all members of the Vermont ACLU and others interested in civil liberties in the state to bring their concerns before new or expanded committees. The committees are the new focus in the ACLU's efforts. "The annual membership meeting does not give our members an opportunity to voice their opinions about actions we are taking," contends Craig Murray, Vermont ACLU's Executive Director. "The conference will afford committees and ACLU members an opportunity of discovering new ways in which they can take affirmative actions towards our general goal: more tolerance and justice within this state and its institutions."

The plan for the conference originated with a unanimous petition to the Executive Board from the eleven member Free Speech and Association Committee. The Committee hopes that the conference will also help to clarify the present aims of each committee and promote more cooperation and effective action by these committees.

As always, ACLU meetings are open to the public, and members are encouraged to bring friends.

Xmas Service

If you would like to get in the Christmas spirit, why not join us this Monday evening at St. Anselm's for our Christmas service. We'll be reading the Advent and Christmas story and singing lots of carols. After the service in the chapel, those interested are invited to go caroling. We'll end up with hot chocolate and cider around a big fire.

So take a break from your studying, and celebrate Christmas with us. The service will begin at 6:00 pm, this Monday evening, December 13, at St. Anselm's Chapel, on Redstone Campus. And bring a friend!

Career Planning

All Seniors and Graduate Students are encouraged to visit the Career Planning and Placement Office, 224 Waterman and pick up registration material for spring campus and off campus job interviews. The deadline for returning the placement papers for the spring semester campus job interview program is Tuesday, December 21.

Parenti's Statement
After the initial shock wore off, Professor Parenti made the following comments to the CYNIC on Tuesday:
"People want to be able to run their own institution. We now have a small oligarchy of businessmen - who claim absolute power over every decision concerning contracts, tenure, curriculum, departmental organization, budgets, programs, and whatever."
"Any time we breathe we have to get their approval. They in turn are accountable to nobody."

A dark green ski parka was taken from the party at Jeanne Mance Hall on Saturday, Dec. 4. In the pockets were a red and blue ski hat, a pair of gloves, and a scarf. This was the owner's only winter coat. If you picked this coat up, please return it to Jeanne Mance or the Cynic office, and no questions will be asked.

Vermont Study

Five years ago a group of UVM students and others were the first volunteers in what has become known as the "Vermont Study," a U.S. Public Health study of the endocrine and metabolic effects of overeating and weight gain, which is being carried out by the Metabolic Unit of the Department of Medicine at UVM. Since then much value has been learned, but there are critical studies which remain to be done.

We have openings for four male volunteers with no personal or family history of obesity or diabetes who will live in the Clinical Research Center at the Mary Fletcher Unit during the second semester and gain weight on a nutritious (non-macrobolic), but unusual, diet somewhat resembling that of an Eskimo. Room with a view and board provided along with a generous stipend and payment for undergoing moderately demanding tests. Age limit 18-30. If interested call 656-2530 before the vacation for further information.

Degree Refusal...

are not students, faculty, or administrators have the right to determine policy at a university and in the process be accountable to no one. Taxation without representation has been condemned. Imperialism, at least in theory, has been condemned. I feel that the situation at this University is validly comparable and therefore also worthy of condemnation.

I also feel that the continued participation of anyone associated with a university governed in such a manner, is a tacit acceptance of and agreement with this repressive system. I do not agree with this system and cannot continue to compromise by beliefs and ethics by quietly accepting. I hereby refuse my degree and all that I might gain by holding it.

(CPS) - A long range effect of the Vietnam war is to lose of respect for the president among children, according to a survey conducted by Howard Tolley of Wilberforce University in Ohio.
Less than 25% of 2,677 children in grades three through eight said they would support a wartime president if they thought his policies were wrong. Only 31% of those surveyed thought Nixon was doing the right thing in Vietnam, 45% didn't believe Nixon was always telling the truth about the war.

Institutions of Higher Education of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. In his opinion, UVM is "inevitably destined" to be censured by the AAUP after investigation by the said organization.

"An indispensable ingredient for membership in the New England Association, which means accreditation by that body, is the existence of academic freedom in the institution."

"I can assure this body from my experience while on the Commission that it would take very seriously indeed the fact that this institution might be in jeopardy with respect to the AAUP and that there would be a very real chance that this institution would not be re-accredited."

Editor's Note: John Krizer, professor of Physics and a member of UVM's chapter of the AAUP has been in contact with the national group for advice and information. He also indicated that the local AAUP may request the National AAUP to send representatives to UVM for an investigation of the situation.

"Now what does the failure to be re-accredited by this agency mean? One of the things that it very seriously means is that all federal funds are in jeopardy because it is the law that federal funds may not go to an institution that does not have the accreditation of the regional accrediting institution."

If we fail to be re-accredited, it is conceivable that the funds for all the colleges of UVM could be withdrawn. If they do not reverse their decisions, Professor Bogard feels that "the trustees themselves will be responsible for the destruction of this University."

The following resolution was thus passed by the Faculty Senate:

"that the Senate request the committee preparing the self-study report for the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education in the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools to prepare a description, an evaluation of the significance of the decision on Saturday, December 4 of the Board of Trustees not to renew the appointment of Michael Parenti. This description and evaluation is to be submitted to the New England Association as part of the materials relevant to accreditation. In particular the committee should address itself to the following issues described in the self-study outline:

1) Objectives - What impact are contemporary social concerns having on the institutions of justice? How is this reflected in its personnel?
2) Organizational Control - What changes, if any, have occurred in the organizational responsibilities of the administration since the last evaluation by the New England Association?

3) Faculty - What changes, if any, in the institutions policies, the procedures for renewal of contracts, and promotion and salary increases have occurred since the last evaluation by the New England Association?

How does the faculty participate in the formulation of academic policy and practice?

What criteria are used in the evaluation of individual faculty performance?

What changes, if any, in academic freedom have occurred since the last evaluation by the New England Association? What is the institution's current policy with respect to academic freedom?

with you.

Please don't blame it all on us. But after February 1, anybody of any age can fly to the Alps for almost youth fare prices.

What used to cost them $400, will cost $250. Which means a lot of people that wouldn't think of coming over, are going to be coming over. But they won't be coming until February, and until they arrive, there's plenty of seats on the planes, plenty of room to the left, plenty of beds in the hotels and plenty of young Europeans on the slopes.

From $250 Swissair will fly you to Zurich or Geneva, the closest you can get to the Swiss, French, Italian or Austrian Alps without actually landing on one.

We want you to take your January vacation in resorts like Andermatt, Davos, St. Moritz, Chamonix, Zermatt. Everyday we'll be bringing in students from all over the U.S. for one last Alpine blast.

Besides the skiing there's skating, riding, swimming, snowmobiling, climbing, tobogganing, dancing, swimming, even gambling. All with people your own age, if not your own country. (An American is as exciting to the Swiss, French, and Italians as they are to you.)

If you'd like to be part of all this, write Swissair for more information and write dad for $250.

Dean Weiger also mentioned that Middlebury College, "a small Shangri-la down the road where I met my wife," has manifested concern over the Parenti decision. The college carried this resolution: "The faculty at Middlebury College registers our grave concern about the report of events surrounding the reappointment of Professor Michael Parenti of the University of Vermont. We direct our Faculty Council to seek qualification of this decision, especially in light of higher education in Vermont."

Statements Made At The Board of Trustees Meeting Concerning Parenti

Brooks McCabe, Chairman of the Student Representatives to the Board of Trustees

About a year ago it was stated at a Board meeting that at no time in recent history has the administration been overruled in an area that they strongly believed in, that they did their research in, and that they were willing to fight very strongly for.

The presentation made yesterday at the Educational Policy Committee was without a doubt the strongest presentation that I have ever seen at this University. I have never seen any single administration go so far out on the limb as did the President and Vice President. I think you should consider this, since these are the people you have hired to run this University. Dr. Andrews is the one who has the ultimate decision for tenure and reappointment before it goes before the Board. He has weighed the facts very carefully as have all the other people involved.

I have been in this University and have participated in one form or another for as long as most of the Trustees here. I believe that I have some feel on how the University operates as an institution. I find it very hard to grasp the concept that the Board of Trustees, when given factual information and when both sides have been presented, can decide to go against such information and to vote contrary to what the facts indicate.

Thank you, John Perry, Proponent Campus Minister to the University of Vermont

During the past two years I have had many conversations with Professor Parenti and find him to be one of the most constructive and dedicated members of our fine faculty.

It is my personal hope that this Board will reverse the Committee's recommendation and renew Mr. Parenti's contract.

I definitely concur with the remarks of Professor Jay Gould, that what is at stake here is the future of the University; the integrity and confidence of the students and faculty in their University is what is at stake.

Thank you, J.D.D.

Gene Beaudoin, President of Student Association

I have become confused. Confused about many words that are being used here today. I would like to ask some simple questions. Perhaps, many of you are also confused about words, like: academic freedom, University, student or even the word trustee.

For example: What is a University?

To me a University is a place where there can be a free exchange of ideas between teachers and students. The purpose of the University is to bring students and professors together. It is also the purpose of the University to bring these two groups together in an environment that makes this exchange of ideas possible.

Deen John G. Weiger, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences:

"If the University requires its professors to sign a loyalty oath to support the Constitution, then the University must not ask him to waive the rights provided under the Constitution: If the University must also support the Constitution by providing the rights of that Constitution to its employees.

"If it is true that Professor Parenti has said—and I do not know it to be true—that one cannot succeed within the system, then this action proves him right. Professor Parenti has done what the system asked of him, to teach well and to produce good scholarship, yet we are saying to him that he will not be reappointed despite his having done what was asked of him. Finally, I think it strange indeed that the University of Vermont should condemn a man for waving the flag of one communist nation while the President of the United States makes plans to visit another communist nation."

A quick example: Suppose a group of buildings and a group of men called itself a University. At this University there was a Black History Course and a professor was "drummed out" of the University for teaching that a black man is equal to a white man. Would it then be a University? I think not!

What is a professor or teacher at a University?

He is a man or woman who shares himself with his students. He lives for his students. He takes pride in what he teaches. If we are an institution of higher learning here at the University of Vermont we must have very good teachers and provide them with an atmosphere where they are not inhibited to share themselves with their students.

This particular faculty member is good. More than that he is exceptionally good. You have heard from every level of the University just how good he is and there is no question.

There is only one question left: Is a Professor, here, at the University of Vermont because of his own high caliber or is he here because he is of the same political beliefs of this Board. When then is a student?

I am a student. I came here to learn. I came here to learn in the fullest possible sense of the word. Yet now you are saying I cannot learn what I want to but rather only what you want. Please, then, tell me what a student is this very minute and further tell me what will a student be one hour from now.

Lastly... What is a Trustee?

A trustee must be a courageous man or woman who stands on his or her own two feet and makes decisions necessary in governing a University.

I would hope that a trustee of the University of Vermont is, indeed, a trustee.

I say courageous and here today this is the key word. He must be courageous enough to say, even to his peer group, that his own politics are wrong and that the University of Vermont first, I can only repeat that I love the University and this is why I ask you to rule reappoint, as recommended, the faculty member in this case.

I am a student.

He is a Professor.

This is a University.

I hope you are Trustees.

Thank you very much, Eugene Beaudoin, President, Student Association

Department Chairman of College of Arts and Sciences

We the undersigned Department Chairmen of the College of Arts and Sciences of the University of Vermont believe that the decision of the Board of Trustees not to reappoint Professor Michael Parenti does irreparable harm to the integrity of the University of Vermont because their decision was made on grounds other than those of academic scholarship and teaching.

Prof. William N. White, chairman of the UVM Faculty Senate

I went home last night (after the Board of Trustees' Educational Policy Committee Meeting) and I didn't want to tell my children what I saw and heard some good Americans do here yesterday. I know they were good Americans because they talked about our flag.

And they talked about the blood of our boys. And they talked about foreign political philosophies. And they talked about protecting the American system. And they talked about respect for the law. And they talked about rights and responsibilities. And then, they went ahead and voted 6 to 4 to suspend the Bill of Rights. They suspended the principle of protection from double jeopardy. They suspended the right of due process. And they suspended freedom of speech. It was not a glorious day for America. I hope that today will be different. I hope that we have not lost faith in American principles. I hope that I will not be embarrassed to face my children and tell them what my generation of Americans has done.

Alfred B. Rollins, Jr., Vice President for Academic Affairs

I wish to make it quite clear that I think it is a serious mistake for the Board to consider the possibility of substituting its judgment for the professional judgment of the University community in the evaluation of a professor.

In this case, I think the Board will do the University substantial and continuing damage if it decides against the reappointment of Professor Parenti.

The matter goes to the heart and purpose of a University.

Professor Parenti's appointment was strongly recommended by his Department, his Dean, the Standards Committee of his College, the Academic Policy Committee of the University Senate, and the full Council of Deans.

I recommended Professor Parenti to the President for reappointment. I did so with confidence and conviction. I consider this matter one of fundamental principle in a free society.

Dr. Raymond Phillips, Dean of the College of Continuing Education

Phillips warned the board that Parenti could win his suit in the Vermont courts, saying:

"There are enough precedents to sue the university, because you would have denied him the right to practice his profession."

He told the trustees they had better ready to answer three questions, should they take the action to dismiss Parenti:

1. Has Parenti been given due process?

2. In view of the unanimous recommendation for Parenti from the University administration, what basis did the board have for refusing to renew his contract?

3. Where will the board and the administration find the money to pay damages if Parenti should win the case?

Department of Political Science

As members of the Department of Political Science, we respectfully submit that the six to four decision taken by the educational policy committee of the Board of Trustees to strike Professor Parenti's name from the reappointment list was arbitrary and unjust; and contrary to all accepted criteria for reappointment. This action constitutes not only an unwarranted attack on our respected colleague, but a very serious threat to the academic freedom of the entire University community.

Therefore, we petition the Board of Trustees to restore the name of Professor Parenti to the reappointment list. Should the Board deny our request, we shall take all appropriate and necessary steps in order to defend our freedom to teach and learn.

Lyman Jay Gould, Chairman

Department of Political Science

The issues are clear and stark. They involve the First Amendment and academic freedom, the meaning and mission of a university, and the integrity of the process by which the faculty and administration judge their colleagues. My position is clear on these matters and I am on record. Professor Parenti is the immediate victim. What must be underscored is that in defending Professor Parenti we are defending the University of Vermont, the finest traditions of the State of Vermont, and the future of every member of the academic community.

Editorial We All Lost

Dr. Parenti lost his job! He is not the only one who lost, for the students also have lost. Not one young Ph.D. with a creative intellect will consider applying to work here. In addition, all professors now teaching at UVM value their freedom, who are concerned about the world, will slowly but surely find employment elsewhere. I am not talking about radicals, I am talking about individuals who believe that their minds are their own property.

If UVM has any national prestige, a loss of qualified faculty would drive the meaning of a UVM degree to way below the level of mediocrity.

It seems interesting that fifteen people have the right and authority to flush this University down, on this issue, especially, when everyone qualified to judge Dr. Parenti's merits have unanimously voted to retain him.

The very authority of the Trustees is an insult to democracy. The freedom of thought of not just Professor Parenti but each and every one of us is on trial here.

J.A.

AAUP Censure Is Key

Our fears of a return to the McCarthy Era have become reality. Senator John O'Brien has made derogatory references to our "marshmallow-brigade administrators." He claims that the efforts of our faculty to raise the funds necessary to support a chair for Professor Parenti leads him "to believe UVM professors are overpaid" and then suggested their salaries be cut. Just as happened to Parenti himself, the entire faculty is now under scrutiny for maintaining and fighting for their beliefs in academic freedom.

The imminent danger to faculty, administrators, and students can no longer be denied. The only issue that could possibly polarize our efforts is which course of actions to take. A defense fund will definitely aid a court victory. A permanent chair paid for through contributions is also commendable, but our actions should not stop here; for the principle will not be won by these actions alone.

The faculty have made various resolutions requesting the Trustees to explain their actions before the faculty. It is surprising the faculty did not realize that the very reason for this resolution is without cause. The essence of the problem is that regardless of the resolution passed, the Trustees do not have to comply. There is certainly reason to believe the Trustees will refuse such a request, this solving nothing. (Trustee Peter Giuliani has already stated he would not honor such a request.)

Our actions must be directed at an area that will affect the Trustees, something which they must confront. Arguments were presented calling for censure of the University by the American Association of University Professors until Professor Samuel N. Bogorad explained the ramifications of censure by the AAUP. In short, censure means non-reaccreditation, which in turn means a loss of all federal funds for the University. Accreditation procedures for UVM are next year in 1972. This then is the powerful tool that must be utilized. The necessary procedures should be taken by our local AAUP chapter for the national organization to investigate the situation which will undoubtedly lead to censure of UVM.

UVM - VSC Merger

During the present discussions, the UVM-VSC merger has been somewhat overlooked. Under the present proposal which is still unclear to many faculty and students, the new Board of Trustees will be comprised of a majority of appointed legislators, legislators who must first respond to the political situations of their own districts, and not to the well-being of the University itself. Is this not the basis of our very predicament - the fact that our present Trustees have divided loyalties?

Letters To The Editor

Students Express Dismay And Their Support Of Parenti

To the Editor:

The supposed "academic community" was designed to promote as much free thought and expression as possible. In May 1970 the Board of Trustees stated:

"The University of Vermont is a place to learn and to teach. It is not a cloister—it does not live in a vacuum. It is both in the world and of the world. Its mission is to educate people for leadership in society."

Apparently they no longer are upholding this principle. After voting by a large majority in favor of terminating Dr. Parenti's contract the Board of Trustees has added their voice to the wave of repression originating in Washington, D.C. that is spreading across America. It has even reached isolated, sequestered, Burlington, VT.

I believe an effective teacher is a good teacher regardless of whether his political leaning is of the left or right. Obviously the support of Professor Parenti by President Andrews, the Student Association and many others meant nothing to the Board. Will an instructor be able to speak out in that in which he believes without fear of intimidation from the Board? Likewise what professor will feel that he can encourage his students to speak up for their beliefs, when it maybe used against him when he faces an extremely arbitrary Board of Trustees?

Maybe the best solution would be for the Board of Trustees to purchase plastic capsules for all students and faculty to wear, thus making the Board's task of stifling faculty-student interaction and the concept of free expression for all political thought non-existent on the UVM campus easier. In addition the Trustees at UVM would be free of any impure of diverse comments on its actions on behalf of the University.

Yours in a Vacuum,
Jim Hope

To the Editor:

It is ironic that the Board of Trustees, in the interest of "denationalizing" the University of Vermont (read: keeping it the way it was 30 years ago), by firing Parenti have in fact taken a giant step in further radicalizing large numbers of students, faculty and administrators who otherwise might have been ideologically "acceptable."

Perhaps attendance at the Board of Trustees meetings should be required of every student as an educational illustration of how a power structure, remarkably out of touch with the sentiments of its "constituents," can nonetheless make decisions for them based upon antediluvian emotional judgments, blissfully unhindered by fact and reason.

Future Parents that are now sure to be hired will no doubt find more ready acceptance by the many who were born in disgust and disbelief Saturday morning.

To the Editor:

On Saturday, December 4, the Board of Trustees voted to suspend academic freedom at this University. On Monday, December 6, Gene Beaudoin called an emergency meeting of the SA Senate to formulate some response to this arrogant and repressive act. Apparently most Senators do not feel that freedom of speech is an issue of sufficient importance to warrant action on their part.

In the first place, an impressive proportion of the SA representatives didn't even bother to show up. Whether this was a result of insufficient notification by Student Association officers, or of the Senators' traditional apathy, I don't know. What I do know is that the turnout for the meeting was pathetic.

In the second place, those Senators who did bother to go appeared to be intent on doing absolutely nothing, which is exactly what they did. After Professor at this University lack, i.e. quality, if any one questions her competence and/or research in her field of Human Development, I'd suggest they sit in on one of her lectures. He might be enlightened as to his stupidity.

Is the Academic Council fully aware of the reason for some 800 students failing to attend the University this semester? The reason is low student morale mainly because of poor quality professors in ratio to high tuition costs. I fear with such actions as this refusal of tenure to a quality instructor, the University can expect to lose 800, if not more, students in each following semester.

Unless this University's priorities are reordered and the criteria for the tenure system be based on excellence of teaching ability rather than on quantity of data published, I, as one tax payer, will not recommend this University to any competent high school graduate anywhere than I would encourage a child of my own to become involved in such an antiquated educational system.

It is a question of why does a University exist at all - for the student and for learning or for quantities of publications concerning research of questionable worth?

Totally disillusioned, yet concerned, I remain very truly yours,

Tenure System Needs Revision

To the Editor:

Here is a copy of a letter which I have sent to Vice President Rollins.

I hope that you will publish this letter so that other students and professors will realize what is at stake and will rally to support Dee Dee Jameson. She is too good to lose.

Dear Vice President Rollins,

I was sickened today, when I learned that Dee Dee Jameson of the Home Economics Department may be refused tenure at this university on the sole basis that she has not "published." As I understand it, a teacher at this institution must publish some of their own work in order to receive tenure.

It is appalling and disillusioning to realize that because a person has not published, he or she can be "given the ax." Is this a fair basis on which to judge the quality of a teacher?

Has anyone on the academic committee bothered to visit or sit-in on one of Mrs. Jameson's classes. If they have not, I would strongly suggest that they do so. In that class room they would discover an unquestionably qualified, dynamic, and absorbing teacher who has the unique ability to communicate with her students. She discussed things which affect life. She cares if the courses which she teaches have some meaning to life. Her classes are magnetic, as a simple examination of class enrollment will prove, Mrs. Jameson cares.

These qualities which Mrs. Jameson possesses are qualities which many, too many, teachers with tenure do not possess. Their classrooms are stagnant and their classes are diminishing in size. Has anyone bothered to investigate their qualities as a teacher? Probably not; they have tenure.

This university lost 800 students this fall. Perhaps the reason for this is that their college education has not been relevant. It is my feeling that it would be an unforgivable act not to grant Mrs. Jameson tenure. If she is not, my own disillusionment with life and especially this university will greatly increase.

It is my sincere hope that you will grant Mrs. Jameson tenure. Somewhere, somewhere there must be some good in people.

Sincerely,
Susanna Himmans

Pres. Nixon Shows No Respect For The Law

From Radical Union #1

President Nixon signed the $21.4 billion military bill containing the Mansfield Amendment.

The Mansfield Amendment declares it to be the "policy of the United States to terminate at the earliest practicable date all military operations of the United States in Indochina and to provide for the prompt and orderly withdrawal of all United States military forces at a date certain, subject to the release of all American prisoners of war."

The Mansfield Amendment calls on the President to implement this policy by establishing a final date for withdrawal of all American forces contingent only upon the release of American prisoners.

On July 1 in Paris, the N.L.F. made the precise offer. All that is required is for the President to pick up the phone, call Paris or Hanoi, and set the date.

Nixon is flouting the law. In his announcement of November 12, President Nixon failed to set terminal date for complete withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam.

He merely announced an interim withdrawal which would still leave 139,000 Americans in Vietnam in February of 1972. He said he would continue, and perhaps "step up" the air

Then on November 17, Nixon announced that he will disregard the Mansfield Amendment, which he has signed, and which is now law.

In response, Congressman Edward P. Boland (Mass.) said it was "incomprehensible and indefensible" for the President to say he would "ignore a law passed by Congress."

Senator Frank Church, Democrat of Idaho who lead the move in the Senate to impose a fund cutoff, protested that "the Mansfield Amendment is now part of the law and, as such, is not subject to dismissal by the President."

Noting that Mr. Nixon had asserted that the amendment was not binding, Mr. Church asked: "What is he going to do next? Dispatch Henry Kissinger, his foreign policy advisor, to Capitol Hill to disband Congress?"

"It is the height of fashion these days, in Southeast Asia to establish one-man rule, one-man elections, and disband people's assemblies. It has happened in South Vietnam, in Cambodia, and in Thailand today. But ours is a government of law."

In his recent announcement of his Supreme Court appointments, Nixon said, "It is our obligation to obey the law whether we like it or not."

Practice what you preach, Mr. President.

"Winding down the war" is a fraud.

Since he became President, Mr. Nixon has been saying that he is winding down the war.

Yet, according to a study sponsored by Cornell University's Center for International Studies we have poured over 3,000,000 tons of bombs on tiny Indochina since Mr. Nixon became President.

More than were dropped on three continents during all of World War II and the Korean War combined.

Between 1964 and 1968, during the Johnson Administration, the number of civilians killed, wounded and left homeless in Indochina ran at an average of 95,000 per month.

Since Mr. Nixon took office, that average figure has gone up to 138,000 per month.

Several more generations of war?

How long will this carnage go on?

Let's ask our President.

In his September 16th press conference, Nixon proclaimed that our objective of achieving a democratic process in Vietnam "will not be met for perhaps several generations. But at least we will be on the road."

Professor Versus Student; Is That Still Around?

By Jill Davidson

Recently I was shocked to hear of a certain UVM professor's action. A friend of mine was recounting to me an experience. This person is taking the present experimental psychology course. One of the main features of this course is that it permits the student to proceed at their own pace. This student proceeded rapidly through the course requirements and was finished in early November. In order to retain the course material this student desired to take the final exam early. Approaching one of the three professors in charge of the course, this student was told that the decision would have to be made by all three professors. This student realized that an unlimited number of exams dates could not be set up and only wished one earlier date to be set for other students who had also finished early.

Then came the reply. An early exam could be set up. This exam would be given to only this one student and would be oral.

Besides being a very limited solution to the need for an earlier exam, this is a cop out on the part of the professor. An oral exam is evaluated by the professor at the time it is given and the resultant grade cannot be disputed.

If the student desired nothing, extraneously or unreasonably, the resultant set up was far from equitable. This professor can not be interested in the education of his students.

Two New Albums Provide Good Listening

By Doug Collette

CALIFORNIA ROCK 'N'

ROLL THUNDER -- Part II

GRATEFUL DEAD

NEW RIDERS OF THE

PURPLE SAGE: It's been quite a space of time since the release of Live/Dead, and double album that comes as close as possible to capturing on record the Grateful Dead on stage. During all that time the Dead, like the rest of us, have gone through some changes and their studio efforts during that period (Workingman's Dead) and (American Beauty) not only give some indication of those changes, but also brought the band a more widespread popularity than they were able to gain when they toured their reputation as America's finest rock 'n' roll band. Grateful Dead is not Live/Dead volume II because this is not the same band structurally or philosophically;

instead of the acid-trunk ambassadors from San Francisco, they're now mellow fellows of country ways or, as Bob Weir once characterized them: "neo-red-necks."

So it's understandable that their music has changed, but it's all for the better. The Dead's first with countryish acoustic music has improved their singing immensely; it's now smooth, clear and confident. They've progressed as composers too, as the three new tunes, written with lyricist Robert Hunter, come on with more strength and force than earlier compositions. Beneath it all is still some of the most extraordinary instrumental work you're likely to hear in rock 'n' roll. The loss of drummer Mickey Hart isn't disastrous in the least because Bill Kreutzmann's light touch on drums, along with Phil Lesh's bass, gives the music a steady bottom on top of which guitarist Bob Weir layers yet more flowing rhythm while Jerry Garcia's needle-sharp lead sews it all together.

Sides one and three show the Dead doing tight, compact performances of their own songs "Bertha," bouncy rock "a" roll, and the autobiographical "Playing in the Band" as well as... what's this? Songs by Merle Haggard, Chuck Berry and Kris Kristofferson? You indeed and polished versions at that of "Mama Tried," "Johnny B. Goode," and "Me and Bobby McGee." Paper gets to show his stuff on "Big Boss Man," a mean, low-down blues.

One side four the band stretches out a bit of Garcia's evocative "Wharf Rat" and a well-sculptured coupling of "Not Fade Away," and "Goin' Down the Road Feeling Bad," but the second side, comprised entirely of "The Other One," features the legendary Dead after Kreutzmann's capably executed solo, the rest of the band joins in to weave the kind of magic that will surely set you free.

Yes, the Grateful Dead have changed all right, but they've become strong where they were once weak while maintaining their capability to hit the higher highs when they want to. Now more than ever they deserve the title of America's finest rock 'n' roll band and that sets a standard worthy of emulation.

The New Riders of the Purple Sage are one of the many bands that have been born into the family of the Grateful Dead and their first album is ample evidence as to who influenced the Dead on their excursions into acoustic music. So much so, in fact, that this LP could've been called American Beauty Volume II. This is not to say anything bad at all about the New Riders because it's nice to have someone around to carry on while the Dead go on to other things. An album full of rich, simple acoustic music with an occasional country touch and sweet (but just a little earthy) three-part harmonies is nothing to sneeze at when it provides a welcome respite from the rock 'n' roll explosions of the Who, Led Zep and others too numerous to mention.

John Dawson, better known as Marmaduke, writes delightful stories about "Henry" bringing back twenty keys of gold from Acapulco and "Dirty Business" in the mine at Cold Creek.

It may be sacrilege to say that "All I Ever Wanted," a lovely uncomplicated love song is the equal of Bob Dylan's "If Not For You," but it may also be true. And the way Marmaduke masterfully avoids clichés in his ghostly ecology song "Garden of Eden" is worth more than one round of applause as well as numerous repeated listenings. It's here also that Jerry Garcia plays some tasty pedal steel, for often on this album he falls down when trying to play in a traditional mode. When he uses some of the tricks culled from playing electric guitar, however, he gets on much better.

For a new band to make such a complete debut album is unusual but a real pleasure to receive. Add The New Riders of the Purple Sage to American Beauty and the first Hot Tuna LP as gentle, soothing music to calm you down and smooth you out.

VPIRG Approved By Board Of Trustees

Last Saturday the Board of Trustees endorsed the Vermont Public Interest Research Group, and committed to include the VPIRG fee on the invoice for the Spring semester of 1972.

Besides assessing each student three dollars per semester, it was agreed that the bill will include a brief statement of the fee can be refunded and the time and place where the refund can be collected. VPIRG will pay the University for acting as the collecting agency of the fee. If at any time 50% or more of the students do not pay or request a refund, however, the University will cease to act as the collecting agent.

This student consumer protection group was proposed last October in a speech delivered by Ralph Nader. Within weeks, through the impetus of a core group of students, the UVM campus was saturated with VPIRG publicity. The group's concerted petition campaign in the latter weeks of November was a success, resulting in the support of four thousand undergraduates.

To date VPIRG has also been approved of by the Board of Trustees of Marlboro College. This weekend the VPIRG proposal will be presented to the Board of several state colleges for endorsement. Also, further organizational plans will be made this Saturday at the state-wide meeting in Middlebury College.

The proposal that was passed, however, contained an additional clause: "...the failure of a student to include the payment of the VPIRG fee will not prevent that student's enrollment."

seriousness of this danger. The Department of Political Science has already supported the fund.

Nelson hopes that members of the Burlington community will also recognize the inherent danger of the Board's decision and the importance of Parenti's reappointment. Action is necessary to avoid a repeat of the events that took place in the McCarthy era of the 1950's, he stressed.

Nelson is skeptical about the extent that the students will financially support the case of Michael Parenti, explaining, "I hope the students realize that their academic freedom is in serious jeopardy and show a concerted action to rectify the Board's actions."

prerogative of the faculty to choose its colleagues. And whereas, by their actions the trustees have done irreparable damage to academic and political freedom at the University of Vermont.

Resolution No. 3: Be it resolved that the faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences of the University of Vermont establish the Thomas Jefferson Chair Of Critical Studies in the Department of Political Science and that Professor Michael Parenti be the first to occupy this Chair. This is an interim measure until Professor Parenti is reinstated by the University.

Resolution No. 4: Resolved that a committee be formed to look into ways to redefine and limit the power and authority of the trustees and to reconstitute its membership and their method of selection. The composition of this committee shall be decided at the December 8 meeting of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Resolution No. 5: Be it resolved that the College of Arts and Sciences urge that all alumni trustees of the University of Vermont or a merged system be replaced by trustees freely elected by all alumni of the University of Vermont.

Vice President Alfred Kollins was asked at the close of the meeting if the University lawyers will be solicited to defend Prof. Parenti and the University. He replied that it will most likely be the lawyers' decision as to whether they work for the Board or for the Administration.

Although the Lane Series' Ike and Tina Turner Concert took place over two weeks ago, people are still talking about it, and for good reason. For some people, the expected hysterical enthusiasm at the announcement that Lane Series would present the Ike and Tina Turner Revue was not dampened by the many problems that the Revue had in getting here, but this writer got more turned off as time went on. At first I was one of the joyous throngs who couldn't wait until Wed. Nov. 3rd at 8:30 pm. to see Ike and Tina, but when the date was changed to Sun. Nov. 9th (maybe for a good reason), and no one bothered to tell the hick town people why, I was mildly upset at the lack of courtesy involved. Then when good, old Mohawk Airlines, in its typically undependable style, left Ike and Tina without band and instruments for an hour and a half past concert starting time, my temptation to get up and leave was lessened only by my memories of an impressively good performance that the Revue had done on the Johnny Carson Show on NBC-TV about a year or two ago (but that was for a New York audience), and also Tina's consideration (possibly only professional) in coming out on stage to explain the delay.

When the seven-piece band did finally arrive, they set up surprisingly quickly. Their music, which ranged from soft-toned instrumentals to flute solos to rousing rhythmic jazz songs, was for one the highlight of the show. The lead guitarist, Jack Clark's instrumental, which started calmly and ended in ecstasy, was exceptionally moving (not to mention his red hot pants), and in general, the band proved itself easily capable of standing professionally without the rest

Movie Review:

'Play Misty For Me'

By Steve Pando

This film marks Clint Eastwood's debut as a director. Having gone from the TV series Rawhide to the Italian westerns that made him the second most popular film actor (the first is Paul Newman), Eastwood formed his own production company. He can now act in, direct, and produce his own films. His first effort is the thriller Play Misty For Me. He has studied Requiem for a Dream and Psycho enough to glean some of methods of showing terror. I enjoyed the film very much, even though it is quite flawed. Eastwood can't decide whether to photograph actors or scenery, and wavers between the two for most of the film.

The story concerns Eastwood who is a disc jockey for a radio station, KRML (it should have been called KRMA). One of his fans, Evelyn, calls daily with the request, "Play Misty for me." She meets Eastwood and becomes attached to him. In fact, he can't get rid of her. When he tells her to stop bothering him, she tries to commit suicide in his house. She ruins a business venture he was planning, rips his house apart, carves up his cleaning lady, nearly ruins his relationship with his steady girl, tries to kill Eastwood and his girl, and kills a policeman. Some women will go to great lengths to show their displeasure with a man.

I enjoyed the film because you can't help but feel sorry for Eastwood. He is literally and figuratively hounded to death by this disgraced girl. The film has some nice touches of horror and manages to shock occasionally. The film has many faults and Eastwood has a long way to go before he becomes a good director. Still, the film has some good moments and provides a reasonable amount of entertainment. Look for more films directed by Eastwood for he may develop into a good director.

Ike And Tina Turner Echoes

Although the Lane Series' Ike and Tina Turner Concert took place over two weeks ago, people are still talking about it, and for good reason. For some people, the expected hysterical enthusiasm at the announcement that Lane Series would present the Ike and Tina Turner Revue was not dampened by the many problems that the Revue had in getting here, but this writer got more turned off as time went on. At first I was one of the joyous throngs who couldn't wait until Wed. Nov. 3rd at 8:30 pm. to see Ike and Tina, but when the date was changed to Sun. of the Revue:

Next on the agenda the present three (there have been over 30 since the Revue began) Ikeettes, very short-skirted, well-shoreographed (by Tina, I'm told) appeared on stage to give us a quick glimpse of their dancing prowess and run off again. Then Tina and Ike on stage took the spotlight and performed a few quiet numbers (quiet for Tina's style, that is), and then the "main attraction" of the show came when the complete Revue worked out. The numbers were mainly old favorites, with some newer songs, with Ike (37) unfortunately in the background, quietly playing his guitar and adjusting the amps. Tina (approximately 32 years old and the mother of 4 sons), in bluish, sequined, extremely short dress, led the Ikeettes to arousing, almost all of the male members of the audience into a frenzy and the female members into envy, all except that older, middle-aged couple who walked out.

However, despite the out ward exuberance of the Burlington audience, I couldn't help but wonder if others were also asking, "Is that all there is?" I don't know whether Ike and Tina were just having an off-night or whether they had fallen into the typical "The what series wants us where?" attitude that has caused only slightly above mediocre performances by so many people that we know are capable of so much more. In any case, I, for one, felt that although the Revue gave us an exciting view of their potential, they could have given us a more concentrated effort. Yes, we only Burlington but A-OK Mrs. when you play with that microphone really make us feel it, not just see it, okay?

Her real name, like gave her the name Tina, was he says it's swish.

Soccer Stars

At the annual awards banquet for the University of Vermont soccer team, the co-champions of the Yankee Conference this fall, halfback Jack Shea (Pittsford, Mass.) was elected the captain for the 1972 campaign.

Shea, one of the unsung heroes on defense, was named to the All-State team this year, leading his Catamounts to an unblemished 5-0 state mark.

Other presentations at the break-up dinner included the Most Valuable Player Award which went to goalie Jim Kiely (Ithaca, N.Y.), a senior, who recorded an impressive 1.15 goals against average and set a Vermont record with five shutouts this season.

The Hal Greig Award was presented to Charles "Chuck" Davis (Burlington) and Peter Bernhardt (Buffalo, N.Y.), one of the tri-captains. Davis was an honorable mention choice for the All-Yankee Conference.

Chuck Davis, shown in action, was named captain for the 1972 season.

Parenti Affair Simmers; Suit For 'Defamation Of Character' Planned

by Steve Rice

As the new semester enters its third week, the most commonly asked question is "What's with the Michael J. Parenti case?"

The political science professor, whose bid for reappointment was denied by the board of trustees on Dec. 4, intends to sue that group for "defamation of character," he has hired former lieutenant governor of Vermont, Thomas B. Hayes, as his attorney.

Also, according to unconfirmed sources, this may not be the only suit involving the trustees.

At the Dec. 4 meeting, the trustees in its 15-4 decision ignored pleas by UVM president, Dr. Edward C. Andrews, UVM vice-president Dr. Alfred B. Rollins, chairman of the political science department, Lyman G. Gould, the Faculty Senate, and Student Association president Eugene Beaudoin to keep Parenti.

Trustee chairman Kenneth Scott claimed that the "image" of the University was at stake, and was being threatened by the presence of Parenti on the faculty. The professor had been convicted earlier this fall for an assault charge in a 1970 spring anti-war demonstration at the University of Illinois.

The week following the decision, saw faculty and student meetings ignite on this campus. The College of Arts and Sciences censured the trustees' action. The Faculty Senate and the College of Education soon followed.

Various committees to study ways of realigning the board of trustees were created.

Garrison Nelson, political science professor, began a defense fund on behalf of his colleague. Earlier this week, Nelson announced the fund's goal of $4,000 had been reached.

He noted that 55% of the contributions came from members of UVM's College of Arts and Sciences, 35% from faculty of other colleges, and the remaining 10% from parents. Also UVM students contributed.

Those colleges and universities that contributed were: Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Cornell, Michigan, Wisconsin, Middlebury, Connecticut, Windham, Sarah Lawrence, Queens City College, and Boston University.

Nelson noted also that UVM's Student Association did not make a contribution, though some representatives did solicit funds in their residence halls. Nelson had appeared before the SA in December to request money.

Also this week, Parenti released the reasons that the trustees presented to him for their decision. Trustee chairman Scott had announced at the trustees' Dec. 18 meeting that the board had presented Parenti with a letter citing reasons for dismissal, and it was up to the professor to release the letter.

The reasons offered in the letter were similar to the ones given at the Dec. 4 meeting. One cited the professor's involvement in the 1970 Illinois demonstration, and the resulting conviction. Others noted his verbal exchange with a UVM student in January 1971, and Parenti's involvement with a May, 1971 anti-war demonstration in Burlington, in which the professor marched downtown with a National Liberation Front flag (labeled a "Viet Cong flag" by the trustees.)

In response to the trustees' decision with his "action" with the UVM student, Paul Barrows, Parenti claimed that the student was "mutilating" posters in Billings Center. He also remarked that he sent a letter to trustee Edward Eunich, then chairman of the board, F. Luther Hackett and Peter Giuliani, asking:

"As a responsible trustee who is concerned with campus disorder and with acts of vandalism...do you believe that when a faculty member castigates a student for committing such an act of vandalism and for unlawfully interfering with the rights of others that the faculty member, rather than the student, should be the object of your public criticism?"

At the meeting of the College of Arts and Sciences Thursday, Jan. 20, Willard M. Miller, assistant professor of philosophy, asserted that Parenti could receive injunctive court relief from the trustees' decision.

Miller has met five Burlington attorneys, and claimed that these attorneys informed him that Parenti has a "good case" against the board, because the professor would not pose a "financial burden" on the university, if he were allowed to teach next fall.

This is possible, according to Miller, because the College has proposed the creation of "The Thomas Jefferson Chair of Critical Studies," a special teaching position. According to Garrison Nelson, 15 UVM faculty members have agreed to pledge up to $500 each to fund the position for the next fall.

However, if attempts to achieve court relief for Parenti prove unsuccessful, the chair would become a "research" position, where academic credit would not be available for those participating. UVM faculty members and administrators claim that the position would not be in violation of possible court directives.

As this new semester unfolds, the Student Association has remained quiet on the Parenti case. Some critics of the SA claim the body proved to be "ineffective" last December when the controversy began.

There is apparently a faction of UVM students who have become disillusioned with any type of "legitimate" student government, arguing that, because of its legitimate nature in the eyes of the administration, the representatives are fearful to

Billy Barnes, to appear in "Superstar"

Lane Series

"Superstar" On February 17, Margot Fonteyn In April

The date for the Lane Series presentation of "Superstar" has been set for Thursday, February 17.

The concert has been shifted from Memorial Auditorium to Patrick Gymnasium and will begin at 9:00 p.m. Doors open at 8:00 p.m.

Moving the concert to the Gym makes available additional seats which are now on sale in the Lane Office, 234

Waterman, at $3.50 each. These are all rush bleacher seats.

This production of "Superstar" is a concert version by the Original American Touring Company, which has been appearing in colleges and universities, as well as in commercial presentations, across the country.

This production includes all the original album songs performed by a company of 17 singers and instrumentalists. Heading the strong cast are Denny Belline, Billy Barnes and Susan Morse.

Also, the Lane office has made changes in two programs for the current season.

In place of the cancelled Vienna Opera Co. production of "Die Fledermaus," originally set for Jan. 18, the Lane Series has scheduled the internationally famous German soprano Elisabeth Schwarzkopf in a recital. She will be heard on Wed., March 15, in Memorial Auditorium, at 8:30 p.m. Single concert admissions, at $3.75 and $5.25 are also on sale in the Lane Office.

In place of the cancelled Netherlands Dance Theatre, originally set for April 27, the Lane Series has booked one of the most prestigious dance productions of the century: a full-length production of Tchaikovsky's "Sleeping Beauty" by the National Ballet of Washington, D.C., starring Margot Fonteyn of the Royal Ballet of England. Margot Fonteyn is recognized as the leading ballerina in the world.

The date of the new ballet presentation is Wednesday, March 1, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. Netherlands tickets are good for this performance. A few single admissions are available in the Lane Office at $3.75, $5.25, and $6.

UVM-VSC Merger Meets Some Unexpected Opposition

By Jeri Covey

Unexpectedly the proposed merger of the Vermont State Colleges and the University of Vermont is meeting some opposition. Pierre V. Kieffer, President of Vermont Technical College, in an interview with the Burlington Free Press last week stated that he was opposed to the merger because of the proposed board composition and fear of loss of autonomy for the Vermont State Colleges. Another unidentified State College President also expressed similar opposition.

The merger, which was approved in "concept" only by the UVM Board of Trustees last December 3, would create a public corporation by combining UVM and VSC under one Board of Trustees. However, autonomy will be retained by the separate colleges which will be designated as separate educational components at the merged institution. Each college will also retain its own President and provisions will be made for each institution to use bequests and gifts made to it. The super-board would have the administrative responsibility for all programs of higher education in Vermont.

The Board was originally conceived to contain twenty-one members, with the Governor as an additional ex-officio member. Six members would be elected by the General Assembly for six year terms with two of the members' terms expiring each biennium. With the advice of the Senate, nine members would be appointed by the Governor with six year terms, three members' terms expiring each biennium. Six members would be self-perpetuating, being elected for six year terms by the Board from nominations made by themselves, with two members' terms expiring each biennium.

Alternates to this plan have been considered. At the University of Vermont, an University-wide committee on the composition of the UVM-VSC Board suggested these five alternatives. Alternative one, some of the board members directly elected by the faculty, students, non-academic employees, and Parents' Association. Alternative Two, governor appoints members from a slate of nominees named by various campus organizations. Alternative Three, governor appoints members from names nominated by a special recommendation board. Alternative Four, the legislature would make sure that all of the various constituencies were represented. Alternative Five, replace the self-perpetuated portion of the board with more alumni directed members.

The Committee is composed of Robert Stanfield (Chairman), Wayne Patterson, Robert Lawson, William White, Faith Prior, Peter Batelle, George Trono, Michael Donno, and Roy Whitmore. Two students are yet to be named by Gene Beaudoin, President of Student Association.

The committee studying the composition was scheduled to present its report at a public hearing in Montpelier on Tuesday, January 25. However, at press time it was not known which alternative or set of alternatives were to be presented. The hearing was a preliminary discussion of the legislation (H-483) proposed by George E. Little, R-Burlington, and Thomas H. Candon, R-Rutland, dealing with the merger of UVM and VSC. The bill must also go

New Cynic Editorial Board Takes Over

With the beginning of the second semester, the Cynic underwent its annual changeover of editors. The new Editor-in-Chief is now Jeffrey Yacker from Cranford, N.J. Jeff has been working for the Cynic since the fall of 1970, and was Assistant Editor and Feature Editor before moving to the top spot. He is a political science major, class of '73, and a brother of Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity. The new Assistant Editor is Steve Rice, formerly President of the Inter-Residence Association (IRA). Steve is a sophomore majoring in English and communications. His journalistic experience includes work on the Bennington Banner last summer.

Jeri Covey is presently News Editor. She is a resident of St. Albans, and was Editor last year of the newspaper at her high school, Bellows Falls Academy. Jen is a political science major and Mass Communication minor. The new managing editor of the Cynic is Ruth J. Hay, '74, from Hardwick, Vermont. She is a Home Economics Education major with experience on the newspaper and yearbook of Hardwick Academy.

Tom Farris, from Bethlehem, Pennsylvania is the new Sports Editor. His major is Laboratory Animal Tech, and plans to go to Veterinary School after graduation. Barbara Frankel and Lisa Charles, freshmen, are Co-Feature Editors. Barbara is from Brooklyn, and Lisa is from Schenectady. Remaining as Business Manager for the Cynic is Terry Demas of Burlington, a veteran of two semesters in that post.

Dean Patzer, recuperating in Medical Center Hospital

Dean Patzer Suffers Heart Attack, Is Now Recovering

by Linda Goodspeed

Roland D. Patzer, Dean of Students at the University has been reported making "very satisfactory progress" according to Dr. R.W. Amidon after suffering a coronary while driving home Saturday, January 15.

Dean Patzer had been working in his office Saturday morning and was driving home when he experienced sharp pains in his chest. He attempted to drive to the hospital, but only made it as far as the Wasson Infirmary where a nurse helped him inside and called for Dr. Amidon who was home at the time. After arriving at the infirmary, Dr. Amidon quickly diagnosed the condition as a coronary and called for the rescue squad who rushed Dean Patzer to the hospital.

Dean Patzer, who is directly under the care of Dr. Richard Anderson and Dr. Amidon, has improved sufficiently enough for him to be moved from the intensive coronary treatment unit to the coronary treatment unit. Dr. Amidon estimated the Dean would be in the hospital for approximately three more weeks, but declined to speculate on the extensiveness of his future activities stating that beyond his stay at the hospital, his future and activities would be governed by his progress.

But at this time, the doctors are "very happy with his progress" and hope he continues to do as well.

Winter Weekend Investigation Committee Cites 'Gross Mismanagement' For Financial Debacle

Winter Weekend Investigation Committee
December 1, 1971

MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE: Chairman, David Meyer, Vice President for Financial Affairs, Senator, Carroll Hirsch, Robert Anesi, Member of SA, Concert Bureau, Terrance Demas, Business Manager of Vermont Cynic, Senator, Deirdre Thurber, Senator, Alan C. Bugbee

Purpose: The Winter Weekend Committee was asked by the S.A. Senate to investigate the causes for the $22,000.00 plus deficit incurred by the 1970 and 1971 Winter Weekend Committees. The Report is in two parts: responsibilities and recommendations. This Report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the Winter Weekend Investigation Committee (WWIC).

Responsibilities: There are or were six major groups or organizations party to the Winter Weekend that affect the making of the deficit.

1. The 1970 and 1971 Winter Weekend Committees consisted of four directors and a series of student assistants. These committees were, for all intents and purposes, self-perpetuating with the blessing of the University and the tacit approval of the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC). The immediate blame lies with these committees. The committees decided the form, content, budget and the style of the weekend. During the meetings of the Investigation Committee, it became increasingly clear that the Winter Weekend Committee was responsible to no one except a few ill-informed advisors and the usual University bookkeeping procedures.

2. The Inter-Fraternity Council was, when it was an active group, constitutionally and fiscally responsible for the Wake Walk and Winter Weekend activities in all of its many facets. However, the IFC has disbanded and not been replaced as a full governing agency. It was followed by a loose council known as the Fraternity Forum which did assume responsibility for all of the IFC's debts.

3. The Fraternity Forum is a loose body whose members represent interested fraternities. It has no recognition from the SA nor any power within the Fraternities.

4. The Advisors, mainly professors or UVM staff, were required by the University for Winter Weekend, as they have been for all other student organizations. Winter Weekend had several with no attempt being made to define what each advisor was responsible for. The end result of this was the possibility that if one Advisor refused to sign a purchase order, another one could be found who would. An important question to answer, yet, is whether or not the advisors did their jobs properly.

5. The UVM Administration was and is responsible for appointing all advisors to student activities and also for the carrying on its books of the original Winter Weekend deficit of $2,500.00 from 1970. All contracts for entertainment had to be signed by an officer of The University. During the last Weekend, the entertainment budget, alone, was overspent by at least $6,000.00. All purchase orders of the Weekend Committee had to go through the University's accounting system.

6. The UVM Student Association, by its constitution, is responsible for the recognition of all student activities that take place on this campus. If this recognition does not exist, then the University may not allow a consolidated fund to be created for the activity nor may the activity be allowed the use of any University facility. The SA was never aware of the Winter Weekend's activities and, indeed, had never formally recognized the Weekend. But, the Student Association was instrumental in forcing, or at least, causing the Wake Walk issue to allow the Wake Walk Committee to metamorphose into the Winter Weekend Committee.

Choral Union Completes Schedule

The University of Vermont Choral Union, singing a program that includes early Vermont psalmody by Jeremiah Ingalls and Justin Morgan, will complete the five-concert schedule of the current season for the UVM Lane Extension Series in St. Johnsbury.

Presented in conjunction with the Northeast Kingdom Council on the Arts, which is a chapter of the Vermont Symphony Orchestra Association, the concert on Sunday, Feb. 6, will be held in Fuller Hall, St. Johnsbury Academy, at 8:30 p.m.

Conducted by UVM Prof. James G. Chapman, the mixed chorus of some 55 voices will sing the psalm-tunes "Huntington" and "Amanda" by Morgan, and "Northfield" and "The Young Convert" by Ingalls.

The program will also include Baroque motets by Bernadini, Monteverdi, Praetorius and Bach, and other works by Brahms, Dallapiccola, Giuseppe Verdi, and Bela Bartok.

The University Choral Union, now in its fourth year, presents concerts in Burlington and other Vermont cities, and last year at the regional meeting of the Music Educators' National Conference in Atlantic City, N.J.

In addition to its concert work, the Union is also a service organization with many of the members volunteering their time to sing at hospitals and nursing homes.

Dr. Chapman formed the group when came to UVM after eight years at Middlebury College. He studied at the University of Michigan and received the Ph.D. in musicology from New York University.

The current season marks the sixth consecutive year the Lane Series has cooperated with a St. Johnsbury group in presenting a concert series, this year with the Northeast Kingdom Council on the Arts headed by Sen. Douglas Kitchel with E. Dean Finney as vice president.

The series is supported by funds from four sources: a substantial National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities grant by the Vermont Council on the Arts, a generous contribution by Lyndon State College from its Sherman Fund, a grant from the Lane Series, and gifts by local individuals and organizations.

Admissions to the University Choral Union concert are available in Nate's Men's Shop, Railroad Street, and Randall and Whitcomb, Main Street, in St. Johnsbury, and at Russell's Drug Store in Lyndonville. Mail orders may be sent to the Northeast Kingdom Council on the Arts, care of Stanley D. Shores, 52 Summer St., St. Johnsbury. Admissions will also be on sale at the door.

The fourth Lane Extension concert of the season will be pianist Garrick Ohlsson, Feb. 26 at St. Johnsbury Academy.

Library Displays Wine Bottles And Books

Students and scholars entering the University of Vermont's Bailey Library to spend an hour or so with the books are being met these days with a display of bottles of wine and books with advice such as:

"Cupid and Bacchus my Sants are,
May Drink and Love still reign
With Wine I wash away my Care,
And then to Love again."

That poem by Hohn Wilmot, second Earl of Rochester, was written in the 17th Century and sums up the spirit of an exhibit arranged by John Buechler, head of special collections at the Library.

Buechler has assembled wine glasses and decanters from the Fleming Museum's collection, bottles of French, German and American wines on loan from the Farrell Distributing Corp. of Winoski, some material from his own collection on German wines, and books from the Library's collection.

Book references to wine range from Wilmot's exuberant tribute to Omar Khayyam's more thoughtful quatrain from the "Rubaiyat":
"Lo! some we loved, the loveliest and the best,
That Time and Fate of all their Vintage prest,
Have drunk their Cup

a Round or two before,
And one, by one, crept Silenly to Rest."

Other books on display include a 1561 edition of Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" with numerous references to wine and wine-drinkers; a work by the 4th Century Roman author Lactantius asserting that Noah was the first wine-maker; and the "De Agri Cultura" of Marcus Porcius Cato, who recommended in the second century B.C. that "old wine-water" be added to grape juice before fermentation.

The collection will be on display through early February.

WRUV

WRUV is initiating a new program called "Open Airwaves". They offer free airtime to anyone for any purpose. The only limit is that it shall not be used for profit or personal defamation. Anyone interested in using the "Open Airwaves" of WRUV, phone 656-3220.

Another program planned for Wednesday nights on WRUV is "Speakout". It's a short talk show with people of interest to UVMers. Listeners are urged to telephone in questions.

Panhel Elections

The 1972 officers of the Panhellenic Council have been recently elected. Those elected are as follows: President - Linda Weddy; 1st Vice-president - Linda Weener; 2nd Vice-president - Leslie Bisber; 3rd Vice-president - Elaine Stone; Secretary - Sue Nadeau; Treasurer - Lynn Bergeron; Public Relations - Sue Lanman and Gloria Piche.

Panhel would like to remind all undergraduate women, including freshmen, that Spring Rush Registration will begin January 17 and run through until January 21. The times and places of registration will be announced at a later date. The rush parties will begin January 23.

Veterans Pension Questionnaires

Saturday, January 15 was the deadline for filling Annual Income Questionnaires and the Veterans Administration is using 275,000 pensioners to get them in the mail immediately.

These 275,000 pensioners are the last of 1.1 million veterans, widows and parents drawing pension and dependency and indemnity compensation who have not returned the forms mailed with their November 1 checks.

VA officials said 900,000 beneficiaries have returned the questionnaires which provide information the agency needs to determine pension payments for this year.

They noted that beneficiaries who fail to provide the information could, under law, forfeit this year's benefits and could also be required to refund last year's payments.

Pensions are paid to about 2.3 million veterans totally and permanently disabled, from nonservice causes, and to widows and children on veterans who die of such causes. Dependent parents of veterans who die of service connected disabilities also may be eligible for dependency and indemnity compensation.

Veterans and dependents who need help with the questionnaires are urged to contact the nearest VA office or local veterans service organization.

'Zoo Animals' At Fleming Museum

"Zoo", the exhibition of animals in art and artifact, runs the full spectrum of the Animal Kingdom as well as the history of art. The exhibition opened at the Fleming Museum on January 11th and will run through February 2nd.

Whimsical beasts of the imagination - an Egyptian bird dating from the 20th century, B.C. - happily coexist with the mystical symbols of a scarab or a page from William Blake's 1825 illustration of the Book of Job. A naturalist's careful study, Audubon's "Young - Golden Eagle" from his "Birds of America", hangs below the taxidermist's careful preservation of a real golden eagle and his nest. Seven of Audubon's great prints, including two from the less known "Viviparous Quadrupeds of North America", are on display. Loving portraits of good friends, such as one of Walt Disney's original drawings, "Ferdinand the Bull", and the playful kittens of an American Primitive abound.

A menagerie mounted entirely from the Museum's own holdings, the exhibit has something to fascinate everyone from 7 to 75. The installation is low to make it easy for children to see. There is a full calendar of related events:

Leopard-ceremonial Dance Mask from Bali, 19th century.

"John James Audubon, the Artist as Naturalist" was the topic of a lecture by Edward H. Dwight at 8 P.M. Friday, January 21st, in Votey Auditorium. Mr. Dwight, Director of the Museum of Art, Munson Williams Proctor Institute, in Utica, New York, is the leading authority on Audubon as an artist. He has published numerous articles on Audubon's work, and in 1965, with the help of the Pierpont Morgan Library, he organized the first major exhibition of Audubon's watercolors and drawings since the artist's

Nixon's Peace Plan

President Nixon appeared on nationwide television Tuesday evening to disclose a new Vietnam peace plan that has been secretly offered to the North Vietnamese. It essentially calls for the withdrawal of all U.S. forces within six months, and new presidential elections for South Vietnam, if North Vietnam releases American POW's as well as agrees to a cease-fire. According to Mr. Nixon, the plan was offered on Oct. 11.

It appears that a new wave of optimism has swept this country over the new proposal, especially from the families of POW's. Even some of the president's most vocal critics have applauded his action.

Yet, it's difficult to escape a note of skepticism with this proposal:

One condition is very clear in the Nixon plan, and that is that the North Vietnamese must accept "in principle" the other conditions. It is all too possible that North Vietnam will question the words "free elections, supervised by an independent body," and quite justifiably so.

If Mr. Nixon is truly sincere in his desire to get all U.S. forces out of Indochina, he will do so immediately. When this is done, then, and only then, will there be any chance for the release of POW's. —S.R.

Parenti Case

There are many letters on this page today concerned with the issue of political science professor, Michael J. Parenti. A few are written by professors who felt it necessary to contribute money to the defense fund for Parenti.

Garrison Nelson, a member of the political science department, was the organizer of the defense fund effort. As reported on page 1, the effort was successful with the goal of $4000 reached.

We feel that Nelson should be congratulated for his hard work.

The issue of Michael Parenti is not dead, until a decision in court has been reached. Those who are concerned with a free university may serve themselves justice by following closely the proceedings of the anticipated court struggle against the board of trustees.

Indeed, as this newspaper has noted before, a change is imperative now on the make-up of the board. We feel it necessary for a board to be comprised of individuals, who place aside any personal whims they may have for power, wanting, instead, to devote their energies for quality education at UVM. —S.R.

Spring Registration

Congratulations to the registrar's office for making the Spring 1972 registration proceedings one of the smoothest yet. We hope that future registrations will follow the example of this one. —S.R.

Former Student Blasts Board; Calls For Restructuring Power

To the Editor of the Cynic:

"We couldn't give him another contract and preserve the image of the university"—the words of Kenneth Scott, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the University of Vermont, explaining the rationale behind a 15-4 rejection of extending the teaching contract of a political science instructor. It must be asked, what is the image of the university? A majority of people will envision a neutral, objective institution collecting and disseminating data; a place where young people are educated to accept and fulfill the duties of responsible, productive citizenship. But rather than accepting popular conceptions at face value, we must ask two questions: first, is the university actually a neutral institution? and secondly, is the university a democratic institution?

The aura of neutrality that the university seeks to preserve about itself has been dissipated by radical critics who have exposed the presence of ROTC training facilities and corporate monsters on campus. A self-evident example of the university's biases, by training students in its ROTC unit, the university is directly implicated in serving the forces of American imperialism that daily wreak death and havoc upon the peoples of Indochina, Africa, and Latin America. The presence of corporate representatives like the likes of General Electric (sophisticated weapons systems), IBM (computers banks in Thailand and that coordinate B-52 raids), and Polaroid (involved in apartheid South Africa and developer of ID systems)—not to mention the CIA and AID—demonstrates amply that the "neutral" university lends its ready assent to racism, exploitation, and murder. And what of the bourgeois orientation that impregnates and imbues the whole university organization? Emphasis on "standards," on the universal character of scholarship on established curricular divisions—the university studies citizen, action, and outright social and class ennoblement.

To consider the question of democracy in the academic institution—does it exist?—we must examine the power structure of the university. The Board of Trustees prides about its "strictly advisory capacity," its actions being a "rubber stamp" for UVM administrators' decisions. In truth, the power structure of the university looks more like this:

Board of Trustees—ruling class (corporate heads, bankers, and wealth and power)

President—Andrews (figurehead)

UVM Administration Faculty

Students Staff

(Perhaps this diagram is not wholly accurate, but it seems clear that the power of each group is rapidly diminished the further down in the diagram that particular group is situated.) This "rubber stamp"

Board's power may be examined by investigating the UVM faculty evaluating system—a particularly relevant investigation and one from which general principles may be inferred.

The "criteria" of teaching effectiveness, publication, a willingness to help students, and constructive participation in UVM and community life are utilized by the faculty evaluating when an instructor is under consideration for reappointment. Student viewpoints are generally ignored. The judicial hierarchy begins with the department chairman and tenured faculty members passing a decision;

then, in succession, the dean of the college, the vice president, the policy committee, the academic council, the president, and, finally, the trustees, vote on the faculty member in question. A veto by the trustees cannot be appealed; their word is absolute, final. And who are these people sitting on the board? How have they attained such power?

The 22 member board of trustees is comprised of members of the ruling class and their lackeys; part of an interlocking directorate that controls all major corporations, schools, banks, foundations, and directly allies itself with the military: people such as Kenneth Scott, vice president of General Motors—an international giant company whose gross annual sales surpass the gross national product of many nation states. It is merely coincidence that a person of such tremendous wealth and power rules the University of Vermont along with his cohorts—big realtors, insurance executives, etc.? But was it not amusing to hear

Gov. Davis, an ex-officio member of the board, state that Parenti should be retained at least until the appeal of his case was completed? His opinion must have both astonished and angered Mr. Scott and company who probably asserted strong pressures upon Davis (perhaps insinuating that alumni contributions and grants for research and building programs might be withheld; possibly even more personal

'suggestions' who is "now in sympathy with the trustee action" (Boston Globe).

The appropriately liberal pleas by President Andrews, his attestations to the exceptional gifts of the controversial instructor, as well as student and faculty protests, all attempts at exerting power—were brutally steam-rollered, smashed by the fascist attitude of the board, so marvelously exemplified by board member Peter Giuliani whose response to an invitation to meet with faculty and students to discuss Parenti's dismissal was that "he had "better things to do than become involved with "juvenile exhibitionism" (Boston Globe). Should Giuliani not be taken to task for his adult exhibitionism of unmasked power, so vulgarly flexing his bureaucratic biceps? Clearly his reply is tantamount to admitting that the board is accountable to none but General Motors and profits; those who would attempt to monkey-wrench the machine will be dealt with promptly, harshly.

Popular, progressive instructors have been dismissed before, although perhaps the issue was never so clear about maintaining a conservative, reactionary atmosphere at

UVM. In the past the trustees had their dirty work performed by "someone" within the university faculty evaluating system, but on this occasion events did not occur quite so smoothly. The Board was forced to reveal its reactionary, fascist attitudes more openly than ever previously. Assuredly, had Parenti been selected before his selection as instructor had been finalized he would not be at UVM today. He would have been scratched from consideration—as one not projecting the "right image" of a university.

The university is not neutral. The democratic How can this be changed?

The provisional board that students have petitioned to create—while a potentially revolutionary proposal for dismantling ruling class power, and creating a decentralized, autonomous university—reflects the very elitism of the institution itself. Students and faculty members are on the board, as is President Andrews. Yet where is the administration, where are the workers of UVM, and the townspeople of Burlington who should all have an equal say as to what is to be? Moreover, the board should not be dissolved whether Parenti is rehired or not. The issue is one of power: who rules the university and in whose interests? Radical students, faculty and others must work to convince the university community as a whole of the crucial importance of the struggle that is being waged. The Vermont state legislature should be petitioned to legitimize a permanent restructuring of the board.

All power to the people. Eugene Brager, Class of 1970.

What's The Student Image Today? Not Shaggy Hair, But A Big Mouth

by Rick Mitx

It's not the shaggy hair not the bell bottoms not the love beads nor the tie-dyed shirts that give the student his image. It's his mouth.

The student mouth is a complex creature. It can shout at demonstrations, whimper through Love Story, gasp in horror at the atrocities of war. But none of these gives us away as students. It's the Meaningful Dialogue—the zig-zag big talk and the spaced-out small talk—that makes the student mouth—from tooth to lip—the unique organ it is.

Being a mouthy student, I decided to investigate the subject. I decided to get right to the throat of the problem. I asked a student what he perceived student language to be.

"The stud lingo? Man, that went out with the fifties. Rapping isn't where it's at, man. It's a big head trip. And you've got to have a good head in order to have a good mouth. Dig? Got the scene? It's a regular high."

Suffering from a regular low, I decided that perhaps the best way to investigate student language was to observe it. I wandered myself an invitation to the Student Life Seminar Workshop party and picked up a few mouthy tid-bits there.

I walked through a beaded doorway and introduced myself to a tall, skinny, beak-marked girl. "And who are you?" I asked.

"Who am I, you ask?" she asked. "I could tell you I'm Delores Shumple. That's true. True, I am Delores Shumple. Yes. Yes. You've probably already guessed: of the famous Newark Shumple family. Some people call me Dee. But who am I really? I am the sun. I am the moon. I am a strange concoction of whatever you want me to be and what I am not and what I would like to be. I am my famous father's daughter and he is my son. I am a complex of complexes. According to my analyst, I am a profound combination of Jocasta and Oedipus, searching, searching, searching, for the right womb. "Say," she said, pausing. "Who did you say you are?"

I moved on toward a kid sitting in the yoga position contemplating his navel, which he referred to as Felix.

"Where is it at, little belly button? It is at where. Where what? Where whatever, that's what. Give me meaning. Say something, because I am really into you, oh navel 'o mine. Speak to me Felix." His stomach growled and he grinned. "Right on, Felix."

A group of mini skirts were standing around talking about their home of class. Suddenly, a large boisterous girl—with pensive eyes—pushed her way into the crowd. "Hey, sisters. Let's have a little group dynamics here. A little meaningful dialogue. My name is Betty and my primary interest is people. And, of course, the on-going life process. We've got to get organized, sisters. Let's have a little intense on-going rap session here. You're all good heads. Now get it together."

"Um," said a small blonde coed. "I made a relevant blame the other day. With a peace sign on the left shoulder."

Says Parenti Decision Is An 'Outrage'

To the Editor of the Cynic:

The decision by UVM's board of trustees not to rehire Dr. Michael Parenti for the reasons given is an outrage. What are we to think when the freedom to speak and to learn and to question are struck down by such men with such impunity? The trustees have taken dead aim at free speech and free inquiry. Their actions spring from such a fundamental ignorance of fundamental democratic principles, of academic freedom, and of Constitutional

Law that one wonders how their own educational experiences could have been so lacking.

Trustees Presch, Little, Jones, and President Andrews are to be commended for their intelligence and courage in voting to retain Dr. Parenti and in demanding a recorded vote on the question. Trustees Boardman (who hoped to be Governor one day), Bolwell, et al may well assured that we know them a little better now. They teach more lawlessness and cause more destruction and disorder than the most radical of professors ever could.

Students have not been noticeably active in important public questions of law. It is to be hoped that they will now be moved to join their faculty and administration friends in designing some kind of creative educational action against the board of trustees.

Dennis J. Morriveau, Class of 1965.

Contributes To Defense

To the Editor of the Cynic:

Mr. Michael Parenti, Political Science Department, University of Vermont, Burlington, Vermont

Dear Mr. Parenti,

Enclosed is a small check for your defense fund, along with a copy of a letter to the Chairman of the Board of Trustees.

I do not share your political views as reported in the New York Times, and I do not condone the crime of which you were convicted, in four years at UVM, however, John Stuart Mill's "On Liberty" was the most convincing work I studied. It appears to me that the principles of that essay call for supporting you in your effort to remain at UVM.

Ian R. MacNeil, Professor of Law, Cornell University

The mentally retarded child is too often left behind when it comes to athletic participation. Most are not even allowed to play, do, much less be given a chance to do. Unfortunately, this often leads to physical and lethargy on the part of the retarded child.

Programs Vary From Recreational Activities To Educational Guidance

Through the Office of Volunteer Programs at UVM, students have been assigned to work in counselor positions with these runaway kids. Their work knows no schedule and neither do the needs of the teenagers who seek refuge in SHAC. These volunteers possess that special initiative to create projects and lessons for their kids. Crafts, guitar lessons, even cooking are part of the daily routine that is joyfully carried out by staff members and residents of SHAC.

One of the runaways who stayed at SHAC described it as "a place to stay, some food, a place in which I could get myself together... Where I can gather my thoughts as to why I left, finding out for myself... think, be with people, have help when needed and asked for."

Teenagers are limited to a two week stay at SHAC where medical assistance and psychiatric counseling are both available. If they wish to meet with their parents and a counselor, they may. The kids are encouraged to find respect for their own capacity to make decisions about their future with the help and guidance of staff members.

SHAC says, "We believe that the runaway is often the most responsible member of the family in that he is ACTING to break the tie of an intolerable situation."

reliable. Regardless of the amount of time spent with the program, it is most important to the kids that any commitment made be kept. The teenagers involved have already had many disappointments throughout their lives. Besides a recreation program to help occupy their time.

THE PLACE & THE NEXT THING

The Place, located at 260 College Street, and The Next Thing, located at 146 South Williams Street are both drug centers for kids who need help. The difference is that while The Place is a crisis center for drug users, THE NEXT THING offers replacements for the use of drugs.

Under the direction of Joana Silber, the PLACE offers immediate counseling to people on bad trips or some other drug crisis.

The NEXT THING concentrates on the rehabilitation through drug education of people who have been on drugs. By suggesting alternatives to drug use, THE NEXT THING carries on the job that the PLACE begins with their crisis counseling.

The NEXT THING, under the direction of Bruce Levine and Mark Gabriel has a standard thirty to forty hour training program for its volunteers.

Both places use OVP volunteers in their programs. Because of the extensive training program that is involved these volunteers are perhaps some of the most highly motivated and most dedicated. It is particularly easy for the teenagers who seek help to relate to someone they know is a college student.

Because of the flexibility of a college student's scheduling, he is able to help at odd hours when other volunteers might be unavailable. That is most important to THE PLACE, which must function whenever a crisis arises.

A BRIEF HISTORY

Volunteering at UVM began as a grass roots student movement with the formation of Big Brothers, UVM Tutoring, and Hospital Big Brothers programs several years ago. The Rev. John Perry and the facilities of St. Anselm's were available to assist in the early days. By 1969 it was apparent that more students were interested in voluntary action than could be accommodated by these programs. A committee of students, faculty, and staff was formed to plan for a broad based co-ordination project that would involve more students in a greater variety of volunteer opportunities. The Office of Volunteer Programs is the result of that plan.

OVP opened its doors for the first time in the fall of 1970 and was inundated by students interested in participating. Needs were identified and students placed in agencies, community centers, schools, hospitals, day care centers, and independent projects such as Adopt a Grandparent, Sink or Swim, and many others. Volunteers also served in OVP itself as interviewers, project assistants, and as members of the OVP Steering Committee.

OVP is conceived as a "partnership" between students and the University of Vermont administration to make full use of facilities and human resources to meet the pressing human needs that exist in the Burlington Area Community. OVP's task is to assist people who want to help others by providing information on where the needs are, transportation facilities where possible, a center for the exchange of ideas, assistance both financial and informational in developing new projects, a sounding board when problems arise, and other services such as recruitment, training, evaluation, and publicity as necessary.

Volunteers work independently or in projects organized by student volunteers themselves under advisement of community agency personnel and OVP. A student Project Leader may take responsibility for coordinating the work of the volunteers and maintaining liaison with professionals in the agencies and with OVP. The purpose of coordination is to effect maximum impact of the available student volunteer manpower with a minimum waste of time and energy while utilizing all of the available resources.

ASPIRE

ASPIRE is Burlington High School's answer to the dropout problem. Under the direction of Mrs. Evelyn Carter, ASPIRE offers an alternative program to students who would not otherwise stay in school. In the past the students involved in this program have built wooden air-frames for their history lesson. Instead of the four school walls being their classrooms, the students in ASPIRE learn wherever they can find a lesson.

Volunteers from The Office of Volunteer Programs are occasionally specially imported for a particular study. Last year when Indian artifacts were being studied, several volunteers went in to both teach and help arrange field trips.

University students are particularly useful in this type of program because of the diversity of their fields of specialization. If a student becomes interested in a specific time in history or wants to learn more about the basics of psychology, the Office of Volunteer Programs has tremendous resources to tap for the people who are needed.

Also involved in ASPIRE is a tutoring program in which students who need and request individual help may receive it from an OVP volunteer.

One volunteer enjoyed herself so much teaching Indian artifacts that she stayed on after her unit was officially over. Like most of the volunteer projects administered through OVP, this is one in which the volunteers become very committed to the students they work with because they realize that they are working together for something very worthwhile.

IRA: Suggested Merger Of Student Organizations

Inter Residence Association held its first meeting of the spring semester without a quorum of representatives on Tuesday January 24, in the main lounge of MAT lounge. The primary purpose for holding the meeting without a sufficient quorum was the announcement by Emil George, the paid aid to Gene Beaudoin, President of SA, and former IRA President, that a preliminary draft of a constitution is being written that would consolidate the Student Association, IRA, Fraternity Forum, and Panhellenic Council.

The purposes of this consolidation were stated to be better communication between the SA and the students and between the different campus organizations, stronger leadership due to less personnel inherent with a centralized system, and a possible increase of attendance at meetings. Dr. Meier, Director of Housing, pointed out the advantage that the SA Senators would be more representative of the students under the centralized system and that the students would benefit under the "willing leadership pooled in one organization." However, he stated that the technicalities of the system might prove to be difficult to work out.

Under this preliminary draft of the new constitution the officers of the proposed student association would consist of President, overseer of the general organization, Executive Vice President, chairman of the Senate, Vice President in charge of Inter Residence Affairs, Vice President in charge of Greek Affairs, Vice President in charge of Outside Affairs, Controller, professional in charge of finances, and a Communications Chairman in charge of the Cynic, WRUV, and Public Relations.

Announces Resignation

Citing a lack of faith in student organizations on campus, Steve Rice has resigned as President of IRA. In an interview after the meeting, he stated that students involved in campus leadership are deluding themselves in a "myth" that they can do something constructive. The fact is that the Administration will always have the power in all affairs on campus as stated by Rice. The meeting will now be presided over by Margaret Tetrick, Vice President of Weigars.

Announcement was made that elections will be held the first week of March. More information will be made known at the next meeting, which will be in the MAT main lounge, Tuesday February 1 at 6:30.

Students, staff, faculty, wives, anyone who wants to give expression to his or her concern through hard work and direct personal involvement with other people to help make a difference in the way things are.

People who want to put their education and skills to work!

We try to match volunteer tasks to the interests, background and skills of each individual volunteer. Usually opportunities can be found that relate directly to personal, academic, or career goals of volunteers. You get a chance to test out in real experience with people what you think and what you have learned.

WHAT DO VOLUNTEERS DO?

Volunteer service and action can take many forms.

EDUCATIONAL REINFORCEMENT

It can mean tutoring, or educational reinforcement with both children and adults, by providing experience that complement the work of professionals in both formal and informal learning situations.

SOCIAL ISSUE ACTION

It can mean being involved in public interest issues and research or information delivery on such issues as the environment, housing, consumer protections, or investigation of the activities of public and private institutions that affect people.

HEALTH

It can mean assisting in a crisis center or working in a mental health setting or with a project in a specialized agency with retarded or emotionally disturbed children, or in one of the hospitals, among others.

COMPANION

It can mean just listening to people who need to be heard, being a friend on a continuous basis to someone who is alone or to a child who needs attention or a larger vision of himself and the world.

RECREATION

It can mean teaching sports or arts and crafts or playing the piano or guitar or organizing a recreational program at one of the many community centers for children, senior citizens or adults.

It can mean any of a countless list of things that need to be done, including working in OVP itself, to help make the Burlington area community a better place to live for all its citizens.

The STR-6036. An FM stereo/FM-AM receiver for the man with a small room, a small budget, but big ears nonetheless.

It's an inexpensive receiver that doesn't sacrifice performance specifications, control flexibility, or even looks.

What it does sacrifice, of course, is just a bit of power. It puts out 50 clean watts of THF dynamic power at 4-ohms. It is not enough to rival the power company, perhaps, but is enough to drive even low-efficiency "bookshelf" speakers.

S.A. Committee Recommends Payment Of Half The $22,000 Winter Weekend Debt, Tighter Controls Over Student Organizations

There was gross mismanagement on the part of the Winter Weekend Directors. They did not prepare a true budget nor did they adhere to the one they did prepare. They ultimately exceeded that budget by over $10,000.00. There was no internal communication among the Directors, entertainment was arbitrarily chosen by the Chairman of the Committee, proper accounting procedures were not observed and some of the Directors did not do their job at all.

IPC did possess the constitutional right to step in and control Kake Walk and Winter Weekend and therefore, was immediately responsible for it. However, years of constitutional negligence on the part of the IPC and the attitude of the UVM Administration that Kake Walk was something beyond the rest of student activities and therefore, not as accountable as other student groups, allowed the Weekend Directors to function completely on their own authority. The 1971 deficit is a direct result of that same attitude. When the Directors of Kake Walk chose to discontinue Kake Walk and make the first Winter Weekend, they acted in an unconstitutional manner; never was the action sanctioned as it should have been by the IPC. Even though the Kake Walk Directors blatantly ignored the IPC's constitutional authority, they were beyond any effective punitive reaction by the IPC.

Although Fraternity Forum seems to be the heir apparent to the IPC, it in no way can be practically held responsible for the Winter Weekend debt.

The Winter Weekend Investigation Committee believes that the advisor system imposed by the University upon the Winter Weekend was not at all effective. The advisors had no idea of what was being done almost at any given time and most importantly no attempt was made by them to find out what the Directors were doing. In all fairness, it must be said that some of the Directors even attempted to keep the Advisors informed of the Weekend's activities. The financial advisor did not have any true financial control over the Weekend's activities even though his signature was required for checks to be drawn from the usual purchase order system.

The UVM Administration, while maintaining a $2,500.00

debt from the 1970 Weekend, seems to have made no attempt to watch over the financial activities of the 1971 Weekend. This sort of careful scrutiny would seem to be only good business sense, under the circumstances, since the administration was the only effective watchdog over the Weekend available at the time. This, after all, would seem to be the reason for maintaining the advisor system and the financial controls over student activities.

The UVM Student Association did not fulfill its responsibilities as the governing agency of the student body. It has a stated duty to oversee all student organizations, (see S.A. Constitution and Bylaws) and Kake Walk (Winter Weekend) was one of them. Up to now, part of the problem is that when an organization has money in a Consolidated Account, the Student Association has no way of guaranteeing to the University and to itself that these organizations will maintain fiscal responsibility.

RECOMMENDATIONS: It must be completely and irrevocably understood that the Student Association is the government of the student body. The word government is not used to imply political activity but a unified, reasoned and competent administration of student affairs. There cannot be several distinct governing bodies on so small a campus as this and have any measure of order. The Winter Weekend affair is clearly pointing to this. It is quite obvious that if the Student Association was properly governing (or were allowed to govern) the Winter Weekend by using policies already in existence, the $22,000.00 debt would never have happened or at least never have been so large.

In the meeting with former President Rowell, Vice President Dyson, and Dean Izzo, it was made clear by all three gentlemen that the Student Association (as the student government) should pay for the deficit. The question raised in Senate and Committee has been, should the SA do this and if so, what responsibility? The answer is, unfortunately, yes. But, if we are to pay, then several points must be made clear by the Student Association and agreed to by the University.

1. The University acknowledges that the Student Association is the governing agency for all student activities, which shall include all social activities, all interest groups, all service organizations, all lesser governments and all living units (on and off campus).

2. The Student Association establish a system immediately whereby no student organization, funded or not, may spend money without approval by the Student Association Vice President for Financial Affairs.

3. All organizations with student membership are to be considered student organizations. In order to have the service of the University, (i.e. use of UVM facilities, money held by the Burner, space in Billings, advertising of events on campus, etc.) these groups must be duly recognized by the Student Association Senate.

4. All funds earned or in any manner legally obtained by any of these organizations must be held by the UVM Burner and these groups are accountable to him (acting for the University) and the Student Association Vice President for Financial Affairs (acting for the Student Association). All funds must be processed through the Student Association officer and all checks issued on these funds must be co-signed by the Burner and the Student Association for Financial Affairs.

5. The University shall not carry any debt incurred by a student organization or allow one to be created without the express permission of the Student Association.

6. The University of Vermont agrees to allow the S.A. to designate advisors to its various recognized groups with the consent of the University and, if necessary, to remove these advisors for cause, with University approval.

7. If a non-SA funded organization shows financial irresponsibility, the Student Association may close its books indefinitely.

8. It is understood that money that is not derived from the SA fee is subject only to the following: 1) SA maintains due process and sees that all necessary accounting procedures are followed. 2) Policies of the SA may not be imposed upon the expenditures of consolidated monies.

9. When any student organization recognized by the SA has any changes in their constitution or threat of their activities, they shall report it to the Vice President of Student Activities, immediately. If the Vice President of Student Activities or Vice President of Financial Affairs deems it necessary, the organization shall supply the Senate with a detailed summary of changes and reasons for these changes. The Senate may ask the organization to reapply for recognition.

10. The University shall pay one half of all debts accrued by the Winter Weekend Committee and by its payment acknowledge its responsibility and the Winter Weekend Committee's advisory responsibility.

11. The SA shall pay one half of all debts accrued by the Winter Weekend Committee and by its payment will assume all responsibility for future Winter Weekends.

12. The University shall give SA all equipment owned by the Winter Weekend Committee and by its payment will assume all responsibility for future Winter Weekends.

13. The University shall pay its half of the debt out of general funds and not levy any extra fees on the Student Body for payment of the debt. The President of the University is asked to sign a statement indicating the above.

14. This report will take effect when accepted by the SA Senate. Upon acceptance, the Investigation Committee will contact the Administration for the payment of the debt and discussion of the above points.

This report was accepted by the Student Association Senate on December 14, 1971.

Address letters to Dr. Arnold Werner
Box 974, East Lansing, MI 48823

QUESTION: I have been wondering about the effects of chewing tobacco. I recently picked up the habit from a roommate, who claims there are no ill effects. What, if any, damage might this cause to the teeth, gums or whatever else. I usually brush my teeth three to four times daily. To be on the safe side I thought I'd write and ask your opinion (This letter was written by a man).

ANSWER: When tobacco is chewed, nicotine is absorbed through the mucous membranes of the cheeks and mouth in doses similar to what is derived from smoking. Thus, the physiologic effects from chewing tobacco are very similar to what occurs with other forms of tobacco use. The major effects of nicotine on the human body are increased heart rate, increased blood pressure, central nervous system excitement and increased activity of the gastrointestinal tract. It appears that the first three of the previously mentioned effects of nicotine account for the fact that people become dependent upon it.

Most people who chew tobacco actually chew snuff which is powdered and tends to be less bulky than the old fashioned chewing tobacco. Snuff can be snorted as well. The presence of tobacco in the mouth increases salivation tremendously and the novice chewer can find himself in a very uncomfortable situation, especially if he is indoors. A large amount of saliva often expands what seems like a small amount of tobacco into a massive wad which becomes increasingly difficult to control. Snuff or chewing tobacco is quite popular among people who work with heavy machinery and must keep their hands free, as well with people who work with highly flammable substances.

Continued exposure of mucous membranes to an irritating substance such as tobacco causes some problems.

The usual manner of oral use of snuff is to carry it between the gum and teeth and the cheek; changes indicative of a pre-cancerous state are found frequently among tobacco chewers. Most of the men and women I have met who use snuff or chewing tobacco are most striking because of their darkly stained mouths and their characteristic aroma when you get close.

QUESTION: I have very large breasts and nipples. The breasts are obviously a focal point of my body as I am otherwise quite normal in shape and proportion. My measurements are 44-21-36 and I am 5-ft. 5-in. tall. I wear a bra all the time and do not wear revealing clothes, but I am beginning to feel as if I am a freak and wish that men would look at me instead of my bust. Fortunately, my breasts are high and firm; it would be awful if they hung down to my belly button.

Because I am so big I am concerned about breast cancer. Do large breasts have more of a cancer rate than tiny breasts?

ANSWER: Enlarged alone should not change the probability of you developing cancer. However, very large breasts are more difficult to examine and it is conceivable that an early cancer would be harder to detect. Breasts are primarily fatty tissue and are not well supported on the chest. Therefore as all women age, they experience some sagging of their breast. You could expect to have a fair amount of difficulty with this. As well, fatty tissue bruises easily and this can be quite painful, causing you further problems.

In reading your letter my concern is more with the effects of being stared at, and your description of being dealt with as if you are deformed. Nature can be quite unkind in the way she distributes body tissues. Fortunately, some of the things that do not look right can be corrected. Plastic surgeons perform an operation that will reduce breast size resulting in a more normally proportioned body. Such an operation will not interfere with breast function and can be of major long term benefit in terms of reducing postural abnormalities, eliminating problems in buying clothes, and producing a general increased sense of well being. Many women are not aware that such operations exist, since most talk centers around other cosmetic plastic surgery procedures, including increasing breast size. You are at the perfect age to have such surgery performed and ought to consider visiting a qualified plastic surgeon for an opinion.

Claudio Arrau appearing in next Lane

The Lane Series spring concerts begin with a recital by one of the world's most renowned artists—pianist Claudio Arrau. The concert will be held on Thurs., February 3, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. Single concert admission tickets, $3.75, $4.50, $5.25 and $6 are on sale in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For information and reservations, tel. 656-3418.

Arrau's program consists of Beethoven's Sonata quasi una Fantasia in E-flat major, Op. 27, No. 1; Liszt's Sonata in B minor; and Schumann's Carnaval, Op. 9.

Writing of Arrau's Nov. 30, 1971, performance in Philharmonie Hall—where the Buglinton program was played—the critic of the N.Y. Times said that "very few pianists ever reach the peak of artists from which Claudio Arrau functions. One has come to take Mr. Arrau's startling virtuosity and bronzed tone for granted over the years, but now the penetrating profundity and serene maturity of his interpretations are positive humbling." The Community

At the start of the University of Vermont's second semester in mid-January, some 30 students will leave their classrooms to spend a year working in the community.

The UVM Office of Volunteer Programs will supervise the "University Year for ACTION," which will be financed by a grant of approximately $150,000 from ACTION, a federal coordinating agency for citizen volunteer efforts. OVP Director Harold D. Woods said the program, which will be announced, will work in a year in the community.

The Lane Film Society will run two series of full-length movies this spring. Hitchcock Classics on Saturday nights and Black Man in Film on Monday nights. The Hitchcock Classics Series will include six feature films, all directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Each film will be preceded by a Road Runner cartoon. The series opens on Saturday, Feb. 5, at 8:00 p.m. in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium, with "North by Northwest." This will be followed by "Psycho," Feb. 12; "39 Steps," March 4; "Dial M for Murder," March 11; "Rebecca," March 18; and

Renowned Pianist :

Claudio Arrau To Appear Feb. 3

Claudio Arrau appearing in next Lane Series offering.

The Lane Series spring concert begins with a recital by one of the world's most renowned artists—pianist Claudio Arrau.

The concert will be held on Thursday, February 3, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. Single concert admission tickets, $9.75, $4.50, $3.25 and $2 are on sale in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For information and reservations, call 656-3418.

Arrau's program consists of Beethoven's Sonata quasi una Fantasia in E-flat major, Op. 27, No. 1; Liszt's Sonata in B minor; and Schumann's Carnaval, Op. 9.

Writing of Arrau's Nov. 30, 1971, performance in Philharmonic Hall—where the Burlington program was played—the critic of the N.Y. Times said that "very few pianists ever reach the peak of artists from which Claudio Arrau functions. One has come to take Mr. Arrau's startling virtuosity and bronzed tone for granted over the years, but now the penetrating profundity and serene maturity of his interpretations are positive humbling."

Claudio Arrau is celebrated on every continent of the globe as one of today's handful of greatest living pianists. As

William Mann, chief music critic of "The Times," London, has written, "Concert goes everywhere regard Arrau as one of the great pianists in this world of ours at the moment. Many musicians maintain firmly that he is the greatest of all because he has everything that we look for in a pianist, whether of technique, of power, of heart or of mind."

Although Arrau has been a resident of New York since his acclaimed first Carnegie Hall recital in 1941, he remains a citizen of his native Chile, where he is an adored national hero and where he has streets named for him both in Santiago and in Chillan, his birthplace.

Almost every season Arrau performs on three continents and sometimes even four, as he did in 1968, when his world tour included the Soviet Union along with Australia and Japan as well as Europe, the U.S. and South America. In London he often plays as many as five sold-out Festival Halls in a season. In Germany, where he had spent his childhood days and won his earliest successes, he was given the reception of his career when he returned in March, 1954, to play with the Berlin Philharmonic.

In 1964, for the first gala season in its new Philharmonic, the famed orchestra honored him with a special Arrau-Beethoven Festival, in which he was heard in all the five piano concertos and well as the Choral Fantasy. Four years later the Berlin Philharmonic honored Arrau with another set of four gala concertos, playing four romantic concertos and, in a written tribute, hailed him as "The Heir to Busoni and Gieseking."

In May, 1968, returning to play in the Soviet Union, where he had first been acclaimed as a young pianist in two tours in 1919 and 1930 after winning the International Geneva Prize, Arrau's two concerts in Leningrad and two in Moscow sold out in a few hours.

At the Beethoven International Festival in Bonn, which opened the official Beethoven Bicentennial Celebrations in 1970, Arrau was heard in the "Emperor" Concerto as well as in a solo recital which included that other plum, the "Appassionata." At the conclusion of the festival Arrau was awarded one of West Germany's highest orders, the Bundes-Verdienstkreuz, for his lifelong dedication to the music of Beethoven.

Arrau has recorded the complete 32 Beethoven Piano Sonatas for Philips Records as well as the 5 Piano Concertos twice; with the Amsterdam Concertgebouw under the direction of Bernard Haitink and with the NPO under Guiliem. His recent (second time around) recordings of the two Brahms Concertos with Haitink and the Concertgebouw Orchestra received the Deutsche Schallplatten Preis of 1970. In between tours, Arrau is at work preparing a new edition of the Beethoven 32 for Peters in Frankfurt. It will be the fourth edition of the Sonatas by a famous pianist. The other three are Liszt, Bulow, Schnabel.

Medical College Grant

The University of Vermont has received a grant of $150,000 from the Irene Heinz Green and John LaPorte Green Foundation, Inc. of New York.

The funds will be used by the Department of Rehabilitation Medicine, College of Medicine, to finance a five-year program to improve rehabilitation services for the persons with chronic physical disabilities in Vermont.

This is the third major grant the University has received from this foundation.

Dr. Raymond L. Milhous, chairman of the Department of Rehabilitation Medicine, said the aim of the new program will be to offer "consultation and continuing education for all health personnel in Vermont who provide rehabilitation services to the physically disabled."

"The first step," Dr. Milhous explained, "will be to hire a physical therapist-coordinator. Other personnel will include a physician working part-time in a consultative capacity, and a secretary."

"The director will first visit community hospitals, nursing homes and home health agencies in order to design an educational program around the needs of the community health resources."

"After this I envision short courses both here and in areas throughout the state, for physicians, nurses, physical therapists and nurses aides. We will plan assistance through conferences and individual patient reviews. In addition, I expect we will develop an audio-visual program so the tapes, slide productions and movies dealing with specific problems can be circulated to those interested."

While the staff for this program will be small, Dr. Milhous emphasized it will be backed by the expertise and services of the Division of Health Sciences, which includes the College of Medicine and the School of Allied Health Sciences with its fast expanding four-year program in physical therapy. This latter program will graduate its first class, 16 students, in 1973.

Dr. Milhous explained that the state has long felt a need for more and better trained personnel to work with the handicapped. A survey in 1968 revealed 14,000 such persons.

With physical therapists in acute shortage, the care of patients with chronic physical disabilities falls on physicians and nurses in a number of hospitals and most nursing homes.

"During the past several years we have strengthened our teaching programs involving medical students, interns, residents and allied health professionals," Dr. Milhous said of his department.

"Special emphasis has been placed on the development of the physical therapy curriculum. This new program will complement these earlier efforts in that it will reach out to those already working in rehabilitation in order to help them provide better care for the handicapped in the state."

The foundation's first assistance to the University was a $2 million grant (the largest single building grant ever received by the University) toward construction of Given Memorial Building, new home of the College of Medicine. Included the second grant was (continued on page six)

Diamonds Are Forever

James Bond
Tiffany Case
Blofield
Pussy O'Toole

Produced by Albert Bruckhly and Harry Saltzman, directed by Guy Hamilton, screenplay by Richard Maibaum and Tom Mankiewicz, based on Ian Fleming story; music, John Barry. Running time 119 minutes. Rated GP.

Bond is back and he's better than ever. It's been six years since the last Connery-Bond film but it was worth the wait. On Her Majesty's Secret Service came out in 1970 with someone other than Sean Connery as James Bond. That film was a total bomb and it is best to let it rest in peace. It proved one thing, however; that Sean Connery is James Bond. No one else should ever play that part. The Bond films started the rash of spy pictures which died out several years ago. This film is successful mainly due to the presence of Connery, proving Bond films can still be dynamic at the box office, eleven years after the first one appeared.

Diamonds Are Forever is going to be one of the biggest moneymaking films of this or any other year. It set a record by earning $15,600,000 in film rentals in 1,000 theaters around the world in twelve days. The worldwide gross in thirty-one days was $36,647,251, over $23,000,000 of that in the U.S. In an age when seven out of every ten films fail at the box office, this film is making United Artists very happy.

Diamonds Are Forever is absolutely marvelous, enjoyable film. So many low-budget films are in the theaters these days, it's nice to see a film in which no expense was spared. Money alone does not make a good film, and this is true here. Sean Connery is just great, Jill St. John is good, the music is excellent and the action never stops. Two of the best chase scenes in recent years are in the film, one a mad car chase, and the other an hilarious episode involving a moon buggy. The plot has holes in it large enough to drive a satellite through and I prefer the actor who played Blofield in You Only Live Twice over Charles Gray, but these are minor complaints.

The best aspect of these James Bond films is the dialogue. Characterized by terrible puns and cute remarks, it makes these movies. In one scene Bond is gassed and placed in a large section of pipe. The pipe is buried and he is trapped with a rat. When men open a hatch to service the pipe, he emerges in full evening dress with a flower in his lapel and quips, "I was out walking my rat and got lost." Connery's delivery is superb.

This is one film you don't want to miss. Connery says he will not be in any more Bond films, and his salary from this one is being donated to a charity. Diamonds Are Forever may not be great art cinema but it's a tremendously entertaining film and, after all, the primary function of movies is to provide entertainment. Go see it.

Variety statistics: For week ending Jan. 12; Ranked first in the 50 top-grossing films. Gross for week, $1,717,800; ranked first last week. Total gross $7,490,833.

Lane Chamber Arts Series

Features Young Artists

The twelfth annual Lane Chamber Arts Series will feature four young proven artists who are entering stardom. They include a guitarist, a pianist, a violinist and a mezzo-soprano.

Opening the series on Feb. 10 is pianist Nerrine Barrett from Jamaica, British West Indies. Miss Barrett has received high critical acclaim for her appearances with the New York Philharmonic, the Chicago Symphony and the Boston Symphony. In addition, she has given numerous solo recitals in this country and in Europe.

Nerrine Barrett

Guitarist Carlos Barbosa-Lima will appear in the second concert on Feb. 23. A native of Sao Paulo, Brazil, Mr. Barbosa-Lima has performed extensively in his native country, North America (two tours) and London. He is the favorite pupil of Andres Segovia, who once said that he is "gifted by the goddess of music." He has made many recordings, including an all-Scaratti album.

Carlos Barbosa-Lima

Celloist James Krieger, 24 years old, has been compared to such masters of the cello as Mstislav Rostropovich and Jacqueline du Pre (N.Y. Times critic). He has studied with Leonard Rose and played at Vermont's Marlboro Festival, as well as touring with the Music from Marlboro ensembles. He will perform

James Krieger

On the final concert, April 19, will be heard mezzo-soprano Frederica von Stade of the Metropolitan Opera Co., where she made her debut in 1967. Currently she is starring in the Mel production of "Hansel and Gretel." Her San Francisco debut in 1971, in Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito," was the highlight of the season.

Frederica von Stade

Reserved season tickets for the Lane Chamber Arts Series are $7.50; single concert general admissions are $2.50. They are on sale in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and also at the Door. For reservations and information, call 656-3418.

All concerts are held in Ira Allen Chapel and begin at 8:30 p.m.

The Community As A Classroom

At the start of the University of Vermont's second semester in mid-January, some 30 students will leave their classrooms to spend a year working in the community.

The UVM Office of Volunteer Programs will supervise the "University Year for ACTION," which will be financed by a grant of approximately $150,000 from ACTION, a federal coordinating agency for citizen volunteer efforts.

UVP Director Harold D.

Woods said that 60 students have applied so far for the program, which includes a small monthly stipend, and applications are still being accepted.

"This month," he said, "this office will nominate 25 or 30 of the applicants to ACTION and the acceptances will be announced early in January." The ACTION volunteers will work for a full calendar year in programs that have been worked out by this office in consultation with community agencies and poverty groups. The volunteers will coordinate their community jobs with their academic programs.

He explained that each volunteer will relate his academic training to problems encountered in the community agency for which he will work; for example, an economics student working with young people at a drug rehabilitation agency might help them set up a "mini-business" aimed at helping the kids involved to get back on their feet.

During the ACTION year, each volunteer will continue academic course work or independent study equal to fifteen hours of credit under the supervision of faculty advisors.

All volunteers will meet on a regular basis with their faculty advisors, and with an ACTION field supervisor. Volunteers who successfully complete a full year with the program will receive 30 hours of academic credit.

UVM is one of 20 colleges and universities nationally to be accepted for a part in the University Year for ACTION program. It was selected for almost 170 institutions that applied for planning grants.

Lane Film Society:

Hitchcock Classics

The Lane Film Society will run two series of full-length movies this spring. Hitchcock Classics on Saturday nights and Black Man in Film on Monday nights.

The Hitchcock Classics Series will include six feature films, all directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Each film will be preceded by a Road Runner cartoon.

The series opens on Saturday, Feb. 5, at 8:00 p.m., in Marsh Life Sciences Building Auditorium, with "North by Northwest." This will be followed by "Psycho," Feb. 12; "39 Steps," March 4; "Dial M for Murder," March 11; "Rebecca," March 18; and

"Torn Curtain," April 15. The Black Man in film Series includes six major films featuring black directors, actors and themes. The series opens on Monday, Feb. 7, at 9:00 p.m., with "Sapphire." Other films are "Frost Like a Butterfly," Feb. 14; "Cotton Comes to Harlem," Feb. 28; "No Way Out" and "Mingus," March 6; "Putney Swope," March 20; and "Raisin in the Sun," April 10.

Season tickets for each series are $5.00; single film admissions are $1.00. These are on sale in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. Telephone 656-3418 for information and reservations.

He also was able to bring a conflict-of-interest charge against Harold Allen, Jr. at the SA's December meeting. Hirst accused the trustee of working with the same firm that sells medical insurance policies to university students.

Hirst was seen attending a meeting at Billings Center, Monday evening, with other UVM students and professor Michael Parenti.

UVM Ski Team Best Ever

With its strongest Alpine squad ever, and a marked improvement in its Nordic program, the University of Vermont ski team eyes its best year in the history of the program.

Head coach Chip LaCasse, assisted by Alpine coach Mickey Cochran, father of the skiing Cochrans (Bobby, Barbara, Marilyn, and Linda), is eager as the skiing season descends upon Vermont.

"With the critical Carnival meets three weeks away our skiers have been busy competing in several December and January invitational in the Northeast," said LaCasse. With the dry-land training behind, LaCasse added, "Everyone is in top physical condition." LaCasse assisted Dennis Lambert for two seasons, before Lambert gave up the reins to devote full time to the duties of assistant Athletic Director under J. Edward Donnelly. LaCasse was named the head coach last April.

LaCasse noted that the Catamount Alpinists should be one of the strongest contingents in the East. Vermont will return sophomore David Donahue (Richford, Vt.), a top "A" skier, who was named to the United States Eastern training squad (U.S.E.A.S.A.). Donahue, selected as Vermont's M.V.P. in Alpine last year as a freshman, progressed rapidly last season and earned a first-place finish in the Giant Slalom at the William Carnival in February.

Joining Donahue will be alpine captain David Ojala (Proctor, Vt.), another Class A racer, who has been a consistent performer for the Cats the last three years. Ojala and Donahue will be aided by five of the top freshman prospects in the East: Wayne Wright (Wilmington, N.Y.), the best junior racer in the East last year and No. 4 finisher in the Junior Nationals at Mammoth Mt. in California last March; David Dodge (St. Johnsbury, Vt.), another Junior National competitor last year; David Hubbard (Shelburne, Vt.), a competitor in Europe last winter where he improved his FIS point standing; Greg Forcher (Winhall, Vt.), a Class A skier from Holderness School and Dick Erdman (East Dorset, Vt.), another Class A skier. Other freshman candidates include Kyle Brown (St. Johnsbury, Vt.) and Jim Gregory (Woodbridge, Vt.).

Joining these promising first-year performers will be returning veterans Chris Brown (Waterbury, Vt.), Peter Hicks (Bloomfield, Conn.), John Smith (Ludlow, Vt.) and Tom DeVine (West Hartford, Conn.).

Wright and Dodge, along with Donahue, were also named to the USEASA training squad. With Wright, Dodge, Donahue and Ojala, we have a fine nucleus to work with.

Wayne Wright won the first race of the season at Waterville Valley. Chris Brown has come a long way from his injury last year. He placed second in the Slalom and Giant Slalom at Pat's Peak last year. Knut adds great strength to the Collegiate Cup Race. Dave Dodge placed eighth in the most recent pre Cam-Am race at Black Mt. Dave Hubbard, in last weekend's competitions won the Onondaga Silversmith Alpine Race and Chris Brown placed a third. Dave Ojala placed eighth in that race while Dave Donahue was tenth.

Put together the potent alpinists with a much improved nordic squad and the Catamount ski team should be more than respectable against such traditional powers as Middlebury, New Hampshire, Dartmouth and St. Lawrence. "Although our alpine program probably is our strongest suit this year, we feel our jumping program could show the biggest improvement," said LaCasse. Led by fifth-place finisher in the NCAA's last March, Martin Grimnes (Oslo, Norway), the jumping program has more promise than last year, simply because it has more depth.

Joining Grimnes, the nordic captain, will be three other Norwegians, Petter Kongali, Knut Guldbrandsen and Herman Christiansen. Kongali is one of the top junior jumpers in Norway. He placed 12th at the Holmenkollen in Oslo, Norway, one of the top jumping events in the world. Guldbrandsen, a freshman from Oslo, was one of Norway's best nordic junior combined skiers last year. Knut adds great strength to the cross-country team. Christiansen is a special cross-country racer who should prove to be a valuable asset for the nordic team.

St. Lawrence Ties UVM In Closing Seconds

By Dave Clark

Anyone who went to the game against St. Lawrence on Tuesday saw a tremendous hockey game. The action was fast, the checking was hard and the tempers were hot.

Vermont played aggressive hockey in the first period and had two goals to show for it. Vermont's aggressiveness cost them two goals as they got caught up ice and St. Lawrence got their first two goals of the contest.

St. Lawrence showed good skating ability and crisp passing while Vermont was plagued by bad passing early in the period.

The Cats played much better hockey in the second period. The passing was better and Vermont was setting up for the good shot but they didn't seem to be able to get the clear shot at the goal.

The first line on both defense and offense was responsible for four of the five Vermont scores in the game. Patty Wright and Fred Hunt, the top two scorers on the club, got Vermont's goals in the first period. The solo tally in the second period came ten seconds after the period had begun when Ted Yeates took a pass from Ted Castle and put a 15 foot slap past the stick side of the goalie.

Ted Yeates played a great game on defense for Vermont. He broke many St. Lawrence set-ups in the Vermont zone by stealing a pass. Ted also blocked many shots, scored a goal and also not an assist.

The action in the third period to put it mildly was wild. Vermont scored at 9:17 of the stanza as Ted Child put a slap shot from the right point past the Larries goalie. At 10:10 of the period the action got even hotter as the St. Lawrence goalie was put out of the game on a major penalty. Howes was put in the penalty box for five minutes for high sticking and malicious use of the stick as Sam Simmons went off the ice bleeding from his cheek.

The Cats had a man advantage for a full five minutes, but they failed to score. The strange thing about the goal that Vermont got was that it came 14 seconds after St. Lawrence was at full strength again. This goal which was scored by Ted Castle, who is the leading goal scorer on the team with 11, with assists going to Ted Yeates and Patty Wright puts the Cats ahead with 4:36 left in the game.

Vermont appeared to have the game won until the 2:06 mark in the period when the roof started to fall in on the Cats. Sam Simmons went off at this point for checking in the offensive zone so the Cats were a man short. Then at 1:31 of the period Ted Yeates went off for holding on a questionable call. Vermont was now down 5 men to three. Wright, Cooke and Murphy did a super job holding the Larries for the next minute and 10 seconds. With only 21 seconds left in the period St. Lawrence pulled their goalie giving them six men to our three. St. Lawrence scored four seconds as face-off shot trickled into the goal tying the game at 5 all.

The overtime period while exciting, failed to render a score for either team. Vermont played better than St. Lawrence in the overtime being the more aggressive team and getting more shots on goal. The final score of the game was 5-5 which leaves a person feeling rather blah because neither the ecstasy of the win or the despair of the loss is present.

Struggling Catamounts Crumble Under Knights

The Basketball Catamounts will look back with the Rams of Rhode Island in the first meeting of the season between the two clubs. The game will start at 8 P.M. this evening in the Gutterson Field House.

Looking over last Monday's game with the Purple Knights of St. Michael's, it is indeed unfortunate that Vermont should have had their best first half showing of the season only to end with probably their most dismal performance after the midway point.

In this traditional contest between the two in-state rivals, the 100th battle proved to be one of the most exciting and nerve racking of any game during the 50 year history of the rivalry, but it is unlikely that the UVM team ever retired at the final buzzer more discouraged.

After opening up a 28 point lead in the first half, and going into the locker room at the half with an 18 point margin, the Catamounts were unable to cope with the direct onslaught of an inspired St. Mike's club. The Knights caught up and surpassed the struggling Catamounts with minutes left, and kept up with the attack to bring home an 84-73 well-earned victory.

The question remains as to how the Cats managed to blow their sizeable lead, when they looked so good in the first half. The defensive play of the Knights proved to be the key factor. This defense, which was lax in the first half, tightened up to an almost unbelievable degree as Vermont was just unable to move the ball or get in position for an inside shot.

The Cats, losing this bid for an unblemished state series victory, now post a record of 2-2, losing their last nine starts. It seems as though a minor miracle is needed to pull this season out.

Vermont had best learn to move the ball against a man-to-man press for it is obvious that this proved to be their undoing in the second half, as it has plagued them in the past. Also the fact that the Cats have had trouble with turnover all season, averaging close to 25 a game, and the inability to do this proved to be their undoing in the second half, as it has plagued them in the past. Also the fact that the Cats have had trouble with turnover all season, averaging close to 25 a game, and the inability to do this proved to be their undoing in the second half, as it has plagued them in the past. Sports Fan's Holiday

The busiest day on the University of Vermont athletic calendar is coming up this Saturday (Jan. 29) when every Catamount winter athletic team is in action, and five of the six are at home.

This unique home athletic package, beginning at 8 a.m. with the Vermont Indoor Track and Field Championships, and ending with a variety basketball game with Connecticut at 5 p.m., is open to the public and most of the events are admission free.

The Catamount indoor track team and the Green Mountain Athletic Association will co-host the annual Vermont Indoor Championships beginning at 8 a.m. with a high school meet.

The men's and women's collegiate-level events will begin at noon, with several Eastern colleges expected to be on hand, along with a few amateur clubs. The afternoon events will highlight team and individual competition. There is no admission charge.

While the afternoon track events are just beginning, the powerful Catamount swim team, coached by Lee Leggett, will host its first Yankee Conference opponent this year, Massachusetts, at the Forbush Natatorium, beginning at 1:30 p.m. There is no admission charge.

The AquaCats (going into the Keene State meet, Jan. 26) are undefeated (2-0) and also won the Plattsburgh Relays back in early December. Most recently, Vermont routed Colby College, 84-29.

An anticipated sell-out is expected for the first annual variety-alumni hockey game at the Gutterson Field House, beginning at 2 p.m. Such alumni standouts as former All-Americans, George Kreiner (1967-70) and Dave Rees (1968-71), George Minarky (1968-71), Jim Vesce (1967-70), Lee Roy (1964-68), Jack Semlar (1963-69) and Tim Bickford (1968-71) will return to the Gutterson Field House rink for a clash with the current Catamount bladesmen.

The variety hockey will return just in time from a crucial game with Division II leader Massachusetts at Amherst the night before.

Donations ($1.00 for adults and $.50 for students) will be accepted at the gates.

The much talked-about freshman basketball team (4-1) will open up the basketball doubleheader with a pre-lim against a strong Plattsburgh State team at 6:30 p.m., to be followed by the variety tilt with Connecticut at 8 p.m.

The Huskies are one of the strongest teams annually in the Yankee Conference. Art Locke's team have shown improvement in the last two games, which included an overtime loss to favored Northeastern, 56-54.

Statistics only go further to show how the Vermont club fell apart in the second half, while hitting on 37 percent of their shots on the first half, they only hit on 37-percent in the second, at the same time suffering from 16 turnovers in the second half giving a total of 25 for the contest.

The line-up for the Cats is showing some new talent from the line-up seen mostly before the long winter sleep. They are big changes indeed with 6'7" George Ferdy holding down the center slot and 6'3" forward, Thomas Minor also seeing a lot of action. Both are contributing well in the scoring and rebounding columns.

As for the Cats during the vacation, the posted record has truly been disappointing. During the Holiday Tournament at Sacred Heart in Bridgeport, Conn., the Cats dropped two close battles in a row, one to Upstate by only one point and the other to Muhlenberg by a slim four point margin. Here, as in last Monday's contest, turnovers hurt the team drastically.

Also during this time, the Cats have gone winless in Yankee Conference competition, losing soundly to Maine and Connecticut and being slaughtered by Massachusetts by almost 50 points.

The Cats will stay home for the next couple of games. On the 29th of January the Connecticut Huskies will journey North for another battle, and then the Catamounts get a break until the fifth of February when they meet Siena on the home court.

Cynic Interview

Dean Powers Comments On Health Fee, Sports Events

by Jen Covey

The following are excerpts from an interview with Richard Powers, Dean of students.

Q What are the changes being discussed in the health services that would necessitate a health fee?

A That's a hard question to answer briefly. A study conducted last spring contained over a hundred recommendations. The essence of it is that we don't have the staff and facilities to do the job as measured by normal national standards. The American College Health Association evaluation team came in at our plant Wason Infirmary, as you may know, in request last spring and spent several days here, not an ideal physical plant. We could not fully implement the recommendations in that facility. So, it's pretty obvious that we won't be talking preliminary data compiled by the health service, about a seventy-five dollar basic operating cost such as the patient load, types of illnesses, the charge at this point. Precisely what we can do record system, and a whole host of similar information, plus a great deal of information where the fee could be in relation to the range about the University itself. They sent us a report between the $75 and the $44, has not been in late August, as I recall. Basically, what we've done since then is to try to systematically divide

There is the second question of the physical facility and what to do about that. We are the recommendations into categories. The first group was those which could be implemented without changes in either policy or funding. Most of those changes have been implemented at this point. The other two categories are those in the policy realm where some have been handled, and those which are related to funding. A lot is related to funding. Basically what we are trying to do, of course, is get the health service up to the quality that the people ought to have. In general terms what the visitation team said to us was that we had started a health fee a couple of years ago and we had improved the situation. For nineteen years, the health service consisted of one quarter-time physician. Following a committee evaluation, a committee chaired by Dr. Stanley Burns of the College of Medicine, the fee was instituted. We moved the quarter-time director to full-time, then added two full-time physicians, and increased the nursing staff. I think what happened was that we improved things, but we created an expectation that we had improved things a lot more than we really had. With the institution of the fee, I think that people thought that they would get full service and we didn't generate enough revenue to do that. So you get a kind of frustrating situation in which an objective analysis says that we are understaffed and underfunded; yet there's a kind of attitude among students that we are paying a health fee and we ought to have the complete service. Not only should it be complete in the comprehensive sense, but it ought to be an immediate service. We shouldn't have to wait in line and so on. So one of our interests is to get the issue aired enough so, at a minimum there's a reasonable understanding of what's possible, so people don't have an expectation that can't be realized with a forty-four dollar fee.

Q What would you expect the raise in the fee to be and when will it go into effect?

A Well, at the moment we have a preliminary analysis of the cost. You have to understand that there are really three parts to this and they're interrelated. One is the basic cost of operating the health service: the money for salaries, paper and pencils, and the drugs that are dispersed there. The routine costs of operating any office plus the kind of medical costs suggested by the ACHA study it would result in lifting the current forty-four dollar fee to approximately seventy five dollars. Operational costs are related to the question on the physical plant. Wason Infirmary, as you may know, is not an ideal physical plant. We could not fully implement the recommendations in that facility. So, it's pretty obvious that we won't be talking preliminary data compiled by the health service, about a seventy-five dollar basic operating cost such as the patient load, types of illnesses, the charge at this point. Precisely what we can do record system, and a whole host of similar information, plus a great deal of information where the fee could be in relation to the range about the University itself. They sent us a report between the $75 and the $44, has not been in late August, as I recall. Basically, what we've done since then is to try to systematically divide

There is the question of whether insurance should be voluntary or Right of Waiver. We have voluntary now, which means that if someone chooses to pick up the coverage, they may. Right of Waiver would mean that everyone would be asked to pay that insurance unless he had preliminary analysis of the cost. You have to understand that there are really three parts to this and they're interrelated. One is the basic cost of operating the health service: the money for salaries, paper and pencils, and the drugs that are dispersed there. The routine costs of operating any office plus the kind of medical costs suggested by the ACHA study it would result in lifting the current forty-four dollar fee to approximately seventy five dollars. Operational costs are related to the question on the physical plant. Wason Infirmary, as you may know, is not an ideal physical plant. We could not fully implement the recommendations in that facility. So, it's pretty obvious that we won't be talking preliminary data compiled by the health service, about a seventy-five dollar basic operating cost such as the patient load, types of illnesses, the charge at this point. Precisely what we can do record system, and a whole host of similar information, plus a great deal of information where the fee could be in relation to the range about the University itself. They sent us a report between the $75 and the $44, has not been in late August, as I recall. Basically, what we've done since then is to try to systematically divide

Q What would you expect the raise in the fee to be and when will it go into effect?

A Well, at the moment we have a preliminary analysis of the cost. You have to understand that there are really three parts to this and they're interrelated. One is the basic cost of operating the health service: the money for salaries, paper and pencils, and the drugs that are dispersed there. The routine costs of operating any office plus the kind of medical costs suggested by the ACHA study it would result in lifting the current forty-four dollar fee to approximately seventy five dollars. Bill H-366

"Greater Flexibility" Proposed For Students' Financial Grants

by Marc Savits

Bill H-366, concerning incentive grants awarded by the Vermont Student Assistance Corporation, to students is currently pending in the state legislature. Mr. Max Baerrows, a Republican Representative of Montpelier, introduced the bill which is in the form of an amendment to existing legislation. The purpose of the bill is twofold, as explained by Mr.

Ronald Iverson, representing the VSAC. It would allow "greater flexibility" in providing grants by eliminating certain present maximum limits. And it would give students greater freedom of choice of the school they would wish to attend, either public or private.

As it now stands, an individual grant can not exceed $1,000. Also, a student from a family with a taxable income over $10,000 is not eligible for a grant. With freedom of statutes governing awards, the VSAC could give grants which would meet rising education costs, Mr. Iverson stated. Also, without an arbitrary income rate cut-off, the VSAC could award grants to needy students in unusual circumstances. For example, a student from a advantages to the latter, in particular, it tends to develop an insurance plan that is more consistent with the nature of the university campus. You have a specific kind of population at the University. You can develop a policy that meets the particular medical probabilities of the student population. It probably would provide better coverage for the student. In fact the approach should reduce payments for people who are paying for services that they are not likely to use. Again, it's a case where you have to investigate carefully, and the cost has to be related to the other two issues.

I think that the real issue, when you look at the whole matter of the health service, is the responsibility of a certain community—the about an increase that would throw this way out university community—for collectively of line, we are talking about trying to maintain a certain level of medical care. At the point of admission to the University, it rarely additional demand on the general fund.

Q How do you view the bill before the legislature that would allow alcoholic beverages to be sold on campus?

A Frankly, I haven't read the bill so it is a question of our view of the average cost. It's a question of our view of the equal distribution of costs, so that those in lower difficult for me to respond to that. In general, I social-economic circumstances or with severe think that the University has made its position medical expenses will have medical care available relatively clear, it would like to have a liquor to them even if it may exceed what they can license. Students can handle alcoholic beverages personally pay or which may exceed the basic in general; we haven't seen any great problem health service fee. So really the issue as far as I this fall with the change in the drinking age. We see it, comes down to this question of one's would like to be able to deal with the use of concept of how to handle the need for medical alcoholic beverages in a responsible and mature care as a group, and how much each of us is, and that suggests to me that you obtain a willing to contribute to the establishment of a license, you try to create a situation in which certain base of care that is available to everybody alcohol is used in adjunct to other kinds of functions, like before a special dinner or regardless of their need.

Q Why is a raise in the admission prices to whatever, in a way that is consistent with the social norms of a good deal of society. When we sports events being considered?

A Basically, you start with the fact that the University is in a very difficult financial position, in which alcohol is not peripheral but an essential That is hardly a secret. In the best of all worlds part of the social issue. We gather to drink you wouldn't have admission charges and the instead of drinking as something that goes along tuition would be low, and so forth. But that is with a social gathering.

The particular question of some kind of pub about a means to increase revenue. You are on campus, is really a separate issue in my talking about one of two options. First to opinion. One that is appropriate for discussion if we increase the admission charge and have those we are able to serve in a legal way. But then we who support the program produce a have to discuss a lot of other things, economics, disproportionate amount of the revenue the physical facilities, the location, and so on.

Q How would you characterize the attitudes and involvement of the students on this campus?

A That is sort of like describing the universe. In general, I think that students tend to be a lot more involved than people acknowledge, including the students. Students in fact tend to be more critical of fellow students than almost

New Living-Learning Center Scheduled For '73 Completion

by Jill Stevens

Interest in UVM's Living-Learning Center continues to grow as plans draw closer to becoming reality. Construction of the Center will begin shortly and is scheduled for completion by September 1973.

The CYNIC spoke to Director of Housing and Assistant Dean of Students Dr. Keith Miser who presently is involved with working out innumerable physical details of the plant and its environs.

Miser enthusiastically explained the uniqueness of the interacting Design-Build and Living-Learning concepts on which the Center is based. The committee designated for choosing the architectural design departed from the usual practice of accepting the lowest bid submitted by various construction firms. Instead, a thick book was compiled including a complete description of all physical requirements from air-conditioning ducts to broom closets. The plans were submitted to several architects along with the sum available for financing. That firm which best fit the qualifications within the designated monetary limitations was awarded the contract. Papers were signed in the fall with the Carlson architectural firm of Massachusetts.

The advantage of such a revolutionary Design-Build concept said Miser, is seen in the completeness of all physical facilities to fit educational specifications before academic programs begin. That is, the Center, its design and furnishings will be conducive to living and learning instead of relighting to makeshift conditions. The Carlson design calls for several small "houses" clustered about and connected to a larger central house where recreational, research, and dining facilities will be located. The smaller units will house several balconied suites for six and classroom space. As well as room for 680 students, the structure will include apartments for fifteen faculty members and their families.

The Center is meant to be a smaller but complete college within the University. Each academic department will be represented if it desires and several departments presently are planning programs for the LLC. Besides classrooms, laboratories, and library facilities, there will be a pottery and poster shop, darkroom supplies, discussion areas, a fireplace, and pool-billiard rooms. The entire Center will be equipped to handle handicapped students. The location, on Main Street, behind the Marsh-Austin-Tupper complex was chosen so that the Center will be convenient to Bailey Library and the main campus.

Miser emphasized that the primary purpose of the $5.7 million Center will be to link the academic and non-academic lives of faculty and students. The combination of a pre-designed complete physical plant and well-planned educational-recreational programs administrators feel will provide for an efficient and rewarding living-learning experience.

V.P.I.R.G. Schedules Elections, Fee Refunds

by Arlene Eriksen

Now that the Vermont Public Interest Research Group is incorporated, its next area of concern is the election of local representatives to the state board of trustees.

The state board of trustees will be responsible for all of VPIRG's major decisions, including the funding of its projects. Any student who has paid the VPIRG fee may run as one of UVM's representatives. Nominations will be accepted until Monday, February 14 at the Student Activities desk in Billings Center.

The elections will be held on Wednesday night, February 16 in the dining halls and on Thursday, February 17 in Billings Center. The VPIRG members must bring their student IDs in order to vote. Until then, the interim leaders of VPIRG are Dick Couture, Anne Ehrlich and Bill Wessel.

Students who do not wish to belong to VPIRG may have their money refunded the week of February 7 - 11. The refund desk will be manned from 9:30 AM to 4:30 PM in Billings Center.

Donald Ross, one of Nader's Raiders who assisted VPIRG last semester, will be in Vermont on February 12. He plans to be present at the state-wide meeting in Vermont College on that date.

As a corporation, VPIRG's annual meeting will be held on the first Saturday in March. The schools that will be on the state board of trustees are UVM, Goddard and Marlboro. Prospective members of VPIRG, such as Middlebury, Norwich and Castleton, will have consensus representatives acting in an advisory capacity. These representatives will not be able to vote.

Among the issues to be discussed at the annual meeting are the selection of specific projects, the location of a state office and the appointment of a director for VPIRG.

All VPIRG members are encouraged to attend the meeting in Billings Center at 7 PM on Sunday. For additional information, students should consult the VPIRG posters located in all the major buildings on the campus.

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group is a non-profit public corporation designed to research and publicize environmental, economic, social and political problems facing the state of Vermont. Its primary function is to act as an advocate of the interests of the general public.

The VPIRG has chosen five general areas in which to work. The five areas are consumer protection; services and utilities; taxes; environmental problems; and

A Bachelor's Degree In Three Years?

by Philip W. Semas

From The Chronicle of Higher Education

One of the oldest assumptions about American higher education—that it takes four years to earn a bachelor's degree—is increasingly being questioned as more and more colleges adopt programs under which a student can earn a bachelor's degree in three years.

Four methods are being used to shorten the time it takes to earn a bachelor's degree:

Giving students academic credit on the basis of tests.

Giving students credit for college-level work done in high school.

Encouraging students to attend classes in the summer or to take more than a normal course load during the regular academic year.

Revising the entire curriculum to operate on a three-year instead of a four-year cycle.

A New Emphasis at Many Institutions

None of these ideas are new, but they are now getting more emphasis than ever before on many campuses.

It always has been possible for an especially gifted student to earn a bachelor's degree in three years by taking more courses than the

The Roundhouse Revival

The Roundhouse will reopen this Friday night in Lower Billings Center as live music will be performed from 9 to 11 with the occasional break for a cup of coffee and talk. For this week, the featured line-up stars Paul Adams et al. who will perform a variety of musical guitar, including some of his own compositions. Allison Ossa shall be returning to perform more of her folk music. Candles will light the way. And appearing at 11:00 P.M. will be the Ram Shankar Country Blues Band. As always, anyone is welcome to come and play a tune or two during the night. Hopefully, a Barrel of Peanuts will pay the Roundhouse a visit. Altogether, this Friday night, Feb. 4, 9-11 the revival of the Roundhouse will be rolling.

Mayor Paquette To Appear

Burlington Mayor Paquette will be appearing at an Open Forum on Tuesday, February 8, at 7:45 P.M. in North Lounge, Billings Center. The event is sponsored by Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity, and is open to all.

Speak Your Mind At 'Curbstone'

Curbstone, a new open forum on the UVM campus, began yesterday. It will be a weekly session where anyone from the University community can speak on any topic. This is everyone's chance to speak their mind from students, to faculty, to administration. If you want to speak or want to hear about any topic, contact Sharon Reed or Sandy Friedman. Coffee will be served at each meeting.

Disney Productions

San Francisco, Calif. (CPS) Disney Productions has filed suit in federal court here against Air Pirates Funnies for allegedly trying to destroy their business. The complaint asks $540,000 in damages.

In a comic book called Air Pirates Funnies, claims Disney Productions, such familiar old characters as Mickey Mouse and Minnie Mouse are turned into sex exhibitionists and Donald Duck into a Peeping Tom.

The suit asks $140,000 in damages for copyright infringement and $100,000 in punitive damages from each of four artists named. The complaint also lists 50 John Does as defiling Disney characters.

Disney attorney John Hagler said the defendants have agreed not to publish further issues of the publication and not to sell any of the remaining issues in stock pending Disney's hearing on a permanent injunction.

Joseph Rhine, counsel for Hell Comics, publisher of Air Pirates Funnies, claims "our people had a right to use the characters for parody purposes." He feels that "Mickey Mouse belongs to everyone...and certainly we are not going to destroy Disney Productions."

The publisher and artists named in the suit were unavailable for comment.

Two Year Nursing Program Accredited

Dr. Norma Woodruff, director of the University of Vermont School of Nursing, has announced that the school has been granted initial accreditation of its two-year technical nursing program and continuing accreditation of its four-year technical nursing program.

The National League for Nursing is recognized as the national accrediting agency for nursing education by the nursing profession. To secure such recognition, the faculty engaged in a process of self-evaluation to assess the extent to which the School and its programs met accepted criteria. Its published report, together with visitors to each program from the National League for Nursing, provided the basis for judgment.

The two-year technical nursing program was not eligible for full accreditation until the graduation of its first class. This occurred last May when 27 graduates received the associate degree and thus were qualified to write the examination for registered nurse licensure.

The four-year professional nursing program has been continuously accredited since 1956 and was among the early programs accredited. The program has had 618 graduates since its first two graduates in 1948.

The School of Nursing has an enrollment of 345 students, 90 in the two-year program and 255 in the four-year program.

The school will move next spring into its new home in the Nursing and Allied Health Sciences Building being built adjacent to Given Medical Building.

Open Encounter Group

"Open" Encounter Groups will be held every Monday night from 7 to 9 p.m. at St. Anselm's Chapel on Redstone Campus. Groups will be led by John Perry and other leaders for specific events.

"Open" groups mean that anyone may come to any session, without necessarily having attended any other session. The groups will be limited to two hours, and are primarily intended to provide persons with an exposure to Encounter Group methods and experiences. Those who are interested in depth explorations may make contact through the Monday night activities. Various special interest groups and marathons will be set up and announced on Monday nights.

The program is jointly sponsored by the Campus Ministry and The Next Thing.

Dr. Cortell To Lecture

Dr. Alvin Cortrell, Director of Research for the Center for International Studies, will lecture at UVM on Monday, February 7. He will be speaking in Votey Auditorium at 4:00 P.M. and all UVM students and faculty are invited.

The Department of Military Studies will sponsor the lecture as a part of its semester series titled "Issues '72." Dr. Cortrell will talk on the current Middle East situation. He was Project Director of a panel, largely consisting of British scholars and statesmen, which published a report on the Persian Gulf in 1969 entitled "The Gulf: Implications of British Withdrawal." Since then, he has visited the Middle East several times as well as spending much time in England studying the area with British specialists.

The "Issues '72" lecture series began on January 24 with Walter Hahn of the Institute for Defense Analysis who spoke on U.S./Soviet Strategic Trends. The series continues through April and consists of speakers notable in the field of international studies. The aim of the series is to promote informed discussion on compelling international problems among students and faculty. The remaining speakers and dates in the series are as follows: Dr. L.B. Kirkpatrick, Brown University, February 21; LTC Harold Johnson, Department of State, March 9th; Mr. Zygmunt Nagorski, Council on Foreign Relations, March 21; GEN Lyman L. Jesus, Who Was He? Who is He?

For the past 2000 years, a lot of people have given allegiance to a man called Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ. In his name man has done some of his greatest noble acts of giving and self-sacrifice. And in his name, man has committed some of his most horrible atrocities. But what of the man himself? What do people believe about Jesus? Was he just a man, albeit a man of goodwill, peace, and self-giving love? Or was he more? Was he God, as well? What can we really know about the life and teachings of this man of 2000 years ago? Can we trust what the Bible and Christians say about him? We can ask, "Who was he?" But is it also appropriate to ask, "Who is he?"

We will attempt to tackle these questions in a three-part series on Jesus, beginning this Monday, Feb. 7, at St. Anselm's Chapel. This Monday we will begin with the movie, The Parable, a modern allegory in which a circus clown begins to take upon himself the suffering of his fellow performers, and finally dies for his actions. In his life and death, however, the performers, and perhaps even the circus, are changed. We will be breaking up into small groups for discussion. Hopefully, we will face up to all the questions we may have about this man—and coming out on the other side with a better understanding of what we believe about Jesus and why we believe it.

Come to one or all of the sessions on three consecutive Mondays, beginning this Monday, Feb. 7, 7:00pm, at St. Anselm's Chapel, on the Redstone Campus. Join us, and find out what other people are thinking about this man who has changed not only history, but also innumerable lives.

Evening Division Enrollment

by Linda Goodspeed
The University of Vermont's Evening Division of Continuing Education has reported a total of over 1600 students have enrolled in courses for the Spring '72 semester.

The program, under the guidance of Dean Raymond V. Phillips, has steadily grown each year and this semester will offer a large number of courses to a record number of paying students and fulltime students of the University.

The courses offered by the Evening Division are determined by each department and the response of the community. A course will be cancelled if there are less than eight paying students enrolled for the particular course. Classes for the Spring semester will commence on a regular basis the week of January 31.

Besides serving the University of Vermont area, the division also offers courses throughout the state to interested persons.

Gonorrhea Check

(CPS)—In an attempt to help hold back the rising epidemic of venereal disease the Public Health Service is recommending for the first time that doctors routinely test women for gonorrhea as part of regular physical check-ups.

Despite a marked rise in the number of reported gonorrhea cases from 264,158 in 1961 to 600,072 in 1970, health officials consider the disease grossly under-reported. Dr. John Miller, the Public Health Service's top venereal disease expert estimates that 2.25 million Americans get gonorrhea each year.

Dr. Miller estimates that 640,000 women may have gonorrhea and not know it. Women, unlike men, are free of overt symptoms. These women, called asymptomatic carriers, can become sterile or transmit the disease by sexual intercourse.

Men can tell they have gonorrhea because it generally produces unmistakable symptoms such as a burning sensation in the penis from three to nine days after sexual exposure.

The Public Health Service's recommendation for the routine gonorrhea test was based on the findings of a three year study of women who were having regular pelvic

Men can tell they have gonorrhea because it generally produces unmistakable symptoms such as a burning sensation in the penis from three to nine days after sexual exposure.

The Public Health Service's recommendation for the routine gonorrhea test was based on the findings of a three year study of women who were having regular pelvic examinations in 36 towns and cities.

The results were: 8.9 percent of the 740,446 women tested had gonorrhea. 2.52 percent of the 620,060 women who were tested in settings other than venereal disease clinics had gonorrhea. 3.80 percent of the women found to have gonorrhea were asymptomatic carriers.

Gonorrhea, unlike syphilis, cannot be detected by a blood test. To detect gonorrhea, doctors must rely on a culture test which can only be made by pelvic examination.

According to Dr. Miller, gonorrhea can cause arthritis, irritate tendons, damage the heart, mimic gall bladder pain and cause unnecessary surgery, blind newborns and cause meningitis.

Advanced stages, says Miller, can bring about a condition known as septic shock that results from pus produced by gonorrhea bacteria in pelvic organs such as ovaries, fallopian tubes, and the uterus.

STUDENT ASSOCIATION SENATE MEETING
January 26, 1972

The fifteenth meeting of the 1971-72 Senate was called to order at 6:40 p.m. by Ace Bugbee, in Marsh Lounge, Billings Center.

EXECUTIVE BOARD REPORT

Board of Trustees report was given out. The court case is still pending, until then, business will be as usual.

The ski lodge is being used by Johnson State this semester. We will have a report in 2 weeks.

The Bookstore has made an approximate profit of $60,000.00.

The Athletic Fee does not only go for the bond on the building, Dean Powers said that some of it is not earmarked for a special use by the athletic department.

The possibility of a bus to carry students back and forth has been considered. Some students worked out a plan and checked prices in Burlington for buying and renting. More help is needed with this.

Concert Bureau—Ace Bugbee reported on a concert set for Thursday, February 24 with J. Geils Blues Band and a British Group called "YES." The prices will be $3.00 and $3.50. The two groups cost approximately $7,500.00. There will be classes on Friday but this may change. Ace said he was optimistic about this concert. Suggestions for other concerts were discussed—Poco, the Beachboys, and Joni Mitchell were mentioned.

Thursday night, at 7 p.m., in the S.A. office, there will be a meeting of the Winter Week Committee. ANYONE WANTING TO BE ON THIS COMMITTEE NEXT YEAR SHOULD GO TO THIS MEETING.

Sharon Reed asked for clarification about Winter Week.

FINANCE—Terry Demas said that the old "Kake Walk-Winter Weekend" concept has to be changed. So a group of S.A. programs will be put together for a week's program. These separate groups will be led by a steering committee. Some tentative activities are: Concert, Dick Gregory, Masked Ball in Fleming Museum, Baroque Ensemble, "Boys in the Band", Hockey Games, OVP olympics, Student Art Show, SA Films, Coffee house in Billings, 1 act plays at Arena Theatre, Buffets in dorms, special programs on WKUV, Ski Weekends, and a host of others.

There will be no possibility of losing money on a grand scale, Dr. Fackler asked whether or not it would be better to spread these activities over the semester.

Richard Moss said that this was the "most ridiculous thing ever perpetrated on the student body." This is 3 weeks away and the ideas are all tentative. "This is completely ludicrous."

Mike Weinberg felt that the people who have been working on this deserve a great deal of credit—since no one else did anything but criticize.

Carroll Hims agreed with Senator Moss but hoped that the Senate would learn to act.

Terry hoped that the Senate would give support.

Mike Weinberg asked for the unanimous support of the Senate for Winter Week and received it.

OLD BUSINESS

Dean Powers spoke on the subject of the health center. Last Spring our health center was evaluated. Every suggestion that does not cost money has been implemented. The current fee does not cost money from $44.00 to $75.00 per year. (These figures are all rough estimates) 3 suggestions are: 1) Build a new center ($600,000 - 1,000,000) 2) rent from hospital ($60,000 - 100,000) 3) renovate Wason (with addition) or another University building. This has not been fully explored but would cost approximately $250,000.

The more extensive treatment given; the lower the insurance.

The staff has been increased in the past few years and a fee was required.

Full year health service is being considered. Students now expect less waiting time, more specialized service (i.e. gynecology), more doctors. One of the problems is that a specialist may not be used by 50% of the students, but all students will have to pay for this service.

Mike Weinberg mentioned the idea of students who are covered by the policy could not go to local doctors, without having to have a health center.

Dean Powers also spoke on Athletics, and the probability and necessity of an increase in ticket prices next year. As of now, there are no definite plans, but priorities of funds in the University means that public support of athletics will still be needed. Hopefully ticket sales could bring in 25-33% of the cost. Ticket prices would go up 100% to $1.50.

Dr. Stu Pidly Questions
Your Answers

Dear MISLED,

A) My advice to you is to watch a lot of TV, invite people over for parties, get high every night, and at all cost avoid any areas of concentrated study (such as libraries or group discussions).

Q) Dr. Pidly I find myself falling back in certain classes and would like some hints on how to definitely improve my performance.

Dear DISGRUNTLED,

A) A home coming queen.

Q) Dear Dr. Pidly my roommate keeps something in his closet that constantly grunts and smells, which he claims will someday deserve schoolwide attention. What could it be?

Dear GOING OUT OF YOUR TREE,

A) Get him a job with the Wrangling Brothers.

Q) MY ROOMMATE has an obsession with pets. One whole wall (on my side) was transformed into a gigantic aquarium, the mice (two dozen) tear up my papers for building nests, the 11 dogs and cats wet on my pillow, his monkey eats everything I leave around and I am left with shoveling off the floor every day. I am confused as to what to do.

QUESTION: Can repetitive masturbation using one grip cause pinched nerves in the hand? I get "writer's cramps" very easily with the thumb and first finger, the appendages that I use to masturbate. Can this be an early sign of arthritis? (This question was written by a man).

ANSWER: Relax your grip! What you describe is not pinched nerves or arthritis. It is merely some spasms or cramps in muscles. The small muscles in your hand and forearm are not used to being held in a tensed position for as long as it takes you to masturbate or write. Most muscles are designed to contract and relax rather than hold a fixed position. Such cramps can be enhanced by hyperventilation (rapid breathing) which can also produce numbness and tingling in your extremities. As well, spasms of the muscles of the hands and feet are common during sexual excitement. If relaxing your grip doesn't work, try using your other hand.

QUESTION: I take a bath every day and also keep my genital area clean. Is there any other need for douching other than to keep the vagina clean? I have no odor problem.

ANSWER: Under most circumstances the vagina tends to stay remarkably clean without doing anything. In the absence of a vaginal infection, much so-called vaginal odor may be traced to the area immediately outside the vagina in the vulva area. Adequate bathing usually takes care of most of this. Under some circumstances women do have problems with vaginal odors and douching is recommended. If the difficulties are caused by an infection, a physician must be consulted so that the infection can be identified and properly treated.

Some women who use birth control pills find that they have changes in the normal vaginal secretions and are also prone to develop yeast infections. In such cases, douching is also advisable. Long term use of antibiotics for acne may create a similar need, again due to incidental changes in the environment of the vagina. Many fancy and expensive preparations are sold in drug stores but the old expedient of two tablespoons of vinegar and a quart of warm water works just fine. (White or household vinegar, not wine vinegar.) From what you describe, douching would not be recommended.

QUESTION: I am writing to find out the effect of alcohol on falling asleep, if any. I enjoy drinking sherry or brandy

UVM's Morgan Horse Program Needs Funds

Dr. Edward C. Andrews Jr., University of Vermont president, said Wednesday he is optimistic funds will be found to continue the Morgan Horse Program at the University farm in Weybridge.

The University has decided that, in view of the financial situation, it can no longer allocate funds to this program, which it has had since 1961. University officials are cooperating in the effort to find alternate means of financing.

Dr. Andrews explained that at the organizational session, members of a six-man executive board looked at two financial problems: Financing the program for the year beginning July 1, and long-range financing.

"We are confident now we can meet the program's expenses for the next year. While we still need additional contributions, those we have received indicate the prospect of our receiving the necessary funds." Other possible sources of funds, he said, are the sale of horses and admission fees.

Committee members covered a wide range of topics in discussions of the long-range financing. These included annual giving, an endowment fund, sales and breeding fees, and a contribution from the University to finance the education program it would continue there.

Lawrence Appleby, president of the American Morgan Horse Association and an executive board member, told fellow members his organizational headquarters is divided geographically now, and members would like to relocate it in Vermont. He said they were considering "The Weybridge farm as a possible site."

Executive board members, late at night while reading. I have noticed that I frequently have difficulty falling asleep after I have had wine or brandy close to bedtime. Is it possible for alcohol to induce insomnia? By the way, do you have any recommendations for insomnia other than a warm bath? I have no tub.

ANSWER: While the common assumption is that alcohol makes a person sleepy, and this does seem to be the case for most, I know of many people who experience the opposite. Particularly after several glasses of wine, some people find that they fall asleep for a short period of time and then wake up with a bad case of insomnia. My own informal survey indicates that this is the case more often with wine than with alcohol taken in other forms, and has led me to wonder if some people metabolize wine differently than others producing substances which interfere with normal sleep. I have experienced severe insomnia myself under these circumstances and designed an elaborate experiment to determine specifically which wines produce the insomnia. Although I could do the research over the period of one term (if I could sleep late in the morning) for some unknown reason I was never able to get the research money to pursue this crucial problem.

A cool shower before bedtime might even be more effective than a warm bath as a means of inducing sleep. Aside from avoiding caffeine containing beverages, stay clear of rigorous exercise right before retiring, although exercise during the day tends to make it easier to sleep at night. One of the most helpful things in trying to get to sleep is sit down and relax for a half an hour before getting into bed. Even if suffering from bad insomnia, one should avoid taking naps during the day as napping only makes it more difficult to sleep at night. Insomnia occurs normally and is usually self limited and not serious. In severe cases, a physician should be consulted.

Editorial Questions For Mayor

Mayor Gordon Paquette of Burlington is scheduled to appear on the evening of February 8 in Billings Center to answer questions from students. It's about time.

UVM students might wish to query His Honor on the following points—

Will UVM's streets look like Frontier Town again after this winter?

How long does the City of Burlington intend to let traffic congest? Until Main Street and Williston Road resemble the Long Island Expressway?

What requirements does Burlington have for a student to register to vote here?

Do Burlington merchants realize the amount of money the students here spend annually?

WHY DOES SUCH A HOSTILE FEELING TOWARD THE UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT EXIST IN BURLINGTON?

The Mayor's answers to these questions would be very interesting, and to say the least, appreciated.

Stafford's Amnesty Bill

Sen. Robert T. Stafford, Vermont's junior senator, is co-sponsoring a bill that would grant amnesty to "draft resisters." His measure calls for "limited amnesty," which would allow approximately 70,000 young men living in other countries to return home if they agreed to serve three years in "government service."

The bill also provides for draft resisters now serving jail sentences. If these men have already served up to two years, this would be credited toward the "required service time."

The "service" would be working with the Peace Corps, the Veterans' Administration, domestic service, or, oddly enough, the military. Stafford has already said to the bill's critics that it is now time for "reconciliation."

We feel that Stafford seems to have missed the whole point why young men left this country. We find it ironic, to say the least, that it is a representative of the same government, which allows an undeclared war to persist for nearly 10 years, now calling for "reconciliation."

"Reconciliation," Sen. Stafford? 50,000 American lives? Thousands of Vietnamese lives?

"Limited amnesty?" Why not TOTAL AMNESTY? After all, aren't these so-called resisters the ones who said repeatedly this conflict is wrong? Isn't this the same point, Sen. Stafford, that you now express in your plea for "reconciliation?"

'Too Many Loopholes'

1971 Pesticide Control Act Irks Conservationists

(CBS)—The Federal Environmental Pesticide Control Act of 1971, H.R. 10729, which passed the House of Representatives in November, has caused concern among environmentalists since its inception. Conservationists feel that the bill as passed contains severe deficiencies, some of which would have been corrected in part by amendments submitted by Rep. John Dow (New York) had they passed in their original form.

The Pesticides bill essentially weakens the present law and contains deficiencies which conservationists and other groups have strongly objected to. One Dow amendment would have changed the wording "parties at interest" to "parties adversely affected." The latter term is used in the present law and has been accepted as including citizen groups. The amendment was defeated, leaving wording which clouds the issue of whether citizen groups have standing to obtain judicial review and challenge orders of the EPA administrator.

The bill includes loopholes which will allow the restrictions imposed by it to be easily evaded and also permit penalties which should be insignificant to corporations. There are no controls over products intended for export, and definitions of "imminent hazard" and "substantial adverse effects on the environment" are thoroughly inadequate and have a built-in cost-benefit ratio which puts a price tag on human health and environmental quality.

Pesticides control has been heatedly debated since their introduction after World War II. DDT warnings were issued as early as 1949 when it first appeared in milk. The most well-known attack on the use of pesticides was in Rachel Carson's book, Silent Spring in which she stated that certain species of birds were doomed to extinction because of the use of pesticides.

Hard pesticides, which are chlorinated hydrocarbons, include DDT, aldrin, dieldrin, heptachlor, endrin, lindane, and chlordane. They remain persistent in the environment for many years. What scientists call "biological magnification" occurs in the use of these chemicals which are insoluble in water but extremely soluble in fat. The toxic chemical becomes increasingly concentrated as it moves up the food chain.

Is A National Gay State The Answer?

by Jeff Yacker

The Cynic received a letter to the editor this week concerning gay liberation and the plight of homosexuals and bisexuals, asking the paper to "take a stand."

The "problem" of homosexuality in society is certainly not a new one; sources as old as the Old Testament make mention of it. Research indicates that such famous figures in history as Alexander the Great and Julius Caesar had homosexual tendencies. However, only in recent years have newspapers, magazines and broadcast networks begun to explore the topic publicly. This itself is an indication of our society's tolerance and liberalism, for if TIME magazine feels safe enough in devoting a cover to Gay Liberation, then Middle Class America must be willing to read about it. This is not to say, though, that a large segment of American society is tolerant of overt homosexuality itself. Homosexuals of both sexes are still presented in many situations from revealing their true feelings by fear of job loss or even police action. Very often the repression of homosexual feelings only compounds the emotional problem, making the person concerned even more unhappy. And make no mistake—many homosexuals are not such by choice, and fully realize it.

It is extremely self-righteous to condemn out of hand another person's lifestyle. Yet it is equally self-righteous to heap self-abuse upon those who cannot tolerate overt homosexuality in others, for it is a problem which very often strikes at the roots of a person's innermost emotions. Different parts of the United States tend to have different attitudes toward homosexuality openly expressed in day to day life. Places such as Fire Island, New York City and San Francisco undoubtedly are more tolerant than rural areas in the Midwest, the South, and even Vermont. Universities tend to be more minded than their surrounding communities, and at the University of Minnesota an avowed homosexual was elected president of the student body.

In our society today there are people who feel that acceptance of homosexuality is an unmistakable sign that our precious civilization is decaying and going the way of ancient Rome, Babylon, Nineveh, etc. There were people who felt the same way when Prohibition was repealed in 1933, when women were allowed to smoke cigarettes in public in the Roaring Twenties, and when a Democrat was elected President in 1884 (Rum, Romanism & Rebellion, Remember?). Western civilization has come along way, through a great many wars. But such bloodbaths as the American Civil War, World War I and World War II were indications of a healthy society! Auschwitz and Dachau were examples of the pinnacle of civilization, and the conduct of America in Vietnam during the past ten years has been a splendid furthering of the White Man's Burden, a la 1960. All of a sudden our civilization is falling apart at the seams when we progress to a midway point in tolerance of homosexuals.

The problem of homosexuality is only as much of a problem as we ourselves desire to make it. It is absurd to expect a reversal in attitudes and prejudices toward homosexuals overnight, just as it is with the case of any minority group. Perhaps the solution to homosexuality in the world would be to establish a National Gay State somewhere on the globe. Antarctica, perhaps? Who knows, maybe Antarctica would transform gay men, as Israel did the Jews of Europe and other places after World War II. Think of the problems, political and other wise, that would create...the penguins would certainly object (to their land)...and the U.S.S.R. would probably get involved somehow. Or maybe the U.S.S.R.

would like to establish a Homosexual Soviet Socialist Republic somewhere out in Siberia; it certainly would enhance their image as a tolerant country. And Mao-Tse-tung would undoubtedly find a place for the gays in China as productive workers for the Revolution. President Nixon, watch out...you might shake hands with a queer in a few weeks.

Comment On Beckley Demands Apology

by Steven Farber

During the fall of 1970, during the storm of controversy precipitated by the Board of Trustees decision to appoint Professor Michael Farwell, John Beckley, then a University Trustee, resigned from his position on the board. The reason Mr. Beckley gave for his action was that he wasn't being listened to and felt ineffective.

This kind of reasoning is, to my mind, childish at best, reflecting the attitude of "I'm gonna take my ball and go home." Taking offense at the alleged action of the Board in that way proved and accomplished nothing for either the University or the embittered Mr. Beckley.

Now it seems the good Mr. Beckley is seeking revenge upon U.V.M. as though he were "kicked off the board."

In a recent appearance at the Rotary International Club in Rutland, Vt. Mr. Beckley lashed out at U.V.M. saying that during the whole time he was on the Board that he was never listened to, it seems, even to the point of being disregarded. He also stated the "fact" which this writer takes as nothing more than an allegation, that Dr. Andrews, U.V.M. President, was not the Board's first choice for the job.

Mr. Beckley's small-minded attitude appears to be this: if his suggestions are not acted upon then he is being disregarded; that if the board cannot act with him and in the direction he desires, that he will properly prevent the board from acting. Furthermore, Mr. Beckley seems to believe that the President of a University must be in accord with its Trustees (i.e. the recent Parental affair) and that if he isn't, he should be removed, or at least made "powerless."

I call the recent statements by Mr. Beckley a lot of hokum. If he wishes to help the University he should have stayed on the Board, and pressed for his point of view by accepted practices. However, due to his recent actions, his desire to help is more than questionable. Certainly U.V.M. can be helped through its difficulties by a person who does not wish to dictate policy to the University on threat of "political blackmail" if not listened to.

In conclusion, I ask for a retraction and apology from Mr. Beckley for his underhanded behavior. U.V.M. can do without his brand of help.

Convention Against 'Racism' In March

To the Editor of the Cynic:

The papers say SDS is dead.

They wish! Despite the death notices, more than 1000 will attend the SDS National Convention against Racism,

March 30-April 2, at Lowell

Lecture Hall, Harvard University. (Some of the death notices are not merely on paper. Harvard, for example, tried to kill the Convention by denying facilities. When SDS launched a petition campaign, they backed down and gave

in.) Last year's SDS

Convention of over 1000 led to the launching of numerous struggles on campuses all across the country and several large national demonstrations to fight racism, unemployment, welfare cuts, and the war in Southeast Asia.

This year, SDS has led struggles against pushers of racist ideology such as

McCarthyism at Harvard and Shockley at Stanford. In Los Angeles and Boston SDS is leading fights against administrations which boutfully push racist policies.

In Chicago SDS has joined with welfare mothers and others to fight racist welfare cuts. At Northeastern University in Boston, SDS led a movement of workers and students which successfully prevented racist

Attny. Gen. Mitchell from dedicating the new Police

Many SDS members feel that a key focus of the Convention should be the launching of a national campaign on the scale of the anti-war movement to fight the usage of racism on campus:

be it racist textbooks,

professors, or administrators and their policies. SDS sees

Hitchcock Film An Feature

Alfred Hitchcock's "North by Northwest" and Basil Deardon's "Sapphire" will open the two Lane Film Society Film series this weekend.

"North by Northwest," on the Hitchcock Classics Series, will be shown on Saturday, Feb. 5, at 8:00 p.m. in Marsh Life Sciences Building.

"Sapphire," on the Black Man in Film Series, will be presented on Monday, Feb. 7, at 9:00 p.m. in Marsh Life Sciences Building.

Tickets for each showing are $1.00 each, available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door on the evening of the performance.

"Sapphire," directed by Basil Deardon in 1959, is described as suspense thriller about a light-skinned black girl. "One of the most gripping films of the year," wrote the film critic of the London Daily Express.

Featured in the movie are Nigel Patrick, Yvonne Mitchell, Michael Craig, and Yvonne Buckingham. The screen play is by James Graham.

The story deals with the discovery on Hampstead Heath, in England, of the body of a beautiful girl who has been stabbed violently in the heart. The only clue is her blood-stained handkerchief—initialled "S." Her dress, woolen stockings, flat pumps and duffle coat are typical student garb. Not so typical is her flame-red chiffon petticoat.

The investigation is put into the hands of Detective Superintendent Hazard and Detective Inspector Leary. As the case proceeds, the detectives find that the victim, "Sapphire," had a dual personality; she was also three months pregnant. Clues lead the officers among London's hard black population. Hazard and Leary discover the girl's secret and arrest the murderer, in an exciting and unexpected denouement.

"North by Northwest," "E" 1959, was written by Ernest Lehman, and produced and directed by Alfred Hitchcock.

Movie Review: French Connection Rates As Excellent Police Film

Jimmy Doyle
Alan Chazler
Buddy Russo
Sal Bova

Cast

Gene Hackman
Fernando Rey
Trey Soderber
Tony LeBlanc

A 20th Century-Fox release of Philip D'Antoni/Schindler-Moore production, directed by William Friedkin, screenplay by Ernest Tidyman, based on the book by Robin Moore, running time 104 minutes, Rated R.

This fast, well acted police drama is one of the best crime films produced in recent years. Most films of this type are rather difficult to believe because few of the characters in them seem real. Not so with this film. The people in the film are quite believable and the movie almost seems like a documentary of police on the job. The police in this movie do not lead the chase existence of police portrayed in the TV show Adam 12. There is a dirty, violent, and mostly unrewarding job. Doyle is on the narcotics squad, and it is hard to imagine a less appealing job.

The entire film is extremely well done and centers around Doyle's attempts to break up a drug ring. Almost all of the film was shot in New York. The setting lends itself well to the action. The photography of New York always has the right amount of emphasis; enough to make you aware of the setting but never so much that it overpowers the characters and this makes the film to degenerate into a travelogue. This is what happened in Love Story, mainly because the characters were so shallow that the scenery was the only thing to hold one's interest. Here the balance between setting and character exposure is just right. The editing is excellent, the best example being the parallel editing showing a sniper trying to escape in the overhead train and Doyle trying to catch him, driving a car on the road below.

The film is mainly about Doyle, who is something of an enigmatic figure. He is an extremely dedicated cop of average intelligence. In fact, the thing that enables him to succeed at all is his dedication. He is a cop 24 hours a day, living on pizza, sandwiches, and cold coffee. He gets most of his sleep in the back of a police car. The film sets up interesting contrasts, showing him eating pizza while the suspect he is following enjoys a full-course dinner in a restaurant across the street. He walks along a street while following a man, passing a person lying unconscious on the sidewalk without so much as a glance. Some of his hunches pay off, and some don't; one got another policeman killed. Doyle manages to accidentally kill a Federal agent while trying to shoot a suspect. Instances of Doyle's mistakes abound in the film.

The one flaw in the film is that the character of Doyle is never explained. What causes him to so tirelessly chase the criminals? He never gets any rewards, makes many mistakes, and some of the criminals escape. The motives of Doyle are never examined and we never learn what makes him tick. We know only that a Joe Maanix or Sam Spade, he's not.

This is one of the best action police films made lately and should not be missed. It is a superior film and it will do very well at the box office.

Variety statistics: For week ending Jan. 12. Ranked 3 out of 50 top-grossing films, gross for week, $649,800; ranked 3 last week, total gross $6,589,088.

'Camino Real' Well Done, Though Poorly Written

by Sandy Friedman

The Arena Theatre's latest production was one of Tennessee Williams' most successful plays, "Camino Real." Although the play is famous for its short run on Broadway and people walking out on it, the University Players did a fairly good job of presenting the play.

The notable strong actors were Robert Miller as Kirov, Melanio Audette as Marguerite Gaudier and Gerard Bourcier and G. Clark McPherson as the Streetcleaners. Kirov was an American lost in Camino Real, who became a petty for the workings of the people who control Camino Real. Confused and unsure of himself, he tried to figure out what was going on in the town, but not until the end of the play, did he assert himself and figure the town out. In his relations with everyone in town, but especially the Gypsy's daughter, Esmeralda, Kirov was sincere, for it was the blending of all his emotions which made Kirov a sympathetic and successful character.

Melanio Audette had the difficult role of playing Marguerite, who was a prostitute, but too old to be successful in her profession. Marguerite was a selfish, willful and bitter woman, yet in her portrayal this was offset with love, sorrow and regret. In her speeches with Jacques Camero, these elements of her character came into focus.

The Streetcleaners were strong because of silence and ghost-like makeup. This understated, but powerful role was successful because they were talked about by others, and because their own shock value. However, Williams over-used them by allusions in speeches; so, their strength is diminished, somewhat.

The street scenes were too raucous and confusing when action was called for, bludgeoning the audience with noise which made it difficult to concentrate on the action. When they were quiet, or talking one at a time they were more desirable to watch.

The makeup and set were good. The stage looked like a Spanish style plaza, the peasants looked and acted the part of Spanish peasants who hung around the town square. The wealthy people had that aristocratic air about them, looking as they should without being over done. The only jarring flaw was in the airline departure scene, when a third unrelated style of garb was introduced. Some of the extras wore very modern clothing and hairstyles which clashed with early twentieth century styles and the Spanish peasant outfits.

The university players did a good job presenting this poorly written play. Its selection for presentation here was of doubtful wisdom.

Album Reviews

by Doug Collette
LED ZEPPELIN, (Atlantic SD 7208)

A couple of years ago, I was really fond of the Zep and although I had no illusions about their musical brilliance, they did what they set out to do in both a capable and entertaining manner. But listening to their first three LPs recently, I felt myself becoming disenchanted with the band. However, I decided to bide my time and wait for the release of the new album.

Now that it's here, my faith has been restored and then some. Marked with the absence of their tendency to get carried away with themselves to the point of being laughable in their self-indulgence (Plant and Page were the most chronic offenders here, the former for his outrageous vocal gymnastics, the latter for his "gimmicks" and a penchant for spewing forth a flurry of notes when just a few well-placed ones would do), Led Zeppelin has produced a remarkably consistent and — dare I say it? — tasteful album.

Twelve-string acoustic guitars and myth-like lyrics make "The Battle of Evermore" and "Stairway to Heaven" (which, when it gets into harder things at the end like earlier tracks of its type,

Jamaican Pianist Performs February 10

A brilliant young pianist from Jamaica, the British West Indies — Nerine Barrett — will open the twelfth annual Lane Chamber Arts Series on Thurs., Feb. 10, at 8:30 p.m., in its Allen Chapel.

Only 28 years old, Miss Barrett has already started on the path to stardom. She has won two major prizes in London and New York and this year is appearing as soloist with the New York Philharmonic.

Single concert tickets, $2.50 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door on the night of the concert. For information and reservations, tel. 656-3418.

Reserved seats for the entire four-concert Chamber Arts Series are also available at $7.50. The remaining artists include: guitarist Carlos Barbosa-Lima on Feb. 23, cellist James Kreger on March 9, and mezzo-soprano Frederica von Stade on April 19.

Miss Barrett's program will be "Suite", op. 14, by Bartok, "Fantasie", op. 17, by Schumann, and "Twenty-Four Preludes", op. 28, by Chopin.

Miss Barrett is no stranger to Vermont. In the summer of 1970 she participated in the Marlboro Music Festival, where she performed frequently. Rudolf Serkin, director of the Festival, has also invited her to perform in one of the "Music from Marlboro" national tours in 1972.

Nerine Barrett, now a resident of London, was born in 1944 in Jamaica, where her early piano studies were with Rita Coore. In 1961, upon the recommendation of Dame Myra Hess, she was awarded a Jamaican government grant to study in London with Miss. Rosa Kabon.

In February, 1967, Miss Barrett made her debut in Wigmore Hall in London, and one month later, she was presented in her New York debut in the Young Concert Artists Series. Both concerts were unqualified successes, leading to active concertizing both in Europe and in this country.

In England, Miss Barrett has appeared as soloist frequently with the English Chamber Orchestra and the London Mozart Players, and twice in the "Prem" concerts at Royal Festival Hall, once under Sir John Barbirolli and once under Brian Priestman. In 1967 Miss Barrett won the Mozart Memorial Prize in London.

In the United States, Miss Barrett has performed to standing ovations in many cities. In 1968, she performed with the Seattle Symphony and was immediately re-engaged. In 1969, she again received a standing ovation. She was also re-engaged in Dayton, Columbia, and Pittsburgh, where she has been heard in recitals. Miss Barrett performed on tour with the New Jersey Symphony, and in a television recital at Michigan State University, among other appearances.

Miss Barrett was heard in a second recital in New York in 1969, and in a chamber music concert at Alice Tully Hall. She was also presented in the Metropolitan Museum Young Artists Series in 1971.

In April 1971, Miss Barrett was named recipient of the new Michaels Award, which carries with it a New York recital at Alice Tully Hall and

Led Zeppelin And Traffic Albums Live Up To Groups' Reputations

sports clean, un gimmicked electric guitar) are English folk-ballad material. But although the Zep writes pretty tunes like these, they're not really schizophrenic and to prove it, Page places some nicely melodic sliding lines on top of the bone-crunching riff of "When the Levee Breaks"; that's of course when Plant isn't throwing harp ripples amidst the din. (This tune may also signify some development of integrity for Zeppelin towards other writers' material; Page, Plant, Jones and Bonham share the composing with Memphis Minnie.

"Rock and Roll" is just that, Zeppelin style, and if you listen hard enough, you'll be able to hear piano ringing out way back there. "Black Dog" and "Misty Mountain Hop" have enough character to keep this band more than a few notches above neanderthals like GFRF; such groups know the form, but Zeppelin is one of the few, and perhaps the only one to truly master such powerhouse music. Still, when you hear an insane buzzing in your speaker during "Four Sticks," the thing hasn't cracked under the relentless onslaught of the Zep, it's only one of Page's few bows to electronics on this album, which is another plus for the fourth LP.

If the truth be known, Led Zep are the foremost exponents of braincramping, gut-wrenching rock and roll, spelled H-E-A-V-Y. And at a time when I'm becoming a bit bored with rock and roll, they've come forth with a very satisfying record. More power to them (as if they really need it).

THE LOW SPARK OF HIGH HEELED BOYS Traffic (Island SW 9306)
"Hidden Treasure" lead off the first Traffic studio album in nearly two years and it's a stone beauty. As in most Traffic songs, there's a lot going on: the foundation here is acoustic guitar and the delicate embellishment of Chris Wood's flute combines with Steve Winwood's softly soaring voice as he sings the entrancingly repetitive lyrics.

If you listen to—
If you listen to—
The water, you will hear the sound—

You will hear the sound—
Of life. The result is hypnotizing.

The title track follows and in its twelve minutes and ten seconds, you can see all that Traffic is in this present stage of its life. "High Heeled Boys" is simple, but deceptively so; there are many levels to this music, each one fulfilling in itself and as part of the whole. Winwood's voice is one of the first things to command attention: he sings with no apparent effort, yet his voice moves more than many singers who really strain to get somewhere. Jim Gordon has got to be the neatest drummer in rock and roll. For him everything has a place and everything in its place: each roll, each cymbal crash leads perfectly to the next move and Reebop's congas fill the holes Gordon leaves. The two drummers complement each other exceptionally well on this cut and Chris Wood plays a fluttering sax that's still more icing on this scrumptious cake.

On their summer tour of England, Traffic proved that they can rock and roll with the best of them when they want to. "Light Up or Leave Me Alone" is written and sung by Jim Capaldi, who is otherwise an invisible man in the revamped band, and it features a beautifully-phrased, watery guitar by Winwood. Gordon and bassist Rick Grech collaborated on "Rock & Roll Stew," another straight-faced guitar dominated number which serves once again to exhibit the versatility of this man Winwood.

"Many A Mile To Freedom" commences with majestic chords of electric piano and crisp guitar, which then go on to sketch patterns colored with the pastels of Wood's flute. All of which paints a vivid background for strikingly sensual images: "And together we melt like the river and together we melt like the snow."

I've mentioned Chris Wood a great deal here even though he doesn't actually play a large part in the performance of these songs. In that sense, however, he is the unsung man of the band for it is his contributions which impart so much of the unique character to the Traffic sound. When he plays, as he does so enchantingly on "Rainmaker," I've no doubt he could coax the rain to fall. This final cut progresses leisurely until, in the final third, guitar moves in to drive the song up and out.

John Barleycorn Must Die was not only a culmination of what had gone before but also a model from which to work in the future. The Low Spark of High Heeled Boys explores the subtleties inherent in Traffic's music and is most fulfilling in doing so. Most important of all though, it begins to reveal the infinite potential of Traffic, making the promise of what's to come something to look forward to with real pleasure.

Arctic Cats Nip Redmen 5-3

by Dave Clark

The University of Vermont Catamounts won a crucial game over the Redmen of Massachusetts at Amherst last Friday night. If the Cats had not won this game their playoff hopes would have dimmed considerably.

The key for the Vermont win was the superb goal-tending of Steve Eckerson. Steve stopped 41 shots overall and 15 in the final period as the Redmen put the pressure on.

Vermont got four goals in, despite being outshot 15 to 9. The first goal was scored by Ted Youta at 6:48 with assists going to Sam Simmons and Wally MacKinnon. Ted upst a pair of Redmen defenses and put a wrist shot past the glove side of Pat Flaherty. Other Vermont scorers in the game were Chris Miller, Fred Hunt and Ted Castle. This gave the Cats 4-1 lead but the game was far from over.

In the second period Pat Keenan, that hated, but good hockey player got an unassisted goal at 9:17 of the stanza. Ted Castle got his second goal of the night and gave Vermont a 5-2 lead late in period with assists going to Brad Cooke and Patty Wright.

The third period was filled with penalties as each team got four. The last goal for UMass came on a power play with Roger Malaise off for cross checking. The play was an odd one as Flaherty, the goalie got an assist with Riley scoring the goal.

Vermont's play during penalty situations was outstanding and one of the big reasons for the Cats win which made them 6-2 in Division II behind Mass 10-1 and Bowdoin 6-0.

The alumni game on Saturday afternoon was a good time for everyone including this reporter. The game was won by the Varsity 8-1 as Dave Reese stuck out on defense (that was not meant as a complement Dave).

The game by the second period for the Varsity was on the bag along with half of the audience. This "contest" was simply fun with money being raised for the Friends of Vermont Hockey scholarship fund.

The Cats finally got on the scoreboard as they pulled not only the goalie but the waterbury three cheerleaders and a wino to help with their "Power play".

The Cats win over the University of New Hampshire on Wednesday night was Vermont's best all around game of the season. The defense was tremendous, the checking was hard and Steve Eckerson played a fantastic game in goal.

They came out with a roar in the first period as they got a total of three goals. Leading the attack for Vermont was Chris Miller who got two of the Cats goals. Fred Hunt got the first score of the night with assists going to Pat Wright and Ted Castle. Vermont dominated the entire contest with good passing excellent penalty killing.

The second period was less than five minutes old when Sam Simmons made the score 5-0 as he stole the puck from a New Hampshire defenseman and put a wrist shot past the stick of the UNH goalie. Bob Hodde's score on the penalty shot was the last score of the contest.

Vermont will play Colby tonight at 7:30 at Gutterson Field House.

UVM Leaves UMass High And Dry

Many cat owners insist cats cannot tolerate the water but I think they would have a hard time convincing Coach Les Leggett and the Aquacats of that fact.

Thru sheer determination and hard practice, the Cats have compiled an impressive 4-0 record, the latest notch being added this past Saturday with their drenching of U. Mass.

Coach Leggett, assisted by Dick Szabo and Paul Reinhardt, have molded the squad into a formidable team. Coach Leggett said, "This is the best squad I've ever coached. They have matured very fast, have a lot of talent and are very versatile."

On Saturday the Cats were led by senior Dan Macomber, junior Bruce Willard and freshman Dave Phelan. Each posted double wins.

Dave Phelan of Morristown, New Jersey swam the 200-yard freestyle in 1:54.8, setting a new record for freshman. He also won the 500-yard freestyle.

Bruce Willard from Leominster, Mass. Picked up quick wins in the 50 and the 100-yard freestyle events. He easily bested Jim Blaisdell in the 10 lap feature event.

Macomber, leader of the diving team and captain of the squad, easily outscored his opponents to tag wins in the 1 meter and the 3 meter diving events. His teammate Doug Piche placed second in the 1 meter competitions.

The biggest challenges are yet to come. The Aquacats have yet to meet St. Lawrence, Norwich and Connecticut. Coach Leggett predicted the Coast Guard Academy, which we play this Wednesday February 2, might be tough.

but remained confident his team would win. "It is hard to predict the outcome of each meet," he said, "it all depends on the depth of each team, we're up against."

By far the most important game within the next two weeks will be the contest with Connecticut on February 12. This will be a grudge match between these two teams. Last year the Huskies stole the show with a twelve point win over the Cats. UVM will be out to show that the Cats can swim better than dogs.

Whittaker's Wit

by Ken Whittaker

Every once in awhile, I like to leave the Sports arena and concentrate on the more violent and explosive political arena. (sung to the tune of I Can't Get No Satisfaction).

Since this is an election year, it is expected that a multitude of candidates for the high office will be popping out of the woodwork everywhere. Such a variety makes it very difficult to distinguish any certain candidates, so I have decided to make it a little easier all around.

Therefore, I have done some researching and come-up with the little publicized campaign theme songs for the various candidates.

The first tune is for Senator George McGovern (sung to the tune of Bye Bye Miss America Pie)

Bye bye to the Presidency
I'm going to New Hampshire to win the first primary
But J. Edgar Hoover's looking funny at me

Saying this will be the day that you fry
Saying this will be the day that you fry
Next we remember Eugene McCarthy (sung to the tune of Cherish)

Foolish is the word I use to tell you my hopes of election in '72
I don't know how many times I wish
I hadn't tried
I don't know how many times I wish that I had died
I don't know how many times I still wish it could be someone else who got so mortified.

Frontrunner Muskie's song relies heavily on his Congressional record (sung to the tune of I Can't Get No Satisfaction).

I have passed bills, for pollution
Now I'd like some, restitution
When I'm driving round the states, and a man comes on the radio telling me more and more how he's going to end the war
I'm in trouble
Oh no no.

HHH should have his turn (sung to the tune of House Of The Rising Sun)

There is a place, the Capitol
It's found in Washington
And it's been the dream of many a has-been
And God, I know, I'm one.

And finally, we have the big man himself, who really doesn't need a song to achieve notoriety (sung to the tune of The Halls of Montezuma)

I'm going to Key West, Florida
Maybe California too
And if I do end up short on time
Camp David sure will do
I'm getting tired of that Big White House
And the problems of the nation
I'd like to stay the President
To continue my vacation.

The Green Machine

To many students, the question is: What is rugby? First, you take the roughness of football, add the sophistication of soccer and then mix the strategy of lacrosse: the end product is rugby. This game requires people who love a contact sport but have the finesse of a soccer player who knows how to pass and kick at the right time. This may sound very complex but it is an easy game to learn.

Rugby at UVM was born in the fall semester of 1969. It was started by a man from Burlington, Vt., Bob Manchester. He had played it in his undergraduate years and carried on in his law school years. Having resided in Burlington as a lawyer for Lismann and Lismann, Bob met some students from UVM and started an interest in this relatively unknown sport. In those days UVM played clubs like Tufts, Boston Rugby Club, and Town of Mt. Royal from Montreal. This spring the UVM Rugby Club will face Dartmouth College, University of Mass, Westmont (a team which played in the Canadian Rugby Championship Games) Norwich University and the Montreal Irish who took 2nd place in the Canadian Class A Rugby Championship Games. From the schedule you can see that UVM has gained respect in the rugby world. Since its conception to its sixth season, (we play every fall and spring) the UVM Rugby Club has earned the name of THE GREEN MACHINE. This name was given to them by the Norwich Rugby Club—a team well known for its hard-nose playing.

You may have noticed that the Rugby organization at UVM is called a club. There is a logical reason for this. As a club the rugby people enjoy very distinct advantages. First, we have no eligibility rules. Secondly, as a club we are self-organized, self-governed, and self-supporting. And third; we schedule our own games and play when we want to.

If you have any interest at all, please be at the UVM Rugby Club meeting on Tuesday, February 8th at 7:30 in Marsh Lounge-Billings Center.

Ski Team Five Trophies Richer

by Walley Johnson
Three University of Vermont ski jumpers turned weight lifters last weekend, hauling home nearly all of the hardware from the Norge Ski Jumping meet held near Chicago, Ill.

Peter Kongli, Martin Grimmes and Berni Wells representing the UVM Outing Club won the team trophy for the best showing by three jumpers. Kongli won the individual A jumping, the trophy for the longest jump (55.5 meters), the trophy for the best form (18 of a possible 20 points) and a gold medal as the outstanding skier in the meet.

Grimmes finished seventh in the A competition while Wells brought home a trophy as the fourth place finisher in the A competition.

The three UVM jumpers defeated a team of skiers from the Swedish National team in the competition, on a basis of points.

Wells tied a pair of Swedish skiers in a jumpoff with a leap of 55 meters and Grimmes jumped 54 meters.

Kongli was the jumpoff winner and has not been beaten in three competitions thus far this season.

UVM To Host Military College

On Saturday, February 5, at 2:00 P.M. the UVM Gym club will host the Royal Military College gymnasts of Canada. The gymnastic meet should be a special treat to all those hockey and basketball fans who care for a little spice as a dedicated fan to UVM sports.

Nine days and nights at the fast-paced World University Winter Games, a major event in the sports Capitals of the world, are now to be held not only in the United States, but in an area very close to the University of Vermont, Lake Placid.

For information on ticket prices, see next week's Cynic.

The UVM Club has outclassed the gymnasts of Canada for the past two years. This Saturday, come and enjoy the beauty and perfection of gymnastics at the Patrick Gymnasium. There is no admission charge.

Vermont's Cochranes Compete At Sapporo In Olympics

by Tom Fairis

This past week at Sapporo, several Vermonters known personally to some of us, and by reputation to most of us did their thing. Bobby, Marilyn, and Barbara Cochran used their best to win the downhill and Giant Slalom races.

The first race was the women's downhill. The conditions were good, and despite the criticism that the upper portion was more of a giant slalom, the course was well prepared. In the race Marilyn placed twentieth, behind first place winner Marie Theresa Nadig of Switzerland. Barbara was not entered in this race, but Susan Corrock of Washington did take third for the U.S. Although she was far down the list, Marilyn did have a good run, coming in only two seconds after the lead time, but as those who follow skiing know, these races are won not in seconds but in hundredths of seconds.

Bobby finished eighth in the men's downhill. The conditions of the hill were almost identical to the ones for the women's downhill, and starting eighteenth was not the ideal position. The course was beginning to get rut filled from the other racers and the skis did not bite into the snow as well. But despite these handicaps Bobby came out very well. What made his eighth place standing even more outstanding was the fact he had a sore ankle which had to be taped before the race. That he was able to do so well is a mark of his determination and skill.

The latest race has been the women's Giant Slalom, held on Monday. That day it had snowed two feet, and the conditions were so terrible, the Japanese Army had to clear off the snow before the race. But the snow kept falling all day. Those racers who had the opportunity to race first had a distinct advantage. The move snow that came, the slower the course was. However this was not the only problem; the persistent snow hampered vision. The snowfall was so heavy the skiers had a difficult time seeing their way from one gate to another. In this race the best the U.S. could do was an eleventh place finish. It was won for us by Barbara Cochran. Her time was 1:33.16. Marilyn had a time of 1:35.27 and finished far down the list.

The U.S. does not have much to look forward to in the next couple of races. With only one race left in the women's

Beaudoin Claims New Constitution Is Not A Move For More Power

by Jeri Covey

A new constitution for the Student Association is being drafted. This proposed constitution would bring together the Student Association, Fraternity Forum, Panhellenic Council, and the Inter Residence Association into a viable combination.

In an interview with Gene Beaudoin, President of SA, he said that now there are four different governing bodies on campus, none of which are as strong and as efficient as they can be. The purpose of the merger would be to bring these groups together for the advantage of the students. As the present situation stands, there is much duplication of effort by the different governments, and little communication between the governing bodies and the students and between the bodies themselves.

Gene reiterated that the merger is not a move by SA to gain more power, but is for the advantage of everyone. He said that on the contrary, the merger would cut down on the power of the SA per se because of the poor representation of some groups in the Senate because of lack of attendance. The merger is expected to increase attendance at the Senate meetings. Gene also hopes that the merger will do away with some of the bureaucracy of the student governments, the situation appears now to be "much government and little efficiency."

The proposal started in September when Gene Beaudoin and representatives of the other student governments met to discuss changes to help the students.

At the time, a flat merger of the four governments was considered. But since that time it has become apparent the individual bodies all have their specific needs and interests. The proposed constitution would have these interests served by using a caucus format in which the Senators representing different special interest, like the Greeks or the dormitories, would meet separately for part of the time during the Senate meeting to talk about their particular problems and interests.

Students Plead Poverty. Request VPIRG Refunds

by Jim Judd

This week in Marsh Lounge in Billings Center volunteers from the Vermont Public Interest Research Group, (V.P.I.R.G.) will be on hand to give refunds to those students who have been billed and paid their VPIRG fund, and who request this refund of three dollars.

Last semester in a drive to establish VPIRG in this state volunteers collected between 3600 and 4000 signatures from undergraduate students, this was approximately 58 % of the student body.

This semester when bills were paid either before or during registration, it was discovered that about 10% of the entire student body didn't pay the fund as billed.

As a result now if the number of students who ask for refunds bring the percentage of students who favor VPIRG below 50% of the student body, the organization will be forced to collect donations on their own, which would prove time consuming and would prolong the establishment of this much needed organization. Last semester it was passed by the Board of Trustees to allow VPIRG to bill students, because it was felt that a majority of students favored it.

When this article went to press on Monday afternoon there were approximately 28 refunds given out. Of these refunds 44% stated they needed the money because they had a lack of funds. One individual stated that he needed the three dollars back because he was broke, but that he spends at least five dollars per week on cigarettes. It appears to be a matter of priorities with many people. Also 28% requested refunds because they didn't like the manner in which they were billed. And another 28% wanted refunds for various other reasons.

It should be stressed that (continued on page six)

New Student Teaching Program Developed

by Jeri Covey

The College of Education at the University of Vermont is in the process of making many changes in its format. In responding to a new idea of "Program Approval", the College has developed a new program of student teaching. This program centers in public schools, which combine the student teacher's field training with offerings of undergraduate courses in education.

The Program Approval Approach to Teacher Education and Certification was adopted by the Vermont State Board of Education in 1967. The approach was not to regulate or dictate the course requirements for teacher certification, but rather to generate improvements and new ideas in the preparation of teachers.

The new UVM program of student teaching is a result of the "Program Approval" approach. The students are like "interns in teacher hospitals" according to Dean Corrigan of the College of Education.

This semester there are seventeen Juniors at the Washington West School District and nineteen Seniors at the Union 32 District in Montpelier participating in the program. All of the students (continued on page six)

Vermont Legislators Leave Abortion Reform Controversy To Courts

by Fred Ginsberg

In the past few months the abortion controversy has come to a peak in the Vermont courts. Many recommendations, reform bills and amendments have been discussed and debated.

The Champlain Valley Zero Population Growth chapter has taken a major role in trying to change the present abortion laws. The present statute exempts the women from prosecution for obtaining an abortion, but not the physicians. The ZPG chapter believes that this law discriminates against both women and physicians.

In April, 1971, the chapter filed their case against the local State's Attorney, and the Attorney General. After much legal procedure, the judge dismissed the lawsuit in December for failure to present a controversy or case under the present Vermont declaratory judgement act.

ZPG's lawyers, in their second lawsuit against the State's Attorney and the Attorney General, represented a young pregnant Vermont woman seeking an abortion, and her physician. At the pre-trial hearing, Judge Hill entered a pro firma dismissal of the lawsuit to hasten it to the Vermont Supreme Court.

A hearing was arranged in a special session on January 10. On January 14 the decision was heard. The Burlington Free Press headlines read, "State's Abortion Law Ruled Invalid". Since the woman challenged the law on the grounds that it invaded her privacy rights, and her physician felt an abortion was necessary to preserve her mental and physical health, the judges resolved that the present situation is subject to the charge of hypocrisy, the present law is not regulative, but prohibitive, and that the protection of women is a legitimate legislative concern. Meanwhile, in Montpelier, the House Judiciary Committee was trying to devise an abortion bill.

The Judiciary Committee labored on a bill to present to the Vermont legislature. At the same time, hospital administrators and physicians tried to formulate facilities to handle needs. The Committee presented their bill to the Legislature on January 26. The bill would allow abortion on demand up to the 12th week of pregnancy, and for medical reasons after that time.

On January 26, the House spent the entire day dissolving ten months work by the Judiciary Committee. They quickly eliminated the 12 week clause of abortion on demand. Three other amendments were voted down, and then the House Speaker placed the question before the House for approval, or rejection; they voted no. After an abortive attempt to move the bill to the Health and Welfare Committee, the House adjourned.

In the meantime, the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, at the Medical Center secured the board of trustees that abortions would be ordered only in medical emergencies. If the recommendations are accepted, an estimated 800 women will receive abortions per year. In 1971, approximately 1000 women traveled to New York for legal abortions, many referred by a Burlington clinic.

Bill Passed Allowing Sale Of Beer On Campus

by Mary Jo DeHibbom

On Thursday, February 3, the Vermont State Senate voted approval of a bill which calls for the allowance of the sale of beer on college campuses in Vermont. The measure passed on a 19-9 roll call vote. The following State Senators were opposed to the bill: Senators John Boylan, R-Orleans-Essex; Olin Gay, R-Windor; Arthur Gibb

R-Addison; Margaret Hammond, R-Windor; Madeline Harwood, R-Bennington; George Morse, R-Caledonia; John O'Brien, D-Chittenden-Grand Isle; Andrew Orzel, R-Rutland; Fred Westphal, R-Lamoille.

Senator Harwood offered the following reason for her opposition to the bill: "I do not feel we should encourage (young people) to drink." Senator Harwood indicated that she had approved the bill providing for the eighteen-year-old majority last year, as well as measures permitting eighteen-year-olds to drink.

Senator Morse voiced this opinion concerning the issue: "Parents are not sending their children to college to drink. I feel that this bill will be an inducement to drink for those who have not done it before."

The bill would allow any post-secondary school to make an application to sell alcoholic beverages to students who are eighteen years or older, faculty, employees, and guests. In 1971, St. Michael's College requested that it be granted a liquor license. However, the Liquor Control Board refused to issue such a license. Supported by the University of Vermont, and Vermont State College, St. Michael's related the decision in the courts. No (continued on page six)

President Andrews said this week there would be no tuition increase this year. See next week's Cynic.

Campus Ministry Moves From St. Anselm's To Hillel

The Protestant-sponsored Campus Ministry at the University of Vermont moved its offices this week from the Episcopal St. Anselm's Chapel on Redstone Campus to the Jewish Hillel Foundation Building at 389 College Street.

The primary reason for the move, according to the Rev. John D. Perry Jr., Protestant campus minister, is that the Episcopal facilities will no longer be available to the Protestants. St. Paul's Cathedral, whose building was destroyed by fire last March, is planning to take over St. Anselm's facilities in a few weeks. St. Paul's will occupy St. Anselm's until their new Cathedral is constructed near Battery Park.

It is estimated that construction will take at least a year and a half. During that time St. Paul's clergy and office staff will be housed at St. Anselm's Chapel, and St. Paul's congregation will use St. Anselm's for Sunday services.

A secondary reason for the move, Mr. Perry said, was that the Campus Ministry could no longer afford the rent at St. Anselm's. He said that the UVM ministry was under pressure from the New England United Ministries in Higher Education, which provides about a third of their budget, to reduce expenditures for rent. The UVM ministry was spending over twice as much as any of the 21 New England campus ministries for rent.

All of the campus ministry programs and meetings which had been held at St. Anselm's Chapel will be transferred to the new quarters in the basement of the Hillel Building, which is located a block and a half down the hill from Waterman Building, between WDOT radio station and TEP fraternity house. The Protestant ministry and the Episcopal ministry will continue to jointly sponsor the Sunday worship service at St. Anselm's, however.

The Campus Ministry had appealed earlier this year to the University for space, citing precedents both here and elsewhere. For several years the Campus Ministry rented space in what is now the Mathematics Building, and at UNH, for instance, the University provides free office and meeting space for religious centers. However, the administration turned down their request on the grounds that they were in the process of appealing to the legislature for "desperately needed" classroom space.

In 1964 the Episcopal Church, under the direction of the then Chaplain Donald Boyer, constructed St.

Anselm's Chapel on land rented from the University on Redstone Campus. Father Boyer invited the former Protestant Chaplain, the Rev. Richard Leideberg, to rent offices at St. Anselm's, and that arrangement prevailed until this week.

The campus ministry budget of $15,000 a year is supported by students, faculty and staff contributions, and large grants from six Protestant denominations: the Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Unitarians, and Lutherans.

Mr. Perry said that office hours at the new Campus Ministry center will be Tuesday through Friday afternoons from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m., and other times by appointment. For the time being, entrance to the basement offices will be through the Hillel quarters on the main floor, but a separate entrance at the rear of the building is planned for the future.

The campus minister emphasized that the Protestant groups were "extremely grateful" to the Hillel organization for making the space available to them. He said that he is hoping for contributions from faculty of used furniture and rugs to help complete the decoration of the basement.

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Is Jesus God Or Man?

"There is a young man who was born in an obscure village, the child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another village. He worked in a carpenter shop until he was thirty, and then for three years he was an itinerant preacher. He never owned a home. He never had a family. He never went to college. He never put his foot inside a big city. He never traveled two hundred miles from the place where he was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompany greatness. He has no credentials but himself."

"While he was still a young man, the tide of public opinion turned against him. His friends ran away. He was turned over to his enemies. He went through the mockery of a trial. He was nailed to a cross between two thieves. While he was dying, his executioners gambled for the only piece of property he had on earth, and that was his coat."

"When he was dead, he was laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend."

"Nineteen centuries have come and gone, and today he is the central figure of the human race and the leader of the column of progress."

"I am far within the mark when I say that all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever sailed, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, have not affected the life of man upon this earth as has that One Solitary Life."

Some of man's noblest acts and some of his most horrible atrocities have been done in the name of this man, Jesus. Some people claim that he was God. Some claim that he is alive even today. If you are not sure what you think, and would like to hear what other people believe about this man, join us at St. Ann's Chapel, Redstone Campus, this Monday night, Feb. 14, at 7 p.m. This is the second of a three-part series. Join us as we try to find out, "Who was Jesus?" and "Why does he matter?"

Job Prospects

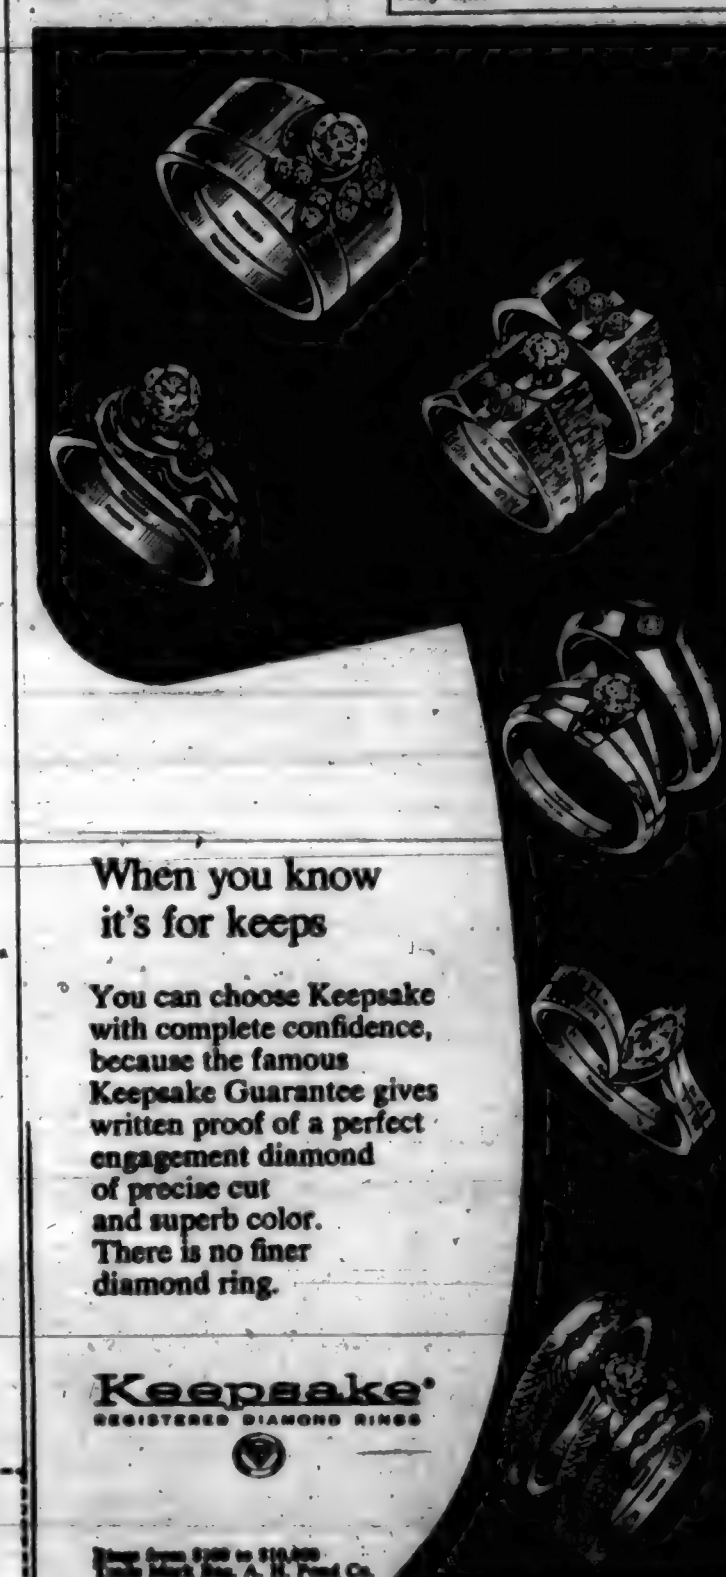

For Seniors

Graduating seniors looking for permanent employment and any students in need of part-time or summer jobs can receive free assistance from the Office of Career Planning and Placement, located in 224 Waterman. Mr. Douglas O. Hanau, director of the program, anticipates that more than 60 employers from New England and eastern New York will visit the University this semester, and information is received every day concerning immediate and summer job openings.

Seniors can qualify for interviews with personnel representatives from various large industries by registering with the Office of Career Planning and Placement and arrangements for interviews must be made one week in advance. The schedule for the week of February 21st to February 25th includes representatives from Mutual of New York Life Insurance Company, McGraw Hill Book Company, Mobil Oil Corporation, General Motors, and the United Aircraft Corporation. There are openings in the fields of agriculture, business, accounting, mathematics, liberal arts, dairy science, and other areas. Any student may inquire about part-time or summer job openings by calling 656-3450 or by visiting the Office of Career Planning and Placement in 224 Waterman.

C&T To Present William's Play

The Department of Communication and Theatre will present what is universally considered as Tennessee Williams' most powerful play, A Streetcar Named Desire. The 1947 play was awarded the 'Critic's Circle' and Pulitzer Prize. In Streetcar, Williams combines music, setting, brilliant characterization and a dialogue of heightened intensity to enrich the contrast between the crudeness and vulgarity of modern society and the vulnerability of Southern Aristocracy so that it is a poetic, romantic tragedy. Here also is the essence of Williams as a dramatist, philosopher, and psychologist.

Streetcar is directed by junior Jeff Wilson with Diane Lawrence as Blanche, Nancy Rounds as Stella and Leon Martell as Stanley Kowalski. Harold Mitchell is portrayed by Michael Levine. Cast members include Virginia Pender, David Sherman, Steve Kelly, Eric Raymond, Susan Kivnick, Richard Kifer, Shelley Stevens, and Cate McKegney.

The production runs 6 nights from March 1 through 6 with certain time for all performances at 8:00 p.m. There will be a reception during intermission. Admission is $1.00 with UVM ID and $2.00 at general admission. The Arena Theatre box office will open Wednesday, Feb. 16, for reservations call 656-2094 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. ALL RESERVATIONS MUST BE PAID FOR 24 HOURS BEFORE THE PRODUCTION.

Increase In UVM Med School

The University of Vermont College of Medicine, joining in a national effort to train more physicians, has announced it will increase the size of its incoming class next fall from 75 to 83 students.

This is the third such increase in the class size at the college in recent years. For many years incoming classes numbered 50. In the fall of 1967 this was increased to 55 and in 1968 it was boosted to 75, so that total college enrollment now close to 300.

The increase next fall, which will be continued annually, will raise the total enrollment in four years to approximately 332.

Dr. William H. Luginbuhl, dean of the College of Medicine, pointed out that the college, by increasing its enrollment, will be participating in the Health Professions Capitation Program of the Bureau of Health Manpower Education, National Institutes of Health. Through this participation the college will be eligible for an annual federal grant. While the sum is not yet known, it is expected to be approximately $500,000.

This and the earlier increases in enrollment have been made possible because of the completion of the $11.9 million Given medical college building, the final and largest phase of which went into use in the fall of 1968. College of Medicine officials now say that clinical teaching facilities, rather than laboratory or classroom space, are the controlling factor in further expansion of the college.

Academic Fellow Program

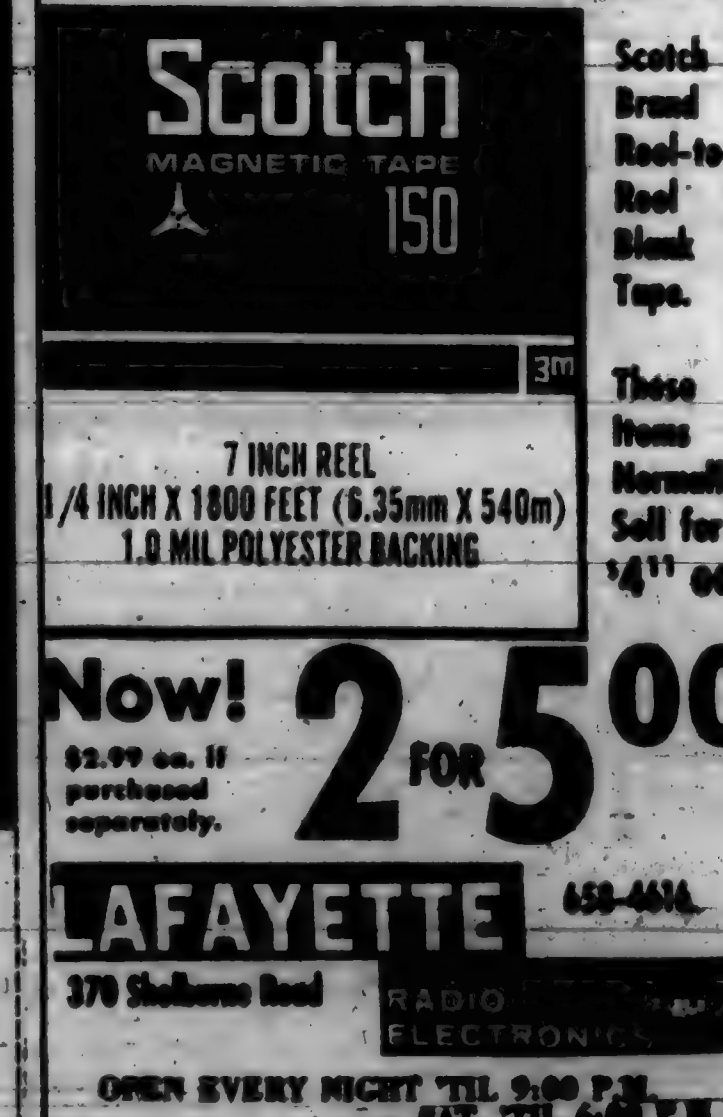

The College of Education's Academic Fellow Program of student advisors will hold a recruitment meeting for all interested sophomores in the College of Education on Tuesday, February 15, 1972 at 7:00 p.m. in the Wilks-Davis-Wing Lounge.

The Academic Fellow program originated in the fall of 1971 as a pilot project to deal with some of the inadequacies and problems of communication within the faculty advising system. There are presently thirteen juniors and one senior involved in the program, which has met with great success and approval.

Winter Week '72

Three years ago this University enjoyed a well deserved reputation for an excellent social life. This was largely due to a strong Greek system and the outstanding and unique institution of Kake Walk, a yearly event which almost all students—not just fraternities and sororities—supported in overwhelming numbers. "America's Oldest Winter Carnival" was the one annual event at U.V.M. which produced a rallying spirit and unified feeling among the students.

But alas, Kake Walk was abolished in November 1969. With its disappearance, much of the gay party atmosphere of every weekend at U.V.M. began to vanish. The two successive Winter Film Festivals were of limited appeal, and the financial fiasco of last year needs no further explanation. Last semester at U.V.M. was noted by many for its extreme dullness and lack of social activity: very few concerts, very few fraternity parties, very few students sticking around on the weekends. It seemed that perhaps, having fun and enjoying one's self was going out of style.

In a startling reversal of the trend of the past two years, an imaginative group of people have scheduled "Winter Week" at the University of Vermont for February 18-26. Although perhaps one single weekend, along the lines of Kake Walk, well planned, and stocked with attractive events, would be preferable, Winter Week definitely deserves a chance. For nostalgic seniors reminiscing over Kake Walk, Winter Week may not be appealing. But to freshmen, sophomores and juniors who never saw the old Winter Carnival, the week's varied activities offer everybody a chance for relaxation and enjoyment. And if the new festivities meet with success, next year will afford an excellent opportunity to modify, correct, add and eliminate where needed. Perhaps we can all look forward to the time when levity will again be in style.

Coffee-house At UVM

There are many who'll say that coffee-houses don't make it in the present day environment of rock and blues concerts which tend to have an universal appeal for our generation. Every day, across this nation, thousands flock to the concert halls for a few hours of the best while sitting often-times in uncomfortable positions.

Yet, there's a group of UVM students who have worked diligently since the fall semester. Their efforts have been devoted to the creation of a coffee-house at Billings Center, called simply "The Roundhouse."

Last week The Roundhouse opened for this semester with a program of folk singing and blues music. The performers are not professionals, and don't get paid for their time. They play to entertain.

There have been other coffee-houses on this campus, and all seemed to fold very quickly.

Here's hoping that the present effort by The Roundhouse organizers will be a successful one, so the coffee-house will become a part of the University scene.

1000 Women Expected

Abortion Action Conference In Boston On Friday

To the Editor of the Cynic

A thousand women are expected to attend the 2nd National Women's Abortion Action Conference scheduled for Boston University February 11-13. The conference will bring women together from around the country to plan a continuing strategy to win repeal of all laws that restrict abortion.

The conference is sponsored by the Women's National Abortion Action Coalition (WONAAC), which has affiliates in 72 regional areas.

WONAAC was formed at a founding conference last July where 253 organizations came to pool their efforts in the continuing attempt to legalize abortion. As the women's movement has developed over the past few years, the right of a woman to decide when and if she will bear children has become a key focus in the struggle for women's rights.

An Observation

By Steven Rice
A letter appears on this page today informing us of a new coalition, intending to "democratize" the university. Hailing itself appropriately enough as "The Coalition for a Democratic University," it, invites us to attend its first meeting on Feb. 16.

The coalition is obviously signed at the board of trustees' failure to reappoint political science professor, Michael J. Parenti. It claims the board is "an all-powerful governing body answerable to no one."

And, it warns us: "By failing to question the structure of power at this

The formation of WONAAC enabled women to pull together the many statewide efforts towards abortion law repeal into... a national organization which could move with concerted strength.

The February 11-13 conference is open to all interested women. The proceedings will open with a public rally on Friday, February 11, at 7:30 P.M. Speakers will include prominent women from across the country. Men are invited to attend the conference as observers.

Strategy sessions will continue on Saturday and Sunday, beginning at 10:00 a.m. in Hayden Hall at Boston University. These sessions are open to women only. Through discussion in workshops and plenaries, the conference will outline a plan of action for the coming months to continue this national assault on university we surrender our rights as members of this community and legitimize the power of the board of trustees."

Despite the obvious sincerity with which the letter is written, some questions should be considered by this coalition:

What do you mean when you call for "democratization" of the university? Does this mean if a point-of-view isn't agreeable with yours, that you will fight to make it agreeable?

What will be "an equitable system of governance?" Wouldn't it be in the best interests of everyone if you were to present a concrete plan for such an equitable system before the meeting?

abortion laws. The conference will become a launching pad for a federal bill to be introduced by Congresswoman Bella Abzug (D-NY) which would nullify all restrictive state laws. Workshops will discuss such areas as challenging the abortion laws through the courts; working in referenda on the ballot; setting up abortion referral services; combating attacks from the Right to Life and other anti-abortion organizations; making demonstrations as means of making public opinion visible.

This national conference comes at a time when there has never been more activity and controversy around abortion. Recently, Right to Life groups have seriously challenged the liberalized New York State abortion law in the courts. A

Age Of The Comic

Indeed, the board of trustees represent to many a "power answerable to no one." If this is proven so, will you, once again, have something concrete to offer?

My questions are admittedly unfair in one respect. But, there have been all too many meetings, all too many coalitions, that have resorted to tactics of mud-slinging, false allegations, and "mob" psychology. These tactics, admittedly, arouse "emotions" and spur on action. But, what result do they attain?

There were signs of these tactics last December when the phrase "power to the students" ran rampant across this campus. Let's hope the same tactic isn't employed on Feb. 16.

Letters To The Editor
Homosexuals Want Dignity; Seek Fair Treatment Now

Dear Editor:

I was very pleasantly surprised to see a letter published in the Cynic regarding the Gay problem. I was even happier to see an immediate response to this letter, until I read it. I feel that you made a mockery of the entire problem and did not really give your answer the thought that it deserved. Your so called "Stand" seems to be quite conservative. As I read it I could not help equating your attitude towards homosexuals with the attitudes of racists towards Blacks. You stated that it was "equally self-righteous to keep abuse upon those who cannot tolerate homosexuality as it was to condemn it." In fact, you are stating that homosexuals should not become upset when they are persecuted because they should not be intolerant of other people's intolerance. This is absurd. Minority groups must work to stamp out the hatred that is felt towards them and this can only be done by actively changing the ideas of those that hate them. You say that people's attitudes can't be reversed overnight, but I feel that we must try to change them as quickly as possible. Rather than changing attitudes, you suggested that society, who is the cause of the entire homosexual problem, send these people far away—like to Antarctica. I don't want to go to Antarctica, or Siberia—do you? This seemed to me very much like the racist cry—send them back to Africa. I expected more of a serious stand than that, Mr. Editor. Unless you honestly believe that all gays should be banished, I do not think that you should print it.

What you fail to realize is that homosexuals are people who are really no different than anyone else. We do not ask much from the straight society in which we are forced to live. All that is needed is a bit of understanding and acceptance. I do not expect every person to fully comprehend my situation because most have been taught that homosexuals are sick, criminal, and perverted. These are three fairly strong labels which truly cannot be spread overnight.

As you pointed out, people are not usually homosexual by choice. I cannot personally think of anyone whom I know that would not rather be a heterosexual. However, this is easier said than done. In the meantime, if society would send the persecution of people who are in a situation that they did not choose to be in and cannot easily get out of, there would be a lot more stable homosexuals. Gay Lib movements have sprung up across the country in an attempt to make people aware of the homosexual lifestyle. Education is the first step towards gaining acceptance. My fellow homosexual who asked you to take a stand probably was looking to see if the Cynic and UVM was accepting a silent minority of students which has not had any recognition up to this point. All we ask is the freedom to be ourselves with dignity. You, Mr. Editor, should not make a joke of something which is a very serious problem to many. All of the wisecracks and nasty comments and lack of compassion have placed many gay people in the situation that they are presently in. If human beings were more humane to each other, the world would be a much happier place. I hope that you will think seriously the next time you decide to make a mockery of another human being's problem.

Sincerely,
Member, Class of 1972

Francisco. Solidarity demonstrations were held in Paris, Rome, London, across Canada, in Australia and New Zealand. These demonstrations united many groups and individuals who had never worked together before. Individuals such as Abigail Van Buren, Kate Millett, Julian Bond, Gloria Steinem, Benjamin Spock, and Neil King, to name a few.

Recent public opinion polls show that these demonstrations did represent the majority of the American people. The President's Commission on Population Growth and the American Future has published a survey indicating that more than 50% of the population is in favor of making abortion a matter between the woman and her physician. It is this public opinion that WONAAC seeks to organize into a political force for change.

The Boston University Student Government is hosting the WONAAC conference and has allocated over $2,500 to cover arrangements and publicity expenses.

Letters to the editor are welcomed. All letters that exceed 200 words are subject to condensation. Deadline is Monday at 12 p.m. for Thursday's publication.

Attention, comic fans! Before beginning this week's hero, I wish to inform you of a feature of this column which will allow you, the reader, to participate. If anyone has a question about comics or super heroes of today or yesterday, send them to Comic Master, Cynic Office, Billings. Every attempt will be made to answer your questions in this column. Now, here comes the hero of the week.

THE AMAZING SPIDER-MAN

One day, a class of students was attending a science demonstration on radioactivity. One of them, Peter Parker, was bitten by a spider that had been exposed to the radiation. The spider died, but his venom affected Peter, giving him the ability to stick to walls, sense danger, and give him the proportionate strength of a spider. Naturally, Peter's first thought was how to cash in on his new powers. First of all, he developed a means of spinning a web (he was a science major). He then devised a costume, went to a television station, and got a job as an announcer. As he left the studio, a thief ran by, and Peter, not wanting to get involved, stood and watched. Then, a couple of days later, Peter's Uncle is killed by the same thief. Blaming himself for his uncle's death, Peter decides to use his powers as a

Thus, Spider-man was born. Since then he has fought many super-villains, including Doctor Octopus, the Vulture, the Green Goblin, Craven the Hunter, and the Kingpin. As Peter he had graduated from high school and gone on to college (still as a science major), lost one girl friend, gained two others, and given up one of them in favor of the other. He has moved into an apartment which he shares with a classmate, and he even bought a motorcycle (which he has since been forced to sell).

One of the reasons for Spider-man's popularity as a hero is his great susceptibility to problems. His aunt, his only living relative, is constantly sick. Peter's girl friend blames Spider-man for her father's death. Peter's boss, J. Jonah Jameson, a newspaper editor, is as "anti-Spider-man" as is possible. Furthermore, Spider-man is currently wanted by the police. Despite all this, Peter keeps swinging (literally) around New York City (a favorite base for Marvel super heroes).

Spider-man is a favorite on many college campuses. He has even been the subject of papers in psychology courses. This just shows that comics are becoming popular everywhere. Join the comic book generation.

NEXT WEEK: He appears from nowhere. He disappears when his job is done. Who is he? What is he? Follow him, for he is... THE PHANTOM STRANGER.

I would not give you love you would probably keep it on a dusty shelf and only once in a while take it out for a walk and show your friends or maybe keep it on the mantle like an old bowling trophy because it can become burdensome carrying the damn thing around with you wherever you went maybe you'd leave it in the booth of a downtown restaurant and somebody would find it and bring it home and ask their kids if they knew how to work it

This same Marine told of a prayer posted in every barracks on Parris Island. "It's a prayer for war. Every night before we went to bed at night at nine o'clock we had to pray that there's be a war, so that the Marine Corps could always be on the move, because that was their job, to fight."

The text of the prayer follows:

Series Ponders Death

Death. What is it? How do I get in touch with my own death? What does it mean? What difference does it make? How does my death relate to my life? What's it like to die? What do you think about when you are dying? Can death be a really positive thing? Would I want to know if I had terminal cancer?

We live in a death-denying culture. Unlike other countries, we isolate our dying relatives, put walls around them, and call them nursing homes—and they convince ourselves that they are happier there. Then when a person dies, we spend untold money on cosmetics and morticians' fees to insure the dead man looks anything but dead. We use myriad euphemisms for things relating to death: we prefer to say that a person "passed on," and death certificates become "Vital Statistics Reports." And yet, every successful movie, novel, or news story seems to include a confrontation with death.

copying with death in the family, etc. The two last sessions will deal with two problems associated with death, with legal and moral overtones: suicide, and euthanasia (or mercy-killing, such as disconnecting mechanical apparatus which is keeping an otherwise dead man (or woman) alive).

This Tuesday, Feb. 15, there will be an introduction to the whole series, with the first session dealing with DENIAL AND AWARENESS OF DEATH. Being used as beginning points for this session, are a tape on various human responses to death, and the excellent film, An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge. The programs begin at 7:00 pm and there will be plenty of time during the sessions and afterwards for coffee and conversation. Everyone in the University community—faculty, staff, students of all colleges—as well as anyone from the greater Burlington community are invited to attend. Come to any one or all the sessions.

Campus Calamities Come Gene's Way

By Linda Kohl
DES MOINES, Iowa (CPS)—Presidential candidate Eugene McCarthy, who in 1968 commanded the support of thousands of young people, said Saturday, January 22, that his campaign on college campuses this year has been "tough going."

"The attitude on campus is one of 'What can we do? What difference does it make? What choice do we have?'" McCarthy said.

The former Minnesota senator, in Iowa for a last-minute swing before the precinct caucuses, blamed both political parties for youth apathy. "The parties so far have tried to blur the issues. In the next six months there should be some sharpening up by all candidates."

McCarthy has been called the most enigmatic man in American politics and his appearance in Des Moines pointed out his peculiar appeal. He is a very low-key speaker, making a speech seem like a living-room conversation and lecturing one of his poems if someone asks him to.

In his hotel suite, visiting with reporters, he speaks quietly and says unpretentious things that make sense but don't make good copy.

He does not act like a man who wants to be president very badly but says his candidacy is "a response"—something one does "when you've been in politics for 20 years and see no one is doing things that need to be done."

McCarthy said his 1968 candidacy was not unlike the biblical situation in which seven women came to a man and said "All we want is your name—we'll give you food and wearing apparel." "But since that time they've all been using me for non-support," he quipped.

"In 1968 we needed someone to say 'I'll be the person around whom you can rally.' I was someone people could rally around, but I need a little more love in '72 than I did in '68."

Although the attitude on campuses has been less than enthusiastic, McCarthy said he expects a return of much of the support he had in 1968. Asked about Iowa Senator Harold Hughes' endorsement of Senator Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, McCarthy remarked that "the generals in my campaign have panicked but the troops haven't."

Muskie is currently serving as a "temporary landing place," McCarthy said. People who are waiting for the issues to emerge are endorsing Muskie until they what the other candidates will do. "Early commitments may mean little to nothing by the time of the convention," he said.

Many of the party workers who supported McCarthy in 1968 have defected to the McGovern organization. McCarthy said he would never urge anyone not to support McGovern but pointed out that there were differences between the two, both of whom are seeking support from liberal party members.

McGovern has not indicated he would challenge the party from the outside if necessary, a pledge McCarthy has made, he said. Also McGovern signed "the non-communist loyalty oath required for the Illinois primary, which McCarthy refused to do."

Are College Students Corrupt?

Arlington Texas (LP)—Changing attitudes of college students and the inflexibility of some American institutions are on a collision course that may pose major problems, warns a University of Texas at Arlington sociologist.

Notable targets of student discontent today are the university system, government and churches, concludes Dr. William A. Stacey after evaluating data from some 7,000 student interviews during the past six years.

"The thing different about the student of today is that the student of yesterday is willing to do something about his ideas," he cautions. "We're talking about two different generations of students," he adds in comparing 1965 and 1970 collegeans. He began the study in 1965 at Mississippi State University and continued it there through 1970.

"The student today doesn't feel the same kind of hangups that the student of, say, five years ago experienced," he said. In the survey, Dr. Stacey found today's students are more concerned with human relations, college administrations, and national and international policy. He discovered today's students appear to be freer of prejudice and increasingly alienated by bureaucracy.

He also found increasing use of alcohol among students, more sexual permissiveness, a decline in religious values and church attendance and a rising percentage who cheat or are aware of cheating in their classes.

He traces campus problems, principally to two factors, "the failure of the administration to bring up the quality of education and to build the student into the administrative structure."

He does see some encouraging signs that three primary institutions—the university system, government and churches—are aware changes are needed and are working to effect them.

Dr. Stacey isn't perturbed about increasing sexual permissiveness, maintaining it does not represent a declining moral standard. "It's not a new morality. It's just more honesty about the morality we've had all along. I think we're finally realizing, both males and females, that sex is not a dirty thing."

LOS ANGELES (CPS)—In a report released recently by the Bank of America, solid waste from large cities was cited as being 37 percent to 60 percent paper. And, says the report, increased recycling of that waste would cut the solid waste explosion by as much as 25 percent.

The five-month-long study also concludes that more industries are taking an interest in recycling. The present recycling level was put at 20 percent. The report cites a National Academy of Sciences recommendation that the nation should be recycling 35 percent of its annual paper consumption by 1985.

The report, however, concludes that few trees would be spared immediately as a result of increased recycling because most paper is made from trees grown specifically for pulp and sawmill by-products.

The paper industry reported $21 billion in net sales in 1970.

where she grew up and once taught school.

She said that she will enter primaries in Florida and North Carolina and plans to run delegates in Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Massachusetts.

Sometimes A Great Notion From Ken Kesey

Cast
Paul Newman
Henry Fonda

Michael Sarrazin
Richard Jaeckel

Screenplay by John Gay, based on the novel by Ken Kesey, music by Henry Mancini, produced by John Foreman, directed by Paul Newman. Rated GP.

Sometimes A Great Notion (Also called Billy and Suzie Go To The Logging Camp) is a film about, you guessed it, logging. The action takes place in Oregon, and concerns the logging family led by Henry Fonda. Along with his sons, he owns and runs a lumber company. They all rise at 4:30 a.m.
(nobody gets up that early), and head for the lumber operations. The problem is, it seems there's a lumberman's strike on. Since Fonda runs his own business, he does not belong to the union. Thus, while most of the loggers stand idle, his family works. Naturally, this causes much resentment against the Fonda family.

Along with this main plot run a couple of subplots. One is the return of Michael Sarrazin, Fonda's son and Newman's half brother. The other subplot concerns Newman's wife (Lee Remick) who, during the film, slowly awakens to the fact that life is not merely a box of toothpicks and that better things lie in store for her elsewhere.

Fonda lives by the motto "Never give an inch." The moral of the film is that this is not always a good idea.
Sometimes it is better to bend to the wind like the reed and survive, rather than resist like the oak and be blown over.
Fonda's credo does not work, for by the end of the film the family tree is completely splintered. One son is dead, Fonda is dead, and both sons' wives have left the household, never to return.

Overall the film is quite well done and is a must-see for all those Forestry 105 people. There are many excellent shots for lumbering operations. Unfortunately, Henry Mancini must have been doing something else when he wrote the music for this film, for it ranks among the worst he has ever written. Fortunately, some of it is drowned out by the sound of chain saws, and it is a welcome respite from his score. The film has much going for it, in spite of its deficiencies; and should be watched for Lee Remick's performance, if for nothing else. —Steve Fendo

J. Geils Band

Music To Freak By

The J. Geils Band, which will be here for winter Weekend, could very well be worth the effort of hauling the tickets, cops, and crowds. The music they play is very fast, and very good, loud Rock and Roll. The most striking thing about them is not their guitar work or lack of syrupy sweet vocals, but it is the harp playing which really makes them worthwhile. The harp playing has been compared to Butterfield and Mayall, however the music is different.
The harp player has the technical ability of both but plays like neither. Primarily they play good Rock and Roll and stand out by virtue of the harp riffs in the songs.

Sapphires Come In Black And White

Sapphire, the opening film in the Lane Series "Black And White," is a top-notch mystery-detective film. If this film is indicative of the rest of the films in this series, this should be one of the best film series run by the Lane office. The film deals with the solving of a murder case. The murdered girl, Sapphire, becomes more interesting as the film unfolds and reveals her past life. The plot becomes more complicated and the list of suspects grows as Detective Superintendent Hazard and Detective Inspector Leary unravel the case.

The main theme of the film is race hatred, for this is the reason Sapphire was killed. The film deals with this subject superbly, never giving in to cliches or trite situations and dialogue. The movie treats the theme quite straightforwardly: the killer felt such intense hatred toward Sapphire that murder was the result.

Sapphire deals with several types of race relations. Once Sapphire finds out she is light-skinned enough to pass for white, she abandons her black friends; once the people who thought she was white find she wasn't, they become angry with the thought of how they were tricked. One of her black boyfriends says he could never marry her because she was half white. Thus Sapphire belonged to neither the white nor the black world.

This movie keeps your interest going in it every minute.
There isn't a dull or boring section in the entire film. The music is also well done and the entire film is excellent.

Masterful Performance By Claudio Arrau

Famed pianist Claudio Arrau captivated a large audience
Thursday night at the University of Vermont's Lane Artists Series in Memorial Auditorium.

His performance consisted of three selections which enabled Arrau to be seen at his best. This master of the keyboard demonstrated his proficiency as he led the audience through various moods ranging from the peaceful and light joy of Beethoven's Sonata quasi una Fantasia in E-flat major to the heavy almost sinister tones of the Sonata in B minor by Liszt.

A combination of facial expressions and the technique of playing with a church-like reverence, leading to a climatic and vehement pounding on the keys, produced an assortment of intense emotions which included joy, sorrow and fear.

The native Chilean evoked a resounding response from the audience and was recalled for five bows. Greatly moved, Arrau added his final emotional touch by placing his hand over his heart in gratitude for the insistent applause after his final selection, Carnival by Schumann.

This famed pianist, who is celebrated on every continent of the globe, clearly demonstrated his artistry and moved us all.

The Go-Between By Losey

This film is one of the latest efforts by one of movie-making's most creative directors, Joseph Losey. He has created an excellent film, tied together with such subtleties of camera work, acting, and musical score that the film flows along. The entire film passes with no glaring breaks to jar the viewer back into realizing he is in a theater, and not watching a small slice of life running its course outside his window.

The film stars Julie Christie and Allan Bates as two people caught up in a love affair that cannot work. Julie Christie is a member of a large aristocratic English family, living about 1900. The clan is run by Julie's parents, who have extensive property holdings and are very wealthy. The film gives us a good view of this type of life. This particular family is remarkable because of the lack of internal strife.
The entire household lives in harmony, broken only at the end of the film when the lovers are caught.

Alan Bates is a farmer who lives alone and owns land that borders on the family's estate. He and Christie are in love, but cannot marry because of the difference in their social positions. This is not because anyone in the film is a snob, but simply because that's the way things were.

Into this situation comes Leo, a boy who has been taken in by the family for a summer holiday. He becomes fond of Christie and Bates, and delivers love letters between them. There is much talk of him being able to cast spells.
People joke with him about it, but he does cast two spells, the results of which are not made clear.

As fine as the acting is, it must take a back seat to the photography and music. The English countryside is photographed with fluid, delicate shots, producing images with all the loving care of an expert landscape painter.
Throughout the film these images convey the feeling of a perfect English summer. And while the characters are traveling over the landscape, the music by Michel Legrand fills the sound track like the winds of summer.

The film works as a unit, with all of the cinematic techniques used reinforcing each other and adding something to the film. There is no redundancy of these techniques that is present in so many films. Everything in the film contributes to it. The Go-Between is an enjoyable film and is well worth the time it takes to see it.

Cats Break Long Losing Streak

by Ken Whitaker

The basketball Catsmounts finally managed to break an eleven game losing streak last Saturday night as they upset a powerful Sienna five. This game was the first win for the Catsmounts since December 8, and improves the dismal season record a little by posting the third win of the season as compared against thirteen losses.

Captain Ray Ortiz did a fine job in leading the team and keeping it together, and George Peredy had his finest night, over for the Cats as he tallied 23 points, hitting on eleven of seventeen from the floor and leading down 12 valuable rebounds.

The Cats, showing an attack that has been a long time in coming, held the opposing club scoreless in the first seven minutes of play, and retiring to the half time locker room sitting on a very secure twenty point lead. However, breaking the habit of the past, the Cats held on during the entire second half, and even managed to increase the margin of victory to twenty-five points as the final buzzer rang, the scoreboard showing 89-64 as the Cats headed for the showers.

The secret of success was simply good playing and a team that finally got it together as Ortiz, Peredy, Nate Reeves, Tyrone Minor, and Bruce Fields all put in some of their finest performances of the season.

The win was a big upset to the club who had dumped the St. Michael's five by almost fifty points just a few weeks ago. It was the St. Michael's club who came back from a twenty point deficit at the half to beat the Catsmounts.

The big surprise of the evening was the Vermont performance against a full court press, which so far the season has somehow been able to completely immobilize them. They not only handled it but handled it well as Peredy was left on many occasions right under the hoop for an easy two-pointer.

Another point which has plagued the Cats all season has been turnovers, but this area of the game improved, just as the shooting average improved, the ball being lost only 12 times, far below the past average of 17 losses per game.

Even the Frosh club had a fine evening for themselves as they extended their winning record to seven games as opposed to one loss, sending the Sienna men home badly beaten and badly discouraged.

The next game for the Vermont courtmen will be held next Saturday afternoon at three o'clock in Patrick Gym at Yankee Conference competition, this time the University of New Hampshire, journeys to Vermont.

February 25 to March 5 mark the first time the FISU games will be held in the United States. For more ticket information contact: Robert D. Allen, Olympic Area, Lake Placid, N.Y. 12946

George Peredy (24) hits for an easy two-pointer under the basket against Northeastern. UVM will meet UNH Saturday afternoon.

UVM Continues Climb To Division Title

By Dave Clark

Watching a UVM hockey game from the balcony is like making out with chapstick on, shaking hands with gloves on, etc. etc. There is however a social redeeming value to this part of the field house (past the Boone's Farm) along with the fact it is not so bad if you're in the presence of an attractive young lady. Oh, wait back to sports again (athletic that is).

The first period of play against Colby last Friday night was dominated by Vermont but the score certainly didn't show this fact. Colby didn't retain lead for very long as Ted Castle scored 23 seconds into the second period. Assists on the goal went to Patty Wright and Ted Yeates.

Vermont's first line of Wright, Castle and Fred Hunt were responsible for five of the six Vermont goals in some fashion. These three who are the top three scorers on the club have done a superb job all year and have been scoring like mad as of late.

The Cats broke the game open in the second period with five goals and left Colby wishing they had stopped at some bar instead of coming the field house.

Scorers in the second period for Vermont besides Castle were Hunt (twice), Wright and Roser, Mallate.

Vermont played an excellent all around game. The defense was sound even though some people felt there were too many break aways by Colby. Break aways are bound to occur when a team is fore-checking and pressuring the other team like the Cats were. Steve Eckerson played another good game in goal for Vermont and appears to filled the void left by Dave Reese which many people felt he couldn't do.

The game against Northeastern on Monday night convinced most everyone of a thought that this reporter has had for a long time. Vermont has two good goal-tenders. John Kiely stopped 28 shots and played an excellent game against a Division I club.

The Northeastern game while not a crucial one was a necessary one as it kept the Cats up in a game which they easily could have let down.

The game was closely fought as the contest was tied at the end of each period. The first score for Vermont came at 16:09 of the first period. Ted Castle got his first of two goals of the night on this play with assists going to Patty Wright and Ted Yeates. The play of Ted Castle was nothing short of fantastic as he ran his seasons total of goals to 18 in this game. Ted's passing, fore-checking and position hockey are big reasons for the Cats hot streak of late.

The Cats play at home again on Saturday night against Connecticut at 7:30 at Gutterson Field House. Editor's note: the details for Vermont's 4-2 win over Salem State were not available at press time.

Ned Grant (22) and Chris Miller (23) miss another shot on goal as the goalie pounces on the puck.

Last week, Don Fillion, the senior sportswriter for the Burlington Free Press, opened our eyes as to where the problem really lies in the UVM Basketball program. It seems as though one of, if not the most important reason for the current disastrous season, is the lack of student support.

Some of the mentioned criticisms were legitimate, like the problems of administrative and coaching manpower, the limitations of scholarship aid etc. It seems that student support is hardly a sufficient reason for an eleven game losing streak and only three wins on the season. An attempt was even made to blame the loss of the baseball program for further problems with the court club, but this seems a slight stretching of logic.

How about when the baseball program was a going concern at the University, was the record so much better then?

But apparently, Mr. Fillion feels the vast majority of the problems would be eradicated if not only players were recruited, but fans as well.

It must be remembered that the basketball team, and the football team as well has run into trouble for some time now. What is the hang-up? Why the rumors and dimension in the ranks, both last year and this year.

I don't mean to imply that the key is poor coaching. I am in no position to say.

But do not forget, there is a world of difference between a fine technician and a fine coach, and a real winning team must find the inspiration within themselves, the winning drive must come from the team itself, not from the cheering on the sidelines.

The basketball team seems to have possibly stumbled onto the key as they pulled a very well-played and surprising upset over Sienna last week. Perhaps the problems of the past, the inaccuracy of shooting, the inability to work under pressure, turnovers, will indeed be surpassed. If not, I think the basketball club and other teams as well should start seriously questioning themselves as to what is wrong, and more importantly, that better come up with some answers. Perhaps then those Vermont teams will be considered something to be reckoned with, not just another easy mark on somebody's victory record.

Faculty Senate
Shortens
Drop Date

The Faculty Senate held its meeting February 11 in Benedict Auditorium. Among the issues on the agenda was a proposal to shorten the period in which a student can drop without penalty a course from five to three weeks. This proposal was made on the assumption that a student should know by then, which courses he wants to take.

Another proposal was made by Professor London of the Administrative Policy Committee to change the class schedule. The schedule would remain the same for Monday, Wednesday, and Friday classes, but would change the class schedule of Tuesdays and Thursdays. Classes on Tuesdays and Thursdays would run for seventy-five minutes all day as they do now in the afternoons. This would eliminate the necessity of Saturday morning classes. The change was "favored" by the Senate and the new policy is expected to be implemented for the fall semester of 1972.

Legislature Education, W

by Linda Goodspeed
The Vermont Legislature convened in January, ready for a busy session amidst the hectic schedule of an election year. Among the many bills facing the legislators this session are the proposed new liberalized abortion bill and the S-98 educational bill.

The S-98 bill is designed to expand educational opportunities for handicapped children. The bill as originally drafted mandated local school districts to provide special education for all handicapped children up to 21 by 1983, and provided parents with administrative and judicial remedies if their children were not being properly educated. However, the Senate Education Committee, partially at the urging of Governor Davis, removed both the mandate and the remedies from the bill. Sister Janice Ryan, an instructor at Trinity College, advocated the restoration of these sections and also full funding ($400,000) for the bill. This would be $280,000 more than now is allotted for special education. The bill is now in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The Senate is also working on two bills on Consumer Protection by passing a bill

Billy Barnes and Susan Morse, appearing in "Superstar" tonight.

"Yes." Part of Winter Week, appearing in Concert February 24.

'Jesus Christ Superstar' Tonight

"Superstar" appears on the Lane Series on Thursday, Feb. 17, at 9:00 pm, in Patrick Gymnasium. It is completely sold out.

Because of the demand for tickets, the concert has been shifted from Memorial Auditorium to the Gym. The new curtain time is 9:00 pm. Doors open at 8:00 pm.

The principal singers are Denny Belline, Billy Barnes, and Susan Morse. Heading the musicians—lead guitar, sax, organ, bass guitar, drums, percussion, and rhythm guitar—is music director George Broderick.

The songs in this concert version include "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord," "Heaven on Their Minds," "What's the Buzz," "Hosanna," "Superstar," "Crucifixion," "Judas Death,"

"I Don't Know How to Love Him," "The Lord's Prayer," "Gethsemane (I Only Want to Say)" and others.

Billy Barnes (Jesus Christ) has played the major hotels, and appeared on television on the Kraft Music Hall, David Garroway Show, and the David Frost Show. He has recorded for United Artists, Liberty, Reprise, and Atlantic.

Denny Belline (Judas Iscariot), is a member of the Man group, which has performed in Fillmore East and The Scene. He is both composer, singer and actor. His compositions are included in Man's Columbia album. Also, he had a Columbia single entitled "Forget About Me." Susan Morse (Mary Magdalene) has done many TV shows, including Perry Como, Revlon Review, and Omnibus. She also appeared with the road company of "Sound of Music." On Broadway and in Los Angeles she took the part of Sheila in "Hair."

The music director, George Broderick, has played as piano soloist with the Brooklyn Symphony Orchestra. He also composed an opera and a piano concerto, and studied composition at the famed Juilliard School of Music.

Winter Week Activities Commence Tomorrow Night

by Marcy Sayles

It's here! UVM's first Winter Week. And it's off to a great start as Lane Series features the rock opera, "Jesus Christ Superstar" in the gym tonight at 8 P.M. for those students lucky enough to have tickets. Billings Center has been buzzing with ticket sales since Monday, February 14. Tickets for the Baroque Ensemble and for "Boys in the Band" were almost sold out as of Monday being of limited number. Ticket sales were steady for Dick Gregory and the J. Geils and "Yes" Concert.

Terry Demas, acting as coordinator for the week's events, commenting on the progress of the week's organizational aspect, remarked that red tape and bureaucratic procedure have to be continually overcome, but that there is cooperation among the different organizations involved in the planning. He noted that Winter Week has been greatly helped along, especially by Rich Hansen, Director of Student Activities, and by the custodial department of the university.

The Boys in the Band will be presented nightly Friday, (Roundhouse) at 7:30 P.M. Doors open at 7 P.M.

Get your tickets for Winter Week's concert, featuring J. Geils rock band and "Yes," to be held in Patrick Gym Thursday, February 24 at 8 P.M. Tickets may be purchased at the bookstore and at Bailey's Music Room for $3 or $3.50 at the door. Doors open to the public at 7 P.M.

Dick Gregory will speak in Patrick Gym Friday night, February 25 at 8 P.M. Admission is free with I.D., and $1 general public. Doors will open at 7:15 P.M.

Don't forget the Players' Ball, to be held in Billings Center Saturday night, February 26 at 8 P.M. There will be two bands, one string and one rock, along with refreshments. Tickets are $1 each with I.D., and $2 each without I.D. The Ball is scheduled to last from 8:11:30 P.M.

There will be a UVM Baroque Ensemble, Wednesday, February 23, in Billings Main Court, at 8 P.M. Admission is free, but tickets are needed.

The Round House in lower Billings will provide entertainment nightly from Friday February 18—Tuesday February 22, and on Saturday, February 26 from 9:30—12 P.M. There will be special food prices, free peanuts and popcorn. The entertainment will be after the play, "The Boys in the Band."

The UVM hockey team will play West Point in Gutterson Field House, Saturday, February 19 at 7:30 P.M. Tickets are $7.75 with House, Saturday, February 19 at 7:30 P.M. Tickets are $7.75 with

There will be special ski rates at Glen Ellen, Bolton, and Madonna ski areas February 18, 19, 20, 26, and 27th for students. $5.00 and Madonna tickets will be $3.50 each.

Tickets for all three areas on February 19, 20, 26, and 27th may be purchased for $7.00. There will be a special ski bus for Bolton Friday, February 18 only leaving Patrick Gym at 8:30 A.M. and returning from Bolton at 4:00 P.M. Bus tickets will be $2.00 each.

In the dining halls Tuesday evening, Feb. 22 Sags will be having "special events" which are to be specialty banquets.

There will be an ACTIONFEST sponsored by OVP Sunday, February 27 in Patrick Gym from noon—4:00 P.M. This will be a recreational day for kids in the Big Brother and Sister program.

Tickets for all events may be purchased at Billings Center Ticket desk from 9—4.

Environmental Fair To Be Held At W-D-W

by Enid Klein

One Sunday in the following weeks, Robinson, the Environmental Dorm, will be sponsoring an Environmental Fair to be held in the Wing-Davis-Wilks lounge. This event will be open to the entire student body, for the purpose of acquainting the public to the dorm's activities. The Fair will include films and exhibits in areas of vital import.

Last year, it was decided that Robinson would house those students interested in an area of mutual concern. As a result, Robinson intends to show exactly what have been the fruits of its one semester's existence, and hopefully to interest others to become involved in its projects.

During these last months, many activities have been started by those students. The city of Burlington has asked for the students' advice in the planning of Red Rock's Park. What recreation facilities, and the management of it, are included in this conservation project. A composting assignment to be used in the spring, which accumulates outside of Wright Dining hall leftovers from dinners, has been initiated. ZPG is actively working for education in birth control. Projects in making objects by hand have also been encouraged. Such creations include mud-in-table napkins and clothing. Other projects include recycling, cleaning trails, and setting up a library for environment studies in the Government Research Center.

It should be realized that the environment affects those living in it, and in turn everything that is done by man affects the environment. Robinson is aiming to remedy some of the wrongs inflicting against the surroundings. The students gladly welcome anyone who is interested in this goal. The dorm has meetings every week on various subjects, and to make people aware of their surroundings and help the situation.

Mayor Paquette Answers Questions At Open Forum

by Marcy Sayles

Mayor Gordon Paquette of Burlington spoke to a small group of UVM students Tuesday night, Feb. 8, in Billings North Lounge. Sponsored by Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity, the event was originally scheduled to be an open forum of a large scope, but due to the attendance of only a handful of students, it became a small informal chat and question and answer session.

In his opening remarks, Mayor Paquette spoke of his role as mayor of Burlington and briefly described his philosophy in "planning our city." As mayor, he strives to use tax dollars in the most efficient and advantageous way, so that Burlington will continue to be "a beautiful city," where people will want "to live and raise a family." Planning for the city will be both in terms of growth and maintenance, the mayor explained. He doesn't want Burlington to become "just another blacktop city, but to be kept pretty much as it is." Some plans include keeping green belts, trees, and developing recreational and park facilities so that Burlington can "grow in good taste."

Some of the questions were: Q—What are the ramifications and possibilities concerning the Burlington Mall experiment last summer?

A—Last summer Church Street area of downtown Burlington was closed off to motor vehicles becoming a pedestrian mall. The mayor said that this experiment was successful and well received by merchants and the general public. He would like to see it turn into a permanent mall, and there are plans for it to be climate-controlled. The project initially would be expensive, but "you have to look beyond the mall" in terms of future planning.

Q—The waterfront is a tragic area. What is to be done?

A—New zoning laws were passed which included the cleaning up of the waterfront. Now the legislature is trying to amend the statute, which could mean that the oil tanks would not be removed from the waterfront. The mayor explained that presently people are fighting against this bill. He also spoke of the possibility of building oil tanks on land fill with a park facility built over that.

A question was raised concerning the oil spill of the past week. Mayor Paquette stated that the oil company would pay all clean-up costs and not the taxpayers.

Q—What is to be done about Burlington's parking problems?

A—Mr. Paquette briefly outlined some of the Urban Renewal parking plans. There are plans for 1,300 additional spaces (500 under ground and 800 in a parking garage). The mayor stated that only 80 spaces would be lost if Church Street were to become a mall. Entrances and exits to Burlington were named by the mayor as being a real problem area. He said that the city of Burlington is working closely with the state highway too. He hopes that with state and federal money much of the problem will be alleviated.

Q—What roles are there available for students interested in local government?

A—"Students should be involved. They should get into the system to know what's really going on." Mayor Paquette urged all students to take an active part in the process because "it's a great experience to meet people, see life, and hear opinions." Before the small forum began, Mr. Paquette related how he first got into local government. Eleven years ago, as a grocery store owner, he became concerned about where the money went and got involved by running for the Board of Aldermen.

Q—How do you see the relations between UVM and the community?

A—Mayor Paquette expressed that there seems to be good relations. "The university helped make us what we are." He mentioned the positive aspects of the number of people employed by UVM, student dollars, the medical center, cultural opportunities brought to Burlington by students. In answering the question, "Does the Burlington Free Press's criticism reflect the opinions of the general public," the mayor said "No." He always tries to explain the advantages of having the university here in town, the mayor stated.

Q—Is there a trend towards regionalization?

A—"Yes." The mayor would like Burlington to "get away from the big bad wolf image." He doesn't want one big metropolis, but rather cooperation among the towns working together for the environment, law enforcement, (continued on page three)

Legislature Considers Education, Welfare Bills

by Linda Goodspeed

The Vermont Legislature convened in January, ready for a busy session amidst the hectic schedule of an election year. Among the many bills facing the legislators this session are the proposed new liberalized abortion bill and the S-98 educational bill.

The S-98 bill is designed to expand educational opportunities for handicapped children. The bill as originally drafted mandated local school districts to provide special education for all handicapped children up to 21 by 1983, and provided parents with administrative and judicial remedies if their children were not being properly educated. However, the Senate Education Committee, partially at the urging of Governor Davis, removed both the mandate and the remedies from the bill. Sister Janice Ryan, an instructor at Trinity College, advocated the restoration of these sections and also full funding ($400,000) for the bill. This would be $280,000 more than now is allotted for special education. The bill is now in the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The Senate is also working on two bills on Consumer Protection by passing a bill which would increase the staff of the Consumer Protection Office, and gave preliminary approval to another measure which would broaden the powers of the office.

Meanwhile, the House has been concerned itself with a number of controversial education and welfare bills.

The two education bills provide for the recall of school directors and requiring a school board to gain the approval of the electorate by a referendum before competing school attendance during July and August.

Both of the welfare bills would return some measure of power and responsibility to the local level. At a public hearing last week there was strenuous opposition to the bill from organized welfare groups. However, the bill carries a formidable list of cosponsors in the House.

Each of these measures is expected to provoke a great deal of spirited debate on the House floor this week.

The Legislature has already passed a bill authorizing the sale of beer on college campuses, and at this point the session looks very promising.

Rotaract Club Organized

Rotary Organizing Youth Service Club, First Meeting Feb. 15 at Champlain College. The Rotary Club of Burlington is in the process of forming a service club for young adults in the age bracket from 18 through 24. This will be called a Rotaract Club and will be sponsored by the Burlington Rotary Club. Membership is open to anyone within the age bracket who is interested in a service organization of high standards devoted to vocational knowledge, community service and international projects. Rotaract Clubs have been formed on a world-wide basis and there are such clubs in 47 countries around the world at this time.

The purpose of the club is to develop leadership and responsible citizenship through service to the community, to advance the cause of international understanding and peace, and to promote recognition and acceptance of high ethical standards as a leadership quality and vocational responsibility. The first organizational meeting of this new club will be held Tuesday evening, February 15 at 7:30 p.m. This first session will be at Champlain College in Hamrick Hall. It is the hope of the Rotary Committee that both girls and boys who are interested will attend this first meeting.

OVP.

Transportation Is No Problem

So you'd like to volunteer, but you don't have a car. You'd like to have a Little Brother, but you can't get out to the North End. You have a Little Brother whom you'd like to take to the movies, but you have no way of getting there. If these have seemed like obstacles to you, consider them solved!

OVP has a new transportation system whereby our volunteers can use buses and taxis free. All the volunteer must do is come to the OVP office and pick up a form. We have even posted the bus routes and schedules. If you need to go somewhere that is not near a bus route, we will help you get a taxi.

Don't let transportation problems discourage you from volunteering. We can help!

Senior Portraits

Senior photographs for the class of 1972 will be taken for the final time Feb. 21, 22, and 23. They will be taken from 9-12 a.m. and from 1-5 p.m. in the Student Photo Service studio in lower Billings. Resittings will be free. The initial sitting fee is $2.00.

VPIRG Research

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group is looking for students to assist in its research projects. Certain projects will be considered for credit through the Readings and Research Program 197, 198. For further information contact Peter Cobb on Wednesday evenings or Jeff Ewen on Friday evenings at the Student Activities desk, extension 2060.

Loneliness Knows No Age Limitation

Perhaps one of the most pathetic and well-known sights is that of an older person who is alone. Through the Champlain Valley Office of Economic Opportunity, where volunteers are supervised by Mrs. Shelansky, and the Sheraton House, where Mrs. Michael supervises the volunteers, UVM students have the opportunity to give time to help the elderly.

Monthly training and discussion sessions keep volunteers up-to-date on changes and better methods of working with the senior citizens.

Sheraton House, which is an extended-care center, does have patients who are younger, but its major population includes those sixty-five and over. Volunteers perform many individual services for the patients including bringing books, writing letters, and sometimes, best of all, just talking. Volunteers also assist in group activities such as arts and crafts classes and games. The UVM volunteers who serve the Office of Economic Opportunity move around, helping out wherever people who are unable to get out themselves. The errands can include such essential activities as grocery shopping. Many people who might otherwise be almost totally cut off from the world can depend on the volunteers for help when they need them. The volunteers in this program demonstrate particular patience and good will and they find, happily enough, that there is no real generation gap when someone needs help.

If computing in instruction is to move up from this platform, deGrasse says several basic steps must be taken.

1. Computers must be easier to use. "Walk into a classroom today and what do you find being used as instruction tools?" asks deGrasse. He answers his own question: "Books and blackboards, the same as a century ago." But he is confident they will be improved so they can be used quickly, easily and profitably

by those not educated in the ways of the computer.

2. Computing instruction

"could fall into the same trap

as ETI; namely too much emphasis on technology and not enough on programming.

The result is lack-luster programs utilized by only a dedicated few and not by the majority of educational practitioners." The answer:

More federal, state and local support to develop lively appealing programs in a variety of subjects. (Computing, too, makes its "Street.") A national "library" so the best of the computing programs would be widely distributed.

3. Finally, a step that could draw the arguments of many educators: Sell instructional computing on the basis of productivity, not quality alone.

deGrasse has seen education spending more for less on the basis of improving the quality.

In recent years, local, in Vermont, and nationally, he has seen a growing reluctance to spend on this basis alone.

There is a demand for more for each education dollar.

"In industry, computing has been sold on the idea of improving productivity, of lowering per-unit cost of manufacturing. The same argument will have to be used in education, that per-student costs can be reduced with no loss in quality or possibly with an improvement in quality of education. This step, of course, means, among other things, raising the teacher-pupil ratio, employing fewer teachers."

Prospects For National Education Network

What's ahead for computing in education?

There's little chance a national network will be created, despite the many advantages.

But the computers themselves will become more efficient, easier to use and cheaper.

There are some of the predictions of Richard V.

deGrasse, director of the

Vermont Regional Computing

Program, who is responsible for curriculum development and

Gay Lib At UVM?

Many letters have appeared on this page during the past weeks concerning the plight of homosexuals here at the University of Vermont, and throughout the nation.

One writer alluded to the number of Gay Liberation movements now sweeping the country, while describing society's injustices to him as a homosexual. This writer claimed that these injustices could be decreased if enough education took place.

Indeed, education is necessary. And, it appears that there are enough people who want it. Perhaps, a Gay Liberation movement should begin here at the University of Vermont.

People Become Cattle

At the performance of "Jesus Christ Superstar" tonight patrons holding $17 and $13 series tickets are being made to compete with persons holding "rush seat" tickets for bleacher seats. Reserved seats will be available only for those holding $24 and $21 series tickets. It is deplorable that the Lane Series should do such a thing. Patrons who hold tickets for the series, bought these tickets in good faith that they would be given reserved seats in the section that they paid for. Granted it is good that more people will be given a chance to see this performance, but the Lane Series should have been able to provide reserved seats for ALL series ticket holders (some of whom may have bought series tickets only to see the Superstar concert). They have performed a serious breach of faith in not providing reserved seats for these persons holding $17 and $13 tickets. It is bad enough that these people are being forced to sit in the bleacher seats when they bought tickets for what they thought would be balcony seats, but to make them "rush" for their seats is beyond all conception of how a theatre should function. This event suggests that the Lane Series is no longer the dignified organization that it once was, but is only concerned now with packing people like cattle into their concerts.

Campus Beer Bill

As noted in last week's Cynic, the Vermont Senate passed a bill permitting sale of beer on the state's college campuses. In its 19-9 vote, the measure allows any post-secondary school to make an application to sell alcoholic beverages to students who are eighteen years or older, faculty, employees, and guests.

However, the bill still must be passed by Vermont's House of Representatives. Seeing as how Vermont now has a law permitting drinking at 18, the House should adopt the measure immediately.

An Observation

Where Are The Reps?

By Jeri Covey

Over the past two weeks, two meetings of the Inter Residence Association and one meeting of the Student Association Senate have taken place. The interesting thing about all these meetings is that they did not have a quorum.

Business was carried on anyway though. All SA Senators and IRA Reps are elected by the students and freely accept the positions. In many cases, these representatives even actively campaigned for the position.

Why then do the majority not show for the meeting?

These representatives should remember that they have a responsibility to their electorate. In the case of the SA Senators, they should feel directly responsible for the allocation of the $21.50 paid by each student in his electorate. (for the average Senator representing approximately 150 students, this amounts to $129.00). Yet, they do not go to these meetings and possibly allow their students' money used against their will or at least without having any say in it.

These people should remember that their election makes them responsible to their students.

Letters To The Editor

'Gays To Be What They Are'

The author of the Letter to the Editor appearing in last week's Cynic should be congratulated on writing a very fine reply to the editorial 'stand' on homosexuality in the previous issue. UVM is certainly not noted as a particularly gay campus, and I am delighted to learn that somewhere a gay community of students is alive and well (perhaps, for those of us who want to meet more gay friends, someone might volunteer information as to where—campus, in town, etc. they tend to congregate—it's hard being a gay student in a small city).

I agree wholeheartedly with the writer that "homosexuals are people who are really no different than anyone else." We are not sick, perverted, effeminate, flaming queens. We are normal people from every class, race, and occupation in society (yes, among the gay world, one finds gay athletes, business executives, construction workers, and other "masculine" types according to society's standards) who simply happen to prefer sexual partners of the same sex.

I disagree with a statement made last week that "I cannot personally think of anyone whom I know that would not rather be a heterosexual." On the contrary, my experience has shown many gays who actively choose to be what they are and would not change.

Perhaps everyone now gay has struggled with the recognition of that fact. Our society is producing more and more young people not sure about their sexual identity, and rather than leading a very frustrated and unhappy life in the hetero world, it is better to explore the homosexual world and be honest with one's self before making a decision. In addition to speaking with gays, there are good books on the subject (I particularly recommend Martin Hoffman's The Gay World, Bantam, $1.25), plays and films

(incidentally, the gay world is not as bleak as portrayed in The Boys in the Band, a nonetheless excellent play coming to campus this week), and gay organizations. The gay world can be a beautiful world and in the future it will be easier and easier to be gay and open.

All gays (men and women) are human. All gays have the freedom and right to their preferences and life style. All gays need to be treated more fairly and tolerantly than they have been up to now. Most gays are happy with their way of life.

GAY AND HAPPY, BUT DISCREET.

Explains Confusion Over Chapel Move

Dear Sir:

This letter is to clarify any possible confusion raised by the article concerning the move of the "Campus Ministry" from St. Anselm's Chapel to the Hill Center. The term "Campus Ministry" specifically refers to the program led by John Perry, supported by local and national Protestant denominations. Still housed at St. Anselm's Chapel, the program of ministry, by myself, supported by the Episcopal Diocese of Vermont. Services on Sunday mornings will continue to be cooperative between the two ministries on campus.

St. Anselm's Chapel will continue to offer itself to groups on campus who need a place to meet, subject to scheduling. The chapel is open 24 hours a day. My office is located in St. Anselm's, and I am usually available most afternoons at the office. I can be reached by phone at St. Anselm's (656-3882, or at my apartment, 862-6175. The large meeting room at the end of St. Anselm's is presently the meeting place for the Monday

Cynic Is Gay's Beacon

Editor—Your paper is usually just worthless but last time was by far the lowest you've come up with yet. As college students, we are supposed to be liberal and open to many things.

At least one of us still holds some human values above all. Homosexuals should not be persecuted, but even they, themselves should realize the serious nature of their mental illness. They hold no valuable place in our modern society and perhaps we would be better off either herding them together or forgetting them as a whole.

What purpose would be served by your stand to their plight is beyond me unless you want to be their beacon.

Thank You, B.M. '73

Homosexual Struggle

Dear Editor,

We feel inspired to stand along side one classmate who dared stand above the misguided moral codes of our society. The American Homosexual is far and above the most persecuted of all the members of that society.

Our beliefs are no different from those of the blacks and women who have after long struggle found sympathy in the hearts of great numbers of Americans. We believe that the American Homosexual will come to the same end but how distant that day is to us is our greatest concern.

Where's The Imagination For Winter Week '72?

To The Editor:

As a "Nostalgic" Senior, I find myself compelled to comment upon the editorial of February 10, 1972. You speak of an "imaginative" group of people scheduling the Winter Week "activities," as they call them. It seems that rather than being innovative, these people are abdicating their responsibility to the student body. I cannot understand how the mere publicity of the same common events that occur all through the year comes under the heading of imaginative. It is hard to see how the publicity of unimaginative events will stimulate the dullness and social vacuum present at UVM.

I ask honestly, how many people will rally behind the UVM Baroque Ensemble? Perhaps a better question would be, "How many students will attend the concert?" To some who have never heard of the Ensemble, I must remind you that this is one of the heralded activities of Winter Week.

Sincerely yours, Gene Robinson Episcopal Chaplain Intern

The Phantom Stranger

by Comix Master

Before beginning this week's hero, I have some items of interest to comic fans. First, the origin of Spider-Man (last week's hero) will be presented on CFCF-TV 12 Saturday, February 19, at 9 a.m. Second, beginning in two weeks, there will be a series of articles on Marvel Comics' mighty Avengers, whose members include such heroes as Thor, Hercules, and Captain America. This series is tentatively planned to last five weeks, so don't miss this column. More details will be given next week. Finally, a reminder that questions about comics may be sent to Comix Master, Cynic Office, Billings.

This week's hero is a mystery man. He comes and goes with danger. No one knows if he is man or ghost. He is known only as...

THE PHANTOM STRANGER

The Phantom Stranger first appeared in his own magazine in 1952-53 for a short six-issue run. He would appear from nowhere whenever people were threatened by what appeared to be some supernatural menace. The Phantom Stranger would rescue the people and expose the menace as coming from a very natural source. His powers consisted mainly of a good solid punch in the jaw, but he also used gimmicks, such as a specially treated flashlight and a heat sensitive powder. His costume consisted of a dark business-type suit and a hat which cast a shadow over his eyes.

The Phantom Stranger's next appearance was in December 1968, a one issue try-out in Showcase magazine. This was so successful that the Phantom Stranger was again given his own magazine, which is still going strong. The new series has changed the Phantom Stranger somewhat. He has added magic to his powers and a cape to his costume. No origin has been given for the Phantom Stranger, but there have been references indicating that he is an agent for some other force. Other than this, little is known.

In addition to his own magazine, the Phantom Stranger has twice teamed up with Batman in Brave and the Bold magazine, once also with Dr. 13. Dr. 13, known as the Ghostbreaker, appears as a companion feature in the Phantom Stranger's magazine. His mission in life is to prove that the supernatural does not exist. Thus far, his only failure is his inability to prove that the Phantom Stranger has no supernatural powers. He attempts to do so have at times hindered the Phantom Stranger, but the rivalry is a friendly one.

Next week: Two ghosts walk the earth.

Dr. Spock Left-Wing

DENVER (UPI)—Dr. Benjamin M. Spock, Presidential candidate for the newly-formed People's Party was in Denver Sunday as part of his whirlwind campaign tour of the southwest.

The well-known author and long time anti-war activist admitted that he once voted for Calvin Coolidge back in 1924 because his father, seeing that his son was about to vote for the first time, told him to vote a straight Republican ticket.

Now, Dr. Spock is the Presidential candidate of the Peoples Party, a coalition of left-wing groups which hopes to launch a serious and lasting third-party movement in this country.

He began the day with an early morning surprise visit to Hip-Help, a Denver medical and counseling clinic where he spoke with its sleepy-eyed director about the lack of medical facilities for the poor and indigent.

The rest of the day was spent explaining to various groups what he thinks the Peoples Party stands for as well as how he was radicalized from a Johnson supporter in '64 to an anti-imperialist and an advocate of local control of schools, factories, neighborhoods, and police.

The Peoples Party was launched in Dallas last Thanksgiving by members of the New Party, the Peace and Freedom Party, and other groups that ran third-party candidates in 1968. Economist Julius Hobson was nominated as Spock's running mate and

In addition to the various activities of Winter Week, the Student Association Concert Bureau will present the J. Geils Band and Yes, Thursday, Feb. 24th.

For those students unaware of the necessary preparations for such a concert, Barb Chausse, Publicity Director of the SA Concert Bureau, has described some of the activities involved.

The selection and booking of various rock groups is a long and complicated process. Plans for the Winter Weekend concert of '72 were considered in the summer of '71. By the following November, the bureau had determined a list of possible groups to perform. In selecting these groups, the Cynic surveys were considered along with financial expenditures and group availability.

The initial effort was to book a big name group such as Jethro Tull, The Band, and Cat Stevens. The bureau made a "first offer" of $10,000 through their Boston agent George Parry, from Lordly and Dame. Final responses to this offer were either in the negative or disregarded completely.

By December, the choice was between the J. Geils Band and Yes together, or Mountain alone. The primary obstacle preventing a better or fuller

There are currently three clergy on the Center's staff: Father Francis Holland, Father James Moscatello, and Sister Linda. They serve in various capacities, from full-time to part-time schedules in order to keep the Newman Center functioning.

Approximately six to seven hundred UVM students attend services at the Newman Center over the six masses offered each weekend. The bulk of religious participation is, of course, Catholic. Many non-Catholics, however, take part in the other activities.

Patty Wright must sit out the season and a back injury has kept Simmons from action

Catamounts Lose Patty Wright

By Dave Clark

The win over the University of Connecticut on last Saturday night was a very costly one as the Cats have lost the services of Patty Wright for the season. Patty sustained a knee injury in the first period and was helped off the ice. Patty had just broken the single season record points with 43 points for this season which breaks the record held by George Minarsky of 42 for the 69-70 season. Patty has a torn ligament and was operated on Monday morning.

The game was not in doubt once the Cats hit the ice and saw the kind of team which UConn had. UConn was plagued by bad passing, lack of skating ability and after the first period a low team spirit. The Cats got eight goals in the first period with four of those coming in the first six minutes of the contest. Scores for Vermont in the first stanza were Patty Wright, Willie MacKinnon, Chris Miller, Chris Hurley, Eli Tubbs, Ted Castle and Roger Mallette. Eight different players got the eight goals for Vermont in the period as the Cats displayed great depth throughout their season. The sixteen players scored the sixteen Vermont goals in the game. Vermont set a new record for their longest winning streak as they have won seven games in a row breaking the old record of six in a row set the 69-70 season. The Cats have scored 116 goals this season and are only two goals away from the season's record for goals of 118 set in the 70-71 season.

Despite what many people have said to me the Conn. goalie who played the second and third periods was not that bad a goalie. He stopped 58 shots in two periods which is more shots than most goalies stop in an entire game. His save average for those last two periods was 88% which is very good. This goalie suffered from the greatest fear of all goalies, bad defense. The defense for UConn was not bad, it was non-existent. Vermont skaters simply walked in on the UConn goal and fired at will as the Cats put 106 shots on goal in the game and got 16 goals. Bob Hodde is thought to be the person who will replace Patty Wright on the first line for Vermont as he moves up from the fourth line where he has seen little action. Ned Grant another member of that fourth line has been playing some great hockey as of late. Ned scored six points in the game on Saturday night and has been working very hard in the last four games.

Vermont only got two goals in the second period as the action slowed greatly and the Cats had only a nine goal lead after two periods with the crucial third period yet to be played.

The game was filled with penalties as a total of sixteen penalties were called in the contest. The game got very rough near the end, as many near fights occurred. Vermont's record in Division II is now 10-2 with the two losses both occurring in overtime against Bowdoin and UMass. The teams overall record stands at 13-6. Coach

Jim Cross said at the beginning of the season that this was going to be one of the best teams ever and people are starting to believe him.

Chris Miller got Vermont's scores in the second period he got the hat-trick on the evening and played a super game. Other Vermont scorers for the game included Brad Cooke, Ned Grant, Bob Hodde, Ted Yeates and Andy Rickard.

Cats Drown The Huskies

This past weekend Coach Les Leggett and the Catamount swimmers made it eight in a row, with a resounding defeat of the Huskies of Connecticut. The win felt especially good because the Cats were able to get back at UConn after they squeaked by us last year when we met them.

The swimmers were floundering through the first few events by a count of 25-27. Tim Hanson and Cliff Johnson pulled the Cats out by posting one, two finishes to give Vermont its first lead 33-28 after the 200 yard butterfly.

After that Vermont was never behind. John Gilbert and Jim Werther got another one, two finish and the Cats were leading 44-35. Another 1-2 finish, this time by John Ackerson and George Potekhen in the 200-yard breaststroke put the swimmers firmly in the lead with a 58-39 score.

With this win over UConn, UVM has an excellent chance of clinching the Yankee Conference swimming championship. So far this year the Aquacats have defeated Maine and Massachusetts and no other major threat remains for the swimmers.

Panthers Maul UVM

by Kim Whittaker

The Basketball Catamounts have reverted to their old ways once again as the past week has contributed another two marks to an already extended loss column. UVM now has to take credit for 15 losses, a bit hard to swallow, with a hardly sufficient record of three wins for compensation.

It appears very clear that the upset over Siena was merely a freak of nature as the Cats extended their Yankee Conference losing to eight games as they fell to the University of New Hampshire by a fourteen point margin, 69-55. Vermont journeyed to the south on Monday evening and suffered the worst defeat on record against the Panthers of Middlebury, the final score being an embarrassing 86-57 romp.

By all indications, the Cats will be journeying to number 16 as they meet Rhode Island, the top-ranked team in the Yankee Conference. It is difficult to feel optimistic, and almost ludicrous to expect anything less than a resounding defeat from a team which has simply played poorly for a majority of the season. A victory would make no difference as the Cats are firmly rooted in the Yankee Conference cellar.

The old problems, which seemed to have disappeared in the Siena upset, have once again surfaced in style for the Catamounts. A second half collapse was the decisive factor in both contests. Against UNH, there was a period of twelve minutes when UVM was unable to make a mark on the scoreboard. During this time, New Hampshire took off from a slim three point margin and opened it up to a secure 20 point lead with the Cats managing to whittle it down to 14 before the final buzzer.

The Panther game ended in similar fashion. Despite the fact that the biggest first half margin was only six points, with the Catamounts taking over the lead on occasion, Middlebury went wild in the second half to present another dismal defeat to Vermont.

The major problem for the Catamounts, outside of the fact they seem to be unable to do anything in the second half, is the poor shooting accuracy. Against New Hampshire, the Cats converted only one third of their shots into points, falling down to only 27 percent in the second half. Against the Panthers, the picture was no different as they hit only 22 out of 56 from the floor and only 13 out of 30 from the charity stripe.

In contrast to the variety, the Frosh Basketball club is having a fine season as evidenced by their 99-72 win Saturday against Albany Junior College. This posted the eighth win for the young team with only one loss against them. Gabe Vicks got it together for 25 points and Joe Greco threw in for 17 along with contributing 15 rebounds to the effort.

The Frosh club will meet St. Michael's on Friday.

vigorously recruited and trained an extraordinarily young but talented squad. This squad, dominated by freshmen, met its first test as a team last week. The Carnival began last year with all of the top Collegiate Teams present. The slalom was the first event, with the Catamount alpine team the pre-race favorites. The alpiners, though, with four of their five members freshmen, nervously suffered from the novelty of their first Carnival. They skied stiffly and only an excellent, if not unexpected, 2nd place finish by Wayne Wright was consistent with the team's previous U.S.E.A.S.A. performances. Other top finishers were David Ojala (14) and David Dodge (17).

The cross country event was in the afternoon. This is the event which Vermont has been traditionally weak in. The three man squad scored its most points ever, 93.6, yet this was still only good for 5th place. Despite the fact that this is the weak link of the team, we expected to perform better. Knut Guldbrahn was the top performer with a 14th place finish, despite a costly broken basket on his pole. Peter Bisset was a major disappointment with a 16th place and everimproving Hank Pfeifle pulled up the rear with a 23rd place. At the close of a disappointing first day, Vermont was in 5th place.

The second day directly contrasted the first, with the Vermont team handily winning both the Giant Slalom and Jumping events. In the morning Giant Slalom event, Wayne Wright again blazed down the course to a fine 2nd place finish, which would certainly have been a first place finish if not for a timing mishap. David Dodge gained fifth place with the best second run of the day. Chris Brown was the next best finish (12). The jumping squad, the strongest UVM contingent, was again graced by a brilliant first place finish by Pette Kongoli. Since coming to the U.S. from Norway, Pette has not lost a jumping event and has established himself as the best jumper in the U.S. Martin Grimmes, followed up magnificently with a 3rd place finish, with Guldbrahn getting 9th place.

The final results reflected a second day UVM surge which put it in 3rd place, just behind Middlebury and within striking distance of Dartmouth. Top individual performances to be noted were Wayne Wright, first place in Alpine Combined, Knut Guldbrahn's fourth place in the Nordic combined, and the jumping of Kongoli and Grimmes.

From The Editor

Womens' Libbers, once again I must bow, not too graciously and acknowledge your greatness. Who else but the women of the country could have done so well at the Olympics, while our poor male chauvinists went down to ignominious defeat.

To recap your greatness: A gold and a bronze medal in skiing, a bronze in figure skating, and two golds, a silver and a bronze in speed skating.

Men, to recap your greatness: (wait a second it is on the back pages somewhere) yes here it is, one silver in hockey. There is an editor's note attached which says the U.S. got it with the aid of their arch rivals, the Russians.

Well enough is enough and too much is sickening. The Eleventh Winter Olympics will go down as the worst series the United States man have participated in since the conception of the Winter Games in 1928. Yes the men won only one medal in the Olympics, but to say they won with the Russians helping them is stretching the facts too far. The hockey team truly deserved that medal. They played hard and pulled fantastic upsets over the Czech and Swedish teams.

In the other events, the U.S. did as well as could be expected. It's a wonder the men were able to finish their events without injuring themselves. The Alpine events were the biggest disappointment. With all the talent we have, we should have placed. However it is hard to place when one skier has a bad ankle and all lack the racing experience of the Europeans.

The women surely saved the pride of the U.S., but we can't count solely on the women in the 1976 games if there are any games at all. That stalwart of American sportsmanship, eighty-four year old Mr. Brundage (President of the Olympic Committee), has been quoted as saying he would like to see the Olympics done away with. Perhaps after the streets he pulled the past few weeks, he will succeed. Only 1976 will be able to tell for sure.

THE INSIDER

by Sam Simmons

On the 5th to the 8th of February the hockey team resided in the luxurious comfort of Boston's Copley Square Hotel. We played our games in arenas that made Gutterton Field House seem like a hole in the ground. It was certainly a trip the team needed for a long time.

Probably the most exciting thing was that Ned Grant had been traded to the Bruins and a friend at the hotel restaurant. I cannot recall the friend's name, but he, too, plays for the Bruins and I think he is No. 4. By the way, over a plate of cherrystones, they discussed hockey. As he left, Ned offered them tickets to the UVM-Boston State game that evening, but they were not interested. Neddy's dream finally came true.

Before, Bob Hodde and Fred Hunt ran into Henderson at a nearby drinking establishment. He wanted to ask Turk about the Bruins recent 3-2 win by his Sabres but he seemed preoccupied. Someone had to keep Bobo from throwing his mug at him. It seems Bobo is an avid Red Wings fan and not go for Boston in a big way.

When he's not on the ice, as the "On-Me-Kid" showed up for all three games. If he was floating around campus, just grab him by the back of the head and point him towards home. He'll be all yours.

MacKinnon's aunts all told me how proud they were that nice boy from Dedham. Ted Castle's secret amazing goal production seems to come from a formula served only at Bailey's Ice Cream. Roger Mallette was introduced to the "shuffle." I guess Fred and Pat found the little crowded.

It was an exciting road trip and the best thing is that we came back with the three-point net to get.

'Coalition For A Democratic University' Board Of Trustees Elects Three New Members; Scott Retires

Student at CFDU Meeting

by Fred Ginsberg

On February 16, 1972 a special campus-wide meeting was held in Billings North Lounge. This represented an organizational gathering for the Coalition For A Democratic University (CFDU). About one-hundred students participated.

The CFDU was coordinated by a few dissatisfied students after the eruption of the Parenti issue. They felt that that action must be questioned. Beyond that, they expressed doubts about the University's democratic policies, encouraging extensive student participation in University policy-making.

At the meeting, the organization was sub-divided into committees for greater elasticity and efficacy. The five committees are: 1) the University Awareness Group, aiming at increased political involvement; 2) the Investigative Committee which looks into the behavior of the University's committees and the Board of Trustees; 3) the Women's Group, to organize women's interests; 4) the Fund Raising Committee to pay for lawsuits and the organization's expenses; and, 5) the Communication's Committee to canvass across the community. These groups are meeting separately to get the organization activated.

Presently the group is involved in three lawsuits. First, an injunction is being filed against the Board of Trustees for using University funds to defend themselves. Second, involving Parenti, in the Federal Court, is a violation of freedom of speech complaint. The third is a conflict of interest suit against two trustees. The plaintiffs include students, faculty, alumni, and tax-payers.

The CFDU faces the reality that they are not going to be able to attract mass student support. Hopefully, a small core of highly interested students will focus its emphasis on a single important issue at a time.

by Jeffrey Yacker

In a peaceful atmosphere starkly different from past meetings, the UVM Board of Trustees met last Saturday morning in Memorial Lounge, Waterman Building. The discussions of the issues remained subdued, punctuated occasionally by the clink of a coffee cup against its saucer.

However, the Board did take several steps of varying importance to the University. Foremost among these was the election of three new members, all alumni, to replace Chairman Kenneth Scott and Messrs. Marvin and Latham, whose terms expired as of Saturday. In a move surprising some observers, Mr. (or Mrs.) Capt. Nordstrom was recommended and accepted. A graduate of U.V.M., Class of 1970, and presently a second-year Medical Student here, Miss Nordstrom is only the second woman on the present Board, and provides a youthful contrast to some of the other members. When she was an undergraduate here, she was a John Dewey Fellow and served as UVM's Ambassador to the President's Council of International Living in 1968. In addition, she was a recipient of the Outstanding Senior Woman Award in 1970, and graduated Magna Cum Laude. Miss Nordstrom was a member of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority. Also elected for six-year terms were Daniel B. Burke and Dr. Paul R. Low. Mr. Burke is a resident of Rye, New York. He graduated UVM in 1950 and received his M.B.A. at Harvard in 1955. He is presently Executive Vice-President and Director of Capital Cities Broadcasting Corporation in New York City. Mr. Burke was once a candidate for the presidency of the Student Government at UVM, and was a member of Phi Delta Theta Fraternity. Dr. Low, UVM '55, received his Ph.D. at Stanford in 1963. He is now General Manager of I.B.M. in Essex Junction and resides in Burlington. Dr. Low was Chief Justice of the Vermont House of Representatives as well as a board member, stressed the necessity of always keeping in mind the resources available to the University when thinking of the overall budget picture.

Tangential to the budget woes but not directly part of the discussions on them, was the status of the Health Fee, which all students must pay. No definite decisions were reached affecting the fee, but the possibility of a drastic increase in the Health Fee was brought up. In other action, the Board approved the sale of property at 71 South Williams Street in Burlington, and voted to charge students $10/credit hour for taking a course by examination. On a somewhat lighter side, the receipt of $494,000 in gifts to the University was announced. Toward the end of the meeting, Representative Peisch also eloquently praised Chairman Kenneth Scott for his service to the Board and the University. Student representative Brooks McCabe did likewise, noting that although he and Mr. Scott had "had their differences," that did not preclude cooperation in the good interests of the University.

Chairman Scott made an unexpected reply to criticism leveled by State Representative Arthur Burns in a Burlington Free Press article. Noting that Mr. Burns had referred to "out of control UVM" as a possible reason for the defeat in the House of the UVM-VSC merger, Mr. Scott stated that the decisions of the Board of Trustees are reached at open meetings, and that there is no reason for distrust. Scott wondered whether Burns "has any facts" to back up his remarks.

The Board then went into a closed Executive Session.

UVM-VSC Merger Defeated By State Legislature In Overwhelming Vote

by Jeri Covey

In an overwhelming vote the House of Representatives of Vermont defeated a bill last week that would have merged UVM, the Vermont State College, Vermont Technical College, and the Regional Community College.

The bill, H.483, had been sponsored by two UVM trustees, George Little Jr. (R-Burlington) and Thomas Gandon (D-Rutland). The merger had been generally opposed by the present UVM Board, the present State College, the Regional Community College Commission, and several college presidents, including Dr. Edward Andrews of UVM. Pierre V. Kieffer, President of Vermont Technical College, had opposed the merger.

Opponents to the bill feared the loss of autonomy of the individual colleges under the merger. Some also feared that the merger may have meant complete domination of the State College by UVM because twelve of the twenty-two seats on the joint-board proposed by the bill would have been held by present UVM trustees.

According to an article reprinted in THIS WEEK from the St. Johnsbury Caledonian-Record, a major alternative to H.483 had been drafted and circulated before the vote on the bill. The alternative would form a "coordinating commission for higher education in Vermont." The commission would be composed of twelve members, none of whom would be connected with any of the institutions, who would serve as a recommending board, not as a governing board. All of the institutions would continue to operate under their present conditions for governing.

Cooperation on a voluntary basis with the UVM and the Vermont State College according to Robert S. Babcock, UVM president, and Edward Andrews, president of UVM.

Faculty Senate Hampered By Procedural Rules

by Jeri Covey

At the last Faculty Senate meeting a discussion of maternity-paternity leave was on the agenda. Actually there were two proposals on the subject, one by a special ad hoc Equal Opportunity Committee, the other by the Fringe Benefit Committee.

The ad hoc committee had been set up by an recommendation from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to study discriminatory practices at UVM. At present there is no policy on maternity or paternity leave at the University.

Proposal one from the Equal Opportunity Committee as explained by Professor Mary White (Communication & Theatre), called for a leave that would be guaranteed, non-discriminatory, and have a duration up to one year for each child. This proposal would include adoption and be applicable to both mothers and fathers. Return to an equal job with equal pay would be guaranteed. Also, the maternity-paternity leave would not be counted in the four year span for tenure procedure. Sick leave pay would be given only during actual period of child-bearing.

The proposal from the Fringe Benefit Committee as explained by Professor Paul Brock (Mathematics) would apply only to mothers bearing their own children, and the length of leave would be at the discretion of the employees' immediate supervisor, that is, department chairman. Proposal two called for a separate policy for the academic staff and the clerical staff, but as proposal one has already been approved by the council of non-academic employees, this no longer qualifies as a point of the proposal.

The two different proposals having been presented, the juggling of parliamentary procedure began. Proposal One, having been presented first, was the motion officially on the floor for discussion. An amendment to the proposal striking "paternity" from it was motioned and defeated. The question was called and a vote on the maternity-paternity proposal was asked for. Professor Brock called for a quorum count. One professor remarked never having known a meeting of the Senate at which there had been a quorum, which is 20% of the faculty or 170 members. Previously there had been a policy that the quorum would be the members present and voting, but this policy had ended on December 31, 1971. Professor Samuel Bogard asked Professor Brock if he would withdraw his request for a quorum in return for a motion by Bogard for the question to be decided by a mail ballot vote of all the faculty members. The request was withdrawn, the motion on the mail ballot was brought to a vote and defeated.

Again, Professor Brock requested a quorum count. The count was taken and only 75 of the 170 members necessary for a quorum were present. Professor William White, Chairman of the Senate, decided to continue with the vote on the maternity-paternity proposal and take the results to the Academic Policy Committee for their decision on the validity of the issue. Professor White interpreted a lack of quorum as inability of the Senate to convene, therefore allowing the Academic Policy Committee to rule on the policy.

Finally after one-on-one discussion on the issue, half of which was not on the issue per se but was devoted to trying to stop a vote on the issue, the issue came to a vote. It was passed overwhelmingly with only a few dissenting votes.

Professor Brock in trying to stop the vote by calling for a quorum, said that this was his position because he felt that the members who were there were there only to vote on this issue and that the vote would not reflect the majority of the faculty. If the majority of the faculty was so concerned on this issue, or any issue that comes before the Senate for that matter, then they should have been there. They weren't so obviously they did not care about the issue, or any other issue for that matter. As a professor said, you should not punish advocacy but rather

Proposal In Legislature Taxes Non-Returnable Cans, Bottles

by Mary Jo Dahlbloom

The Vermont State Senate Finance Committee is currently involved in drawing up a bill that would levy a tenth-of-a-cent tax on any non-biodegradable can, bottle, jar or other form of container that is non-returnable. That is, it is actually an amendment to a bill directed toward control of litter. The amendment is also backed by Senator Frederick Westphal, who is chairman of the Finance Committee. The bill is all-encompassing, involving virtually all types of containers. It is anticipated by some adherents to the measure that industrial manufacturers will attempt to utilize materials capable of undergoing decomposition in making containers.

Among the groups opposing the bill in its present form are the League of Women Voters, and Vermont Tomorrow. Opposition to the bill from this quarter centers about the fact that a measure such as this is merely incidental to the purpose, the law is not in violation of the requirement that revenue bills originate in the House.

tax-deposit arrangement of considerable complexity.

A public hearing concerning the bill was held on February 16. Senator T. Margot Fonteyn To Star In 'Sleeping Beauty' March 1

The full-length ballet "Sleeping Beauty" with music of Peter Tchaikovsky—described by one critic as "gorgeous enough to make the Bolshoi proud"—will be appearing in the Lane Series on Wed., March 1, 1972, 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. Dancing in the leading role of Aurora is Margot Fonteyn, regarded as the world's top ballerina, and star of Great Britain's Royal Ballet. Attilio

Labis, a guest artist from the Paris Opera Ballet, will be her partner. A limited number of tickets, $5.25 and $6.00, are available for this performance and may be obtained at the Lane Office, 234 Waterman. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

The National Ballet replaces the cancelled Netherlands Dance Theatre, originally scheduled for April 27. Netherlands tickets are good for the National Ballet performance. In addition to the evening performance, a Youth Concert, one hour in length, will be presented on March 1, at 1:15 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium. The ballet will be Act III of "Sleeping Beauty", starring Marilyn Burr and Luis Fuente. Tickets for this concert are $7.00 each, and may be obtained in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman.

Both performances will be produced by the National Ballet of Washington, D.C., which has appeared many times on the Lane Series. There will be a full pit orchestra, sets and costumes—"one of the most sumptuous productions ever staged by an American company." Also dancing in the evening concert are Frederic Franklin, co-director of the National Ballet, in the role of Catalabutte; Susan Frazer as the Queen; and Susan Loehr as Carabosse. The best act of "Sleeping Beauty" is one of the most spectacular pieces of dancing on the stage. It is largely given over to the entertainment on Aurora's wedding day, and includes a classical pas de trois, a dance for the White Cat and Puss 'n Boots, the celebrated Bluebird Pas de Deux, the Little Red Riding Hood and the Wolf dances, the Grand Pas de Deux by Aurora and Florimundo, the dance of the Three Ivans (Russian), and the Grand Finale.

Margot Fonteyn's distinguished career began at the age of 14 when she entered the then Sadler's Wells Ballet School. Almost immediately she made her first appearance with the Company, now known as the Royal Ballet, dancing the corps de ballet of "Casse Noisette." Alicia Markova was the ballerina. Two years later Markova left Sadler's Wells and from that moment on, under the direction of Ninette de Valois and Frederick Ashton, Fonteyn started to undertake all the leading roles in the classical and modern repertoire. She first danced "Giselle" at the age of 17 and was acclaimed for the youthful sincerity of her interpretation and her potential promise of greatness. At 18, she took on the roles of Odette and Odile in the three acts of "Swan Lake," the ballet she still considers the most difficult and coaching of all her repertoires. When she was 19

Non-Returnable Containers . . .

Mrs. William White, a member of the League of Women Voters in Vermont, stated: "Baby jar money should not be used to finance picking up beer bottles." Mrs. White was referring to provisions of the bill aimed at yielding approximately $1 to $2 million for statewide anti-litter campaigns. Carl Smith, secretary of the Vermont Retail Grocers Association, advocated at the public hearing last week the inclusion of paper containers in the tax measure.

Students of the University of Vermont are also involved in controversy concerning the bill. Meetings of students interested in the non-returnable container bill are scheduled throughout the coming week. Robert Baird, an undergraduate environmental studies major at the University, attended the public hearing on the sixteenth. Baird advanced several arguments against the container bill in its present form. He stated that he felt that far less expense would be involved for both container manufacturers and consumers if non-returnable containers were banned. Baird's statement is in accordance with a poll by University of Vermont students, which indicated that a multitude of students and citizens of Burlington would like to see a ban on non-returnables.

Certain factions of adherents to the bill are in favor of amending the bill to provide for the abolishing of beer cans and bottles that are non-returnable within two or three years after passage of the bill. This seems to be a more conservative course than that endorsed by the majority of students who participated in the recent poll.

Upon completion of the drafting of the non-returnable container tax measure, the Senate Finance Committee will have to either accept or reject the proposal. If it is accepted, then the bill will be presented to the Vermont State Senate in the form of a House of Representatives bill that has been amended.

Broomball-Beer Blast

Phi Gamma Delta Fraternity will hold a combined Broomball-Beer Blast on Friday, February 25 at 7:00 P.M. For those unfamiliar with broomball, it is a rather new improvisation of hockey, using brooms instead of sticks, a soccer ball instead of a puck, and regular boots instead of skates. Last weekend a very successful tournament was held in which teams from fraternities and sororities competed. This Friday night Phi Gam is opening the event to all students. For $7.50 you can play as much broomball as you want, drink as much beer as you can hold. The location is 158 South Willard Street, on the corner of Main. For more information, call 862-7532.

Film Series Relocated

The Shakespeare on Film Series has been moved from Cinema 1 to Room 413 Waterman. Films will be shown at 4:15 p.m. on Wednesday afternoons. Arranged by Prof. Kenneth S. Rothwell, in cooperation with Mr. Merrill Jarvis of Cinema 1, the screenings are open to all members of the University community. A nominal charge of $1 will be required to cover operating costs. For further information call 656-3056.

The spring, 1972, schedule is as follows:

Feb. 16-Zeffirelli, Taming of the Shrew, with Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton
Feb. 23-O'Hill, A USSR film: English dialogue

March 29-Kurosawa, Konosu and Father with Sebastian Cabot, Color
April 26-Marlowe's Dr. Faustus, starring Richard Burton.

Instructor Anthony Bradley's class in Modern Irish Literature is planning a special Leap Year celebration which will take the form of a showing of the film version of James Joyce's Ulysses. The film will be shown twice, at 4 and at 7 o'clock, on Tuesday, February 29, in 101 Votey. The event will mark a trio of anniversaries, since February 2, 1972, was the ninetieth anniversary of Joyce's birth, the fiftieth anniversary of the publication of his famous novel Ulysses, and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Joyce Society. Everyone interested is invited to attend. Guests will be asked to donate one dollar each to help defray the cost of bringing the film to the campus.

Order a Frostline kit. We'll throw in a free lift ticket.

The money you save on Frostline's easy-to-assemble outdoor equipment kits can mean a couple extra lift tickets at your favorite ski area this winter, whether it's Vail, Killington, or Lubbock.

Like the Parasol Jacket ($28.50), Nylon and goose down, make it one of the lightest, warmest coats on the slopes. And the matching Warm-up Pants ($21.50). A full-length two-way zipper lets you put them on or take them off without removing skis or boots. For days that aren't so cold wear either the Down Vest ($11.00) or Down Sweater ($16.95). Nylon and goose down give them a few ounces weight but many degrees of warmth.

All Frostline kits are pre-cut and pre-labeled. Assembly is so simple even your roommate could put one together. All you have to add is a home sewing machine. Frostline. The kits made in America... by everybody.

Order direct or send a postcard for a free color catalogue of everything from parkas to tents to kitchen-plated garments to Frostline/Dept. One/Booulder, Colorado 80501.

Full range of undergraduate and graduate courses, special institutes and workshops. Residence halls available.

2 sessions: June 20 - July 28 and July 31 - Sept. 2 (day and evening). Phone (510) 299-2431 or mail coupon.

QUESTION: Is it true that a person can get all of the iron he needs by cooking at least one meal a day in an iron skillet?

ANSWER: The odds are overwhelming that if you cook one meal a day in an iron skillet you will get more than your minimum daily requirement of iron. However, you would also get more than your minimum daily requirement of iron by cooking in an aluminum skillet, an enamel pan, or any other suitable vessel since the foods in a normal diet contain more than enough iron to prevent iron deficiency. Iron is a key element in red blood cells and is also found in large amounts in muscle, the liver, spleen, bone marrow and all sorts of other places in the body. In ancient Hindu medicine the treatment of anemia (an inadequate volume of red blood cells) consisted of feeding the patient iron powdered and mixed into oil, whey, vinegar, cow's urine, and milk.

You might prefer the 17th century treatment which consisted of iron or steel filings steeped in cold wine. If either of these seem unappealing or inconvenient, the following are recommended: high iron content foods include organ meats such as liver and heart, wheat germ, egg yolks, some beans and fruits. Muscle meats, fish, fowl, green vegetables and most cereals also contain generous amounts of iron. Milk, milk products and non green vegetables are low in iron.

The body has a complex system for conserving iron so that this element is recycled continually. Loss occurs mainly through sweating, hair, nails, in the feces and urine, and menes in the women. This loss is so low that for a man, it is virtually impossible to develop iron lack due to dietary deficiency. The woman can develop iron deficiency anemia in circumstances where she has closely spaced pregnancies, especially if she breast feeds the babies. She can also become iron deficient if she has very heavy menstrual bleeding over a prolonged period of time. A man would generally develop iron deficiency anemia if he underwent repeated severe blood loss such as bleeding from an ulcer, or other source. In recognition of the added need for iron, this element is administered along with vitamins to most women during pregnancy.

It is worth emphasizing that any adult who needs supplemental iron on a regular basis also needs to see a physician to find out what is wrong. The pondering of over-the-counter iron preparations through jazzy TV commercials indicating that everyone needs it, is absurd and possibly dangerous from a medical point of view. A person taking iron supplements may mask important symptoms and fail to receive adequate treatment for underlying blood loss or, in rare cases develop hemochromatosis, the accumulation of iron in organs.

Little children who are fed large amounts of formula or bottle milk and do not have very much meat in their diet can very easily become iron deficient. Large amounts of iron are needed as the blood volume and muscle mass increases rapidly as it does in infancy and early childhood. The breast fed child gets adequate amounts of iron from mother's milk.

QUESTION: My boyfriend and I heard of a different way to have sex that consists of placing an ice cube in the vagina and then having intercourse. Does the extreme cold cause any damage to the body?

ANSWER: Using an ice cube in the manner you describe should not cause any harm. I agree with you that it does sound different but I can't see any reason why it would be better than the run-of-the-mill, non-aqueous, sexual intercourse which if performed well is messy enough.

QUESTION: To help keep in good physical shape over the winter, I have been doing some jogging. However, I am concerned that the rapid and deep inhalation of cold air might possibly be harmful to my lungs.

ANSWER: Vigorous physical exercise in cold weather can put an added strain on your cardiovascular system. This is of special concern to older men and people who are not in good physical condition. In fact, there have been quite a large number of deaths due to jogging with undertaken with excessive vigor by out-of-shape men. If you have been jogging all along, you probably run a greater risk of frost bite or slipping on the ice than doing damage to your lungs, but all three problems can be remedied by running indoors.

The Hospital - A Lousy Place To Visit

by Doug Collette
BOB DYLAN'S GREATEST HITS VOL. II (Columbia EG 31128)
GEORGE JACKSON (Columbia 4-45516)

Anyone who doesn't regard Bob Dylan as a true genius is (a) deaf, (b) immensely ignorant, (c) in hibernation since 1960 or (d) an evil person.

Having said that, we can now consider the two latest releases of this great artist.

The vast majority of songs on the double set Greatest Hits Vol. II have been listened to, talked, written and speculated about and listened to still further. I can honestly think of nothing to say about them in this particular context except to say that each is an exceptionally fine composition (and, in most cases, an equally fine performance thereof) and that the collection as a whole would be most useful in improving the listener to obtain copies of the albums of which the songs were originally a part.

But, even for those who do own all those LP's, Vol. II is valuable for the half-dozen 'new' selections. The very first cut is one of these: "Watching The River Flow" is a product of Dylan's sessions with Leon Russell and The Tulsa Tops and while it's by no means profound (as far as I can see at this moment; I may change my mind), it's a feel-good song that simply drips bluesy funk. With only an acoustic guitar and his pleading voice, (recorded live in 1963), Bob performs "Tomorrow Is A Long Time" as splendid as is the Englishman's version.

A rather stately rendition of "When I Paint My Masterpiece," also produced by Leon Russell, creates a mood and meaning deeper and more personal than the Band's version. Jesse Ed Davis plays an absolutely delicious bottleneck guitar here.

A song from the legendary "Basement Tapes" is the first of three songs recorded with the assistance of Happy Traum and it's both intimate and moving. The singer finds some refuge and strength in the fact that "any day now/any day now/I shall be released." Listening to it, I almost feel glad the fellow has something to look forward to.

"You Ain't Goin' Nowhere" is elegant in its jylant simplicity. Bob's voice isn't like the one of the past or the present and it's not even a combination of the two, but fuller, richer and more expressive than all but a few rock and roll singers.

"Down In The Flood" is as down home as Leon Russell's ever been and Dylan's not gonna put up with any nonsense: "Ooh, mama, you're gonna miss your best friend now/Mama, you're gonna have to find yourself another best friend somehow."

The new single has supplied plenty of fuel for the fire of controversy concerning Dylan's new music as well as his musical return to a position as a social critic. But the performance of the song, as songs, is, I think, what's important.

The fast-moving acoustic version of "George Jackson" is an angry ship at those men who "sent him off to prison for a $70 robbery...closed the door behind him and threw away the key." The whining harmonica and raspy vocal are such that it could've been cut, no it must have been cut in 1964.

The big band arrangement includes warm pedal steel guitar and gospel chorus; this version is considerably softer and more mellow, exposing more fully the lovely melody of the song. The gentleness of this version makes the lyrics not so much angry as frustrated and sad, but on the main phrase of each line of the chorus, a muffled bass drum (which you feel more than you hear) places the emphasis where it counts.

Lord, Lord, they cut George Jackson down.
 Lord, Lord, they laid him in the ground.

Whether the new songs and new versions of old songs provide any clue to Dylan's new directions, I'm not prepared to speculate. Suffice it to say that all the music on Greatest Hits Vol. II and "George Jackson" is some of the finest contemporary music you'll hear and whatever Bob's new LP is like, the odds are all that it will be as influential as all that's come before.

This film is an extremely interesting venture into the realm of medical films. While not exactly box-office bonanza, medical films have become popular in recent years. *M*A*S*H* started the current cycle of this type of film, and Such Good Friends and The Hospital are the latest medical films. This particular film is very well made, and all the elements of film are combined to make it a high grade entry in the genre. Acting, photography, and story line are well enough done to keep your interest throughout the film.

The Hospital stars George C. Scott and Diana Rigg. Scott is a good doctor whose life has lost its purpose and this places him on the brink of suicide. His only reason for living is that he feels his work is important. This feeling is rapidly dissipated at the hospital, however, for this particular hospital is a lousy place to visit and a lousy place to be sick in. People die left and right. Diana Rigg plays the daughter of a mad missionary whose medical case is worth discussing: She's so sexy as ever and is one of the most effective stimulants in the hospital.

Rigg's father was admitted in perfect condition for a checkup. One of the lab technicians goes, and soon he is in a coma with one kidney removed and the other damaged. Strangely enough, he recovers on his own, and runs about the hospital murdering those responsible for his condition. He has an extremely fiendish method of doing it. Yet TV should also mirror the times, of killing. He arranges things so that the medical staff responsible for his condition become seriously ill. They are therefore treated in their own hospital, where they die through incredibly large medical treatment. Not all doctors in this hospital are bad; George Scott is an excellent doctor, but there are enough bad ones to make the patient survival odds very slim.

The inept medical treatment in this movie and in Such Good Friends raises an interesting point. Films mirror the times and society in which they are made. Certainly along with good medical care there is overcrowding in hospitals, and mistakes but on TV medical shows no one is ever denied a room because of overcrowding, doctors never charge for their services, and the doctors always triumph over rare, serious diseases. In The Hospital there is much overcrowding, people enter with very minor ailments and yet die from bad medical care, and one doctor spends most of his time running a large financial empire. It is worthy of thought that two forms of mass communications should treat the same subject so differently, in the same age.

The Hospital has a few messages sprinkled throughout it, chief of which is that everyone can't run away. Someone has to be responsible so Scott stays on at the hospital that needs him while Rigg goes back to Mexico.

The film has been rated GP by the MPAA. I have a feeling the A.M.A. would rate it X.

Fonteyn In 'Sleeping Beauty'

she danced the Princess Aurora in the Sadler's Wells Ballet's first production of "The Sleeping Beauty." For the re-opening of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, in 1946, she was again Princess Aurora and once more for the Sadler's Wells Ballet's sensational American debut in 1949, in all these works she danced first with Robert Helpmann, forming a famous partnership which lasted until Helpmann left the Royal Ballet in 1951, and then her notable partnership with Michael Somes began.

Since Rudolf Nureyev's first appearance at Covent Garden in 1962, he and Dame Margot have become the most exciting dance partnership in the world. They dance with complete mutual understanding and every one of their performances is magical. In 1954 Dame Margot was elected President of the Royal Academy of Dancing for which she organizes a Gala each winter. For this year's Gala, Rudolf Nureyev's new production of "Raymonda" is to be presented. It was at the R.A.D. Gala in December 1961 that Rudolf Nureyev made his first spectacular appearance in London. In the New Year Honours List of 1956 Margot Fonteyn was made a Dame of the British Empire, the first dancer to be so honoured by the Queen while still dancing. The 1971-1972 season of the National Ballet of Washington, founded in 1962 as the resident company of the nation's capital, opened with a new production of the full-length "Sleeping Beauty."

Alex Barnes, critic of the N.Y. Times, described this event as "one of the most ambitious and successful full evening productions ever staged by any American company." And the Washington Daily News critic wrote that the "National Ballet made a sensational Kennedy Center debut with its new production of 'Sleeping Beauty.' All the glowing advance reports failed to prepare one for the eye-filling splendor of the Tchaikovsky ballet. It was a triumph in every department."

For those planning to purchase a ticket, the box office is open daily from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Tickets cost $1.00 with UVM ID and $2.00 without identification. Reservations must be paid for at least 24 hrs. before the production.

A Preview Of 'Street Car' By Tennessee Williams

Tennessee Williams' play "A Streetcar Named Desire" will be presented at the Arena Theater from March 1st through the 6th, under the direction of Jeff Wilson.

Jeff, a junior at UVM, has had much experience in the field of drama. Last semester he directed two one-act plays, "Black Comedy," and "Tom Thumb." He also played the pilot in "Camino Real," just recently performed. While devoting most of his time to drama, Jeff also announces for WJOY AM-FM on weekends.

Tennessee Williams' complex background is of course manifested in his plays. Being extremely sensitive as a child, Williams was persecuted and exploited by his family. He had a dominating father who ridiculed his effeminacy which produced withdrawal effect on Williams. With this initial bitterness, he continued to write poems and began writing plays.

In 1945 Williams wrote his first successful play, "The Glass Menagerie." However, his response to the riches of success and the facades of his colleagues only increased his withdrawal from society. Soon after, the playwright traveled to Mexico where he wrote "The Paper Moon." By 1947 this play had become "A Streetcar Named Desire."

"Williams' style is the culmination of all the different styles of the 20th century playwrights," the director stated. "He includes comedy, tragedy, and a great deal of symbolism. A Much of the playwright's symbolism stems from his affection for the Mexican culture. Williams employs the flower motif frequently, particularly the Rose-Eden—the name of his mentally ill sister. This Latin American setting was also employed in "Camino Real." The time span of "A Streetcar Named Desire" covers the spring, summer, and fall of 1947 in New Orleans. The play opens introducing Stanley and Stella Kowalski who are expecting a visit from Stella's sister, Blanche DuBois. Being the last vestige of southern aristocracy, Blanche abhors all of Stanley's instinctive, animal characteristics. Preoccupied with the southern tradition of male protection, Blanche is nevertheless attracted to Stanley, or rather to all men. Similarly, Stanley, who actually despises Blanche's air, is simultaneously attracted to her sexually.

Meanwhile, Stanley's best friend, Harold Mitchell enters the plot as Blanche's lover. Disturbed at this relationship, Stanley investigates Blanche's past in an effort to prevent her from leaving. Discovering that Blanche was indeed a prostitute and not the proper "southern belle" she pretended to be, Stanley aggravates the conflict by ruining her relationship with Mitchell. Finally Stanley's male chauvinist instincts provoke him to rape Blanche who is eventually sent to a mental institution.

"But this is only covering the surface of the play," Jeff commented. "It is more about two factions of society. Much of Williams' personality is delivered through Blanche. He employs realism and naturalism with the unreal, and hopefully this will create an impression on the audience," the director finished.

In selecting the cast, Jeff felt it was more important to choose the best combination of

Outlaw Western

Something Big is an entertaining little venture into the most overworked of all film genres: the western. This particular middle size stars Dean Martin and Brian Keith and works well both as a comedy and a western. It is produced and directed by Andrew McLaglen, son of the great actor Victor McLaglen, who makes many of the westerns seen today. His work was the subject of a recent Melv Griffin show.

Dean Martin plays an outlaw who came west from Pennsylvania. He was to marry a Scot lass, but he wanted a two year leave of absence so that once in his life he could do "something big." After four years he has not done much. He travels with a small dog, which sets him apart from the rest of the mill outlaws. Brian Keith is a cavalry officer, on the one of his retirement, determined to stop Martin. Through his trusted scout, Keith learns the startling news that Martin is planning "something big."

The film has enough plot twists and complications to keep it interesting. It is characterized by humorous dialogue which makes the movie quite enjoyable. The photography is good, but the title song and general score is not particularly noteworthy. The scenery is nice, and if you want to spend a couple of hours in pure entertainment, the film will satisfy you.

New 'Image' Or 'Tokenism'
On Trustee Vote

The meeting of the Board of Trustees last Saturday was interesting. Keeping with tradition, they elected two men from the business world to six-year terms. After all, the Board must keep up its "image." But surprisingly, the trustees also elected a woman, and a young one at that, one who only graduated UVM in 1970, and is still a student, albeit a medical student. Heavens!

Although we applaud Miss Cajo Nordstrom's election, it seems to be only an indication of mere tokenism. Granted, Mr. Burke and Dr. Low, the two other new trustees, are comparatively young, but the Board is already well stocked with men of their backgrounds. Mr. Burke is also a resident of Rye, New York, and will probably know about as much of today's UVM as we know about Rye.

What the Board of Trustees needs now is what it needed in December and what it has needed for several years: students and faculty members with FULL voting privileges in addition to committee appointments. For as Gene Beaudoin stated to the Board at that famous meeting 2½ months ago: "We, gentlemen, are the University...not you."

Meaningful Relationship

To the "nice" forewritten girls of the class of '75:

In response to your problem, we are two upstanding freshmen men. As you have probably guessed, we are rather reserved, you complain about our only being out for "a piece of ass." The truth of the situation is that those of us who may appear to be out for "a piece of ass" are only being forward in a way you don't seem to understand. You complain about the boys not asking the girls out and call us all "big chickens."

First of all, we don't know if we like you because we don't know you yet and that would be defeating the purpose of a meaningful relationship. You may not care for us either but there is really no way of knowing without getting together, and there is no way of getting together without us knowing who you are. Tell us your floor and we'll come visit you. Call John 3490.

Very truly yours,
Two members of the class of '75

Dear Freshmen Women

This poem is written in response to the letter some Freshmen women wrote into you last week. It would be greatly appreciated if you would include this poem in your next issue of the Cynic.

Thank you,
4th floor Chittenden

To Freshmen Women

This is a reply to your letter, by freshmen men. We all can see the predicament you're in. We wish to state that it's not our fault. That between us lies a cavernous vault.

You say that we're hiding and can't be found. That wherever you look, there's no male around. My dear freshmen girls, at this you be wrong. The freshmen male lives, and wants you along.

You say the circumstances in which we meet are always the same, and not very sweet. We too are dissatisfied with the conditions that stand. If you want to change them, we'll give you a hand.

But change needs a plan, and plans take time. We of Chittenden Four hope you've got one in mind. Our plan is simple - and with your help it may be. Get the hell out of your dorm, for us to see.

You seem to think that all men want to "get some ass" on an overnight junk. And to say goodbye when the morning sun comes through the window to end night's fun.

At this my dear women, you are quite mistaken. It isn't only your virginity which we would be taking. To meet nice wholesome women would take us by storm. But it's damn hard meeting you when you hide in your dorm!!!

Sentimentality Over Kake Walk Greatly Annoys UVM Professors

As two new members of the UVM faculty, we are constantly annoyed by the emotionalism and extreme sentimentality that seems to be attached to the passing of the yearly "institution" known as Kake Walk. This passing has been cited as reasons for alumni to cease making contributions to the University, a cause of the breakdown in school spirit, and most recently as the prime reason for the passing of the "gay party atmosphere at the University." Perhaps it is time for some sober reflections on the matter.

We do not take issue with the idea of a winter weekend, a winter carnival, or just a plain old fashioned party weekend; these kinds of activities are excellent tonic to dispel the winter blues. But on the specific point of Kake Walk and all that it implies, we do take very strong issue.

When one gets down to the simple facts of the matter, Kake Walk or minstrel shows are degrading to black people. We can say all we want to about how it is all in fun and just part of an old tradition, but if you were black, or sensitive to the feelings of blacks you would not think so. The entire concept is based on a false and misleading stereotype of blacks, the same kind of stereotyping that has prevented the elimination of institutional and individual racism in our society. When whites darken their faces, speak in a dialect erroneously thought to be "the language of the blacks" and allude to customs associated with black tradition, white supremacy is being fostered at the expense of black people. Eliminating the darkening of faces but continuing the concepts of this minstrel institution does not eliminate the fostering of racial injustice.

Though the history of this society is filled with the political, social, scientific, educational and literary accomplishments of Blacks, this society has continued to deny the black citizen his rightful place in the "American Dream." All too often the Black has continued to be characterized as a clowning, inarticulate, lazy individual who likes only to sing and dance. Over the years many changes have occurred in our country to rectify racial injustices and to cause the society to address itself to the needs of black citizens. A concerted effort has been made to cause all citizens to recognize the true principles of the democratic and Christian ethic upon which this nation is supposedly founded. Too much time, however, passed before the degrading tradition of Kake Walk was eliminated from our midst.

One of the authors of this letter heard of the Kake Walk tradition while in far off Michigan. A graduate spoke of it with most glowing memories. We are saddened to think that this tradition which features the ridicule of black citizens is the main image of the University that this young woman carries in her mind. No one can deny the camaraderie and spiritual unity that comes from total involvement in the atmosphere of a University. A truly great university is one in which there is a blend of academic involvement and social interaction through the growth of school spirit and the creation of traditions that bring students, faculty and alumni, the entire university community, together. There are many creative, recreational, social and athletic traditions that could be established to replace the Kake Walk. If indeed the social atmosphere of UVM has been crippled by the elimination of one kind of activity, especially one so reprehensible, then we must be a rather shallow university in terms of creative, original thought.

In closing, we offer this final thought for reflection. A great university is one which imparts to its total community a sense of pride, dignity and unity which is engendered by the sharing of common traditions. If we feel that we are bereft of tradition because Kake Walk is gone, then let us unite to create anew. But let us once and for all cease to bemoan the loss of a misguided tradition based upon hypocrisy.

Questions
Cynic Cartoon On IRA

February 10, 1972

Dear Editor:

If you are going to show "cartoons" on such a controversial issue as the Ulster Question, the least that can be done is to give both viewpoints. The Irish Republican Army and the Provisional (a group which left the IRA over a difference in policy), do not make a point of shooting civilians. For this aspect of the war the English soldiers have the best record.

For over 50 years, the Catholic minority has been in pursuit of things most Americans take for granted: adequate jobs and voice in deciding their own future. Foreign troops do not belong in the Six Counties. Only when the Scottish units are removed and internment without trial is ended, can any start be made in settling the future of Protestants and Catholics in this troubled country known as Northern Ireland.

Yours sincerely,
Brian McGuire

C'mon, Girls, You're Responsible For Social Gatherings, Too

To the Editor:

This letter is being written in response to the letter written by the Freshmen Women in last week's Cynic. My main objective here is to try to clear up the misconceptions on the girls' part as to the aim of all "male animals" on campus, and secondly, to express the mental workings of possibly many guys on campus, especially independent dorm romantic boy, was to sit in your dorm, look pretty, and splash on some perfume, forget it.

This is the future girls, not just some retake for the local Glam Magazine production. "Gentleman callers" just aren't going to go looking around at all hours, with flashlights in their sweaty hands, for chicks. Just as hundreds of guys sit in their rooms on Friday and Saturday nights, getting stoned or drunk in their depressed state of affairs, so do the girls. And it's sick!

The dorms need exposure to each other. And it's no more the guys' fault as it is the girls'. The girls started blowing off at the mouth about relationships. What gives you the impression that you can even determine right off how extensive a relationship is going to be? You can take the same chance as the males. Or are your "diary entries" much too precious to be messed up with unfortunate situations?

Rest Assure,
Girls!

To the Editor:

Dear Freshmen Girls,

Rest assured that there are some boys on campus who would like to meet some nice girls. There are many of us who would like having someone to talk to, take to an occasional dance or dinner, hiking, skiing, camping, snowshoeing, horse-back riding, or a good old-fashioned walk. What then, is stopping us? Well, heavy course loads, and full or part-time jobs combined with other duties on campus or at home leave us with very little or no time for "hunting" (were we to meet a nice girl, we would certainly "make the time.") What we need is a little helping hand from you (and an occasional push). Any suggestions would be deeply appreciated.

Why Are Professors Seeking To Eliminate Pass-Fail System?

by Terry Demas

In the past few months there has been a somewhat large reaction on this campus to the Board of Trustees' decision to concern Michael Parenti and "Academic Freedom." Well, lately a couple more things have come up that appear in the "Academic Rights for Students" column. There are now two proposals before the Faculty Senate that affect the academic life of the student body of UVM: (1) Members of the Political Science Department (Professors Flannery, Nelson, Staron, Warner, and Wertheimer) have proposed to their senate that the Pass/Fail system be abolished. Claiming that the present experiment in pass/fail represents an injury to "the interests of the academic community," they go on to say that "the price paid for the benefits which are gained is too great." They say that the original intent of pass/fail, among several others, was to encourage students to take courses which they would not normally take because of a fear of a bad letter mark. However, according to these professors, it seems that "students do not generally intend to make a significant intellectual commitment to the courses in which they enroll on a pass/no pass basis." (By the same token, does this mean that students who are forced to take requirements that they have no use for and therefore do not have an intellectual commitment to, will be relieved by the faculty dropping those requirements?) (2) It is also being proposed to the Faculty Senate that the period a student has to drop courses be shortened to three weeks from five weeks. This is being proposed in spite of the Curriculum Committee's voted suggestion that this same period be dramatically enlarged. Why this proposal was disregarded we have not yet been told.

In their proposal to eliminate pass/fail, the professors five of Poli Sci note that "these observations are put forth without 'hard evidence', without having conducted any systematic research, and without reference to the glaring examples that all of us have experienced." Therefore, by using such evidence, these enlightened gentlemen contend that pass/fail is a failure and must go. That they propose no new mark system, seems to mean not a damn; pass/fail evidently bothers some professors and therefore it is finished. Actually, what is happening is a back handed support of the archaic A-B-C system which has little relevance to judging learning performance. Pass/fail has never been popular with professors and it hasn't exactly had the students cheering in the bandstands, but it was something of a step forward, compromised and weak, in making the

Wants Apology
For Superstar Seats

February 18, 1972

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to take your editorial "Cattle" one step further. It seems that a great injustice was done, not only to $14 and $17 series ticket holders, but all Lane Series ticket holders, and perhaps even "rush" ticket holders.

Up until less than one week before the performance, "Superstar" was billed as the rock opera, not a concert, but how long ago did the administrators know of the difference? Could it be that back in December, when the date was set to be during Winter Week and the concert moved to Patrick Gym, that it was known, but not greatly publicized then? Who would try to put a full stage performance of an opera in Patrick Gym?

Let us also examine the coincidence of the date being set during Winter Week. For the first time in the past eight years, since I've been in Vermont, did the Lane Series move a concert to the Gym to "accommodate more people," to the detriment of all season ticket holders (some $24 series ticket holders had to sit off to the sides, hearing much too well and seeing only with difficulty). The question begins to arise, did the Lane Series let itself be the prostitute of a financial flop weekend? If the performers were paid a fixed sum, who is receiving the additional profits collected from the sale of sardine seats? How much is being filtered to make this Winter Fiasco profitable enough to put a dent in last year's enormous debt? This letter is in no way meant to be a criticism of the touring company. They did what they were prepared to do and performed quite well. But for reasons beyond their control, no one at the performance was getting what he thought he paid for. I feel sure that this accounted for much of the lack of applause early in the show, cheating the performers as well as the patrons.

The Lane Series owes its regular patrons an humble public apology for this travesty. Winter Week administrators may perhaps deserve a full scale investigation of their efforts to erase their prior debts. Could it be that misrepresentation has been added to mismanagement as injustices done to the UVM-Burlington community since the demise of Winter Week's traditional athletic event? I hope the answer is no.

'Listen to me...' Cries
Angered Homosexual

To The Editor:

For me to write a negative letter in regard to homosexuality would be for me to ally myself to a close frame of reference. It would also be an attempt, on my part, to impose my will, my lifestyle, and my values on someone who is equal to, and in many ways better than myself.

Since I feel together enough with myself, I do not see homosexuality as being wrong for you. For myself, I reject it. As you may think the heterosexual relationship is the ideal relationship, I feel the beauty of the homosexual relationship. No deceit. I am what I am. A human being, possessing all the frailties and all the attributes as any other human being. I feel the same. When I read some of the "Condemners" of the "idea" of homosexuality, I became angry. I wanted to write a letter filled with sarcasms and cynicism, with rhetoric and sophistry.

Bullshit! I do not regard you as being ill. I do not feel pity or remorse for you. And perhaps, most importantly, because I do not feel comfortable with holding on to defunct ideals or decaying lifestyles, I do not want you as an extension of me.

As one individual to another: I listen to you, now you listen to me. Pain knows neither age, nor race, nor sex. In many ways loneliness and pain are synonymous. If there is an illness, or abnormality attached to homosexuality, it is also attached to heterosexuality. It is attached to any sexuality where social pressures prevent the development of healthy interpersonal relationships. Dig it! You do your thing, whatever it is right for you, and I do mine. Maybe we'll meet, maybe we won't. So what? Perhaps, I hear you saying that you want to solve the problems of the world. If so, then I might suggest that the world is within you.

Thank you,

Letter Desc Bangla

February 17, 1972

Dear Editor:

The enclosed letter was written to me by Dr. Safiuddin Jorjor, a native of Bangladesh and an Associate Professor of History at Bangladesh University.

Dr. Jorjor and I were classmates at Harvard University. Upon receiving a Ph.D. from Harvard in 1960, he returned to his native country to teach.

This letter represents the first word I have received from him since the holocaust in Bangladesh. It is an excellent first person account of the situation, the horror of which we here in the U.S. cannot appreciate. I believe it would be a service to your readers to print it in the Cynic.

Dear Paul,

I am so glad to receive today your letter written on January 1. What I saw and went through during the past six months had such a traumatic effect on me that it is really difficult for me to express myself coherently and clearly. I now understand better than ever before what it is to live with a threat to life hanging over you every moment, what it is to hear guns booming around you all the time, what it is to see your dear and near ones, colleagues and acquaintances lifted by the military and eliminated in the most brutal manner, what it is to see women of all ages taken away by the military and violated in the grossest manner. The Bangla Desh was turned to the Punjabi military inferno. Of independence has been achieved at such a heavy cost that we cannot have no more to celebrate it with pomp and circumstance; the memory of the last six months is haunting us and will continue to do so for time to come.

From the moment of British rule over divided Indian Union and Pakistan in 1947, it became clear that powerful motives in West Pakistan regarded Bangla Desh (then known as East Pakistan) as their colony which was to be exploited for their selfish ends. Attempts were made to cripple the Bangladeshi economy politically and culturally. At the decision-making position in the army and the civil service were held by the Punjabis. Industry was developed in West Pakistan with foreign currency earned through the jute of Bangla Desh. They tried all the time to destroy the Bengali language and impose on the Bengali Urdu, the language of not more than 5 per cent of the population. For the past

AquaCats Conference Champs

For the first time since 1958—and only the second time ever—a University of Vermont athletic team has posted an undefeated regular season. UVM's swim team victory over Union College Feb. 16, 73-32, gave the AquaCats a 10-0 mark, plus a victory in the Plattsburgh Relays back in early December.

In 1958, Archie Post's cross country team raced to an undefeated dual meet slate, in addition to first-place finishes in the Yankee Conference Championships and the New England.

Vermont's swim success this year is clearly indicated by the decisive scores they have mounted against the opposition. Since the Plattsburgh Relays (Dec. 4), which the Cats won by 10 points over Plattsburgh, Vermont has recorded impressive victories over Maine—81-32; Keene State—83-29; Massachusetts—80-31; Colby—84-29; Coast Guard—70-43; St. Lawrence—92-21; Norwich—93-18; Connecticut—63-50; Plattsburgh—74-39 and Union—78-32.

Admitting that some of the clubs on Vermont's schedule are just in the beginning stages of their swim programs, such as Maine and Keene State, Vermont's head coach Les Leggett felt his swim team was tough when they had to be. "Each meet on Connecticut and Coast Guard, both away, were particularly rugged," said Leggett. Coast Guard, recently upended Wesleyan, a team that upset Amherst, the No. 2 team in New England.

Leggett cited four of his swimmers that have been the heart of the club, led by captain and standout diver, Don Macomber (Latham, N.Y.). Others are backstroke specialist, John Gilbert (North Haven, Conn.); distance freestyle star, Bob Small (Keene, N.H.); and clutch performer in the 50 and 100-yard freestyle, Bruce Willard (Loomisfield, Mass.). "This has been the mainstay of our club. These four have been something to watch and their character and maturity were very important to us," Leggett said.

Macomber is considered one of the top divers in New England, and at one point last year had won 41 consecutive diving events dating back to high school. "A very consistent performer," Gilbert has flashed a 2.04 backstroke, one of the top times in New England. Small has had outstanding times in the 500 and 1000-yard freestyle and currently holds the UVM record in the 100 Willard is considered "Mr. Clutch" by Leggett.

The next challenge is the Yankee Conference Relays at the University of Massachusetts, Feb. 26, followed by the New England.

UVM Snowballs Army 5-3

by Dave Clark

The University of Vermont Catamounts won their ninth game in a row and now the Cats prepare for the tournament at the season's end. Vermont won the game quite convincingly as they out muscled the army men in a very rough contest.

The first period was characterized by poor passing by both teams and fast action as the period seemed to be one end to end rush after another. John Kiely was only made to work in this period as the cadets put 15 shots on net while the Cats recorded 20 shots on net and two goals. John looked good all game and made some super saves during the night. This was John's second victory over a Division I team as he also beat Northern Conn. 3-2 in a close game earlier this month.

The Cats got on the score board first as Larry Snow tallied with an unassisted goal. Larry's score came on a 20 foot shot with only a little over two minutes gone in the period. Vermont was skating well and made the military men look bad at times. Vermont's second goal came about 16 minutes later as Roger Mallette tipped in a shot by Defenseman John Murphy. Army got on the scoreboard 28 seconds later as Woloshyn scored for the crewcuts. Vermont and West Point traded even on penalties in this period. Galgay went off a 11:47 of the period for hounding Willie MacKinnon made his trip to the box at 19:37 for slashing.

The second period was the key and winning period for the Cats as UVM got three goals in this period to only one for the Cadets. Army scored first in the period as Roubian got the goal with assists going to Eaton and Clark. This tied the game at 2-2 with almost two periods of hockey to be played. Sam Simmons put Vermont ahead again as he deflected a pass from Chris Burns.

The officiating in this game was questionable as two times Army took a wild swing at a Vermont player with their sticks and no penalties were called. Slashing is when you swing your stick at another player and it doesn't matter if you hit him or not.

Vermont did some of their best checking of the season as they out slammed and pushed the cadets from West Point. Brad Cooke came up with the best checks as he battered the army men against the boards.

The game had several near fights as the play got very rough and at times dirty. Chris Hurley had his minor arguments with No. 15 Voegel, a defenseman for Army.

Ted Castle is one goal away from tying the season record for goals set by Rico Minarsky in the 69-70 season. Ted now has 23 goals for the first 21 games of the season which is a very good average of better than one goal per game.

Fred Hunt put Vermont

ahead 4-2 on a sizzling slap from just inside the blue line after he took the pass from John Murphy. The Army goalie never saw the shot as it went through his legs untouched. This gave Freddy 42 points on the season and a very good chance to break the single season scoring record set by Patty Wright a week ago. Patty has 43 points for this season which is a new record for the Cats but it may not last very long the way that first is scoring.

Ted Castle scored Vermont's last goal of the night as he put in a backhand shot from right in front of the goal. This goal came at 17:03 of the second period with assists going to Bob Hodde and Fred Hunt.

Sam Simmons left the ice in the second period after being knocked down at center ice. Sam was groggy but appears to be all right as is expected to play against Middlebury on Wed. night.

Weather Robs UVM Of Victory At Dartmouth

by Peter Hicks

The UVM Ski Team, on the verge of its first Carnival victory in memory, fell victim to fate this past weekend at the Williams Carnival. The situation appeared well in hand for the Cats Saturday afternoon as the team pulled to within .09 points, a microscopic margin, of Dartmouth with one event, the jump, to go. The jump is unquestionably UVM's strongest event with the brilliant contingent of Kongali, Grimmes, and Guldbranson consistently able to outdistance any other college trio. As the saying goes: the carnival was "in the bag." But unfortunately late Saturday afternoon, it became apparent that a highly distressing situation was developing for the Cats. The winds, with gusts up to 50 miles per hour, were making the prospects of jumping dim—the conditions were too dangerous. Time did not prove to alleviate the situation, thus early Sunday morning the Williams college officials did the only possible thing and called off the jump, declaring Dartmouth the victor in an abbreviated contest.

All was not lost at Williams, however. UVM copped a close second place finish and, if its progress as a team continues consistent to form, established itself as perhaps the top College ski team in the East.

There were several outstanding performances by UVM skiers which should be once again acknowledged. Peter Bisset for the first time reflected the promise he has shown since coming to UVM with his 2nd place finish in the cross country. Alpine performers Dave Dodge and Wayne Wright took first and second places respectively in the combined. The Carnival this week is at the Middlebury Snow Bowl. The Downhill and the Cross Country are on Friday and the slalom and jumping on Saturday. All interested in seeing these top competitors, who are the best in the east, should take advantage of the opportunity and go down to root for the Cats.

Torchlight Race

There will be a torchlight cross country relay race on Monday, February 28th. The race will be run on the University of Vermont green beginning at seven thirty. The United States team, just back from the Olympics, will race against members of the Canadian and Norwegian teams. Also racing will be teams from UVM, Williams, Dartmouth, and Middlebury. Here is an opportunity to see some of the best men and women cross country racers in the world.

THE INSIDER

by Sam Simmons

Pat Wright hobbled over to practice Monday afternoon with his roommate, bodyguard, and UVM hockey superfan, Bruce Houghton. We talked for while about how he felt, etc. Later on, during practice, I couldn't help but think about two things in particular he had said. First of all, he told me he was glad he was not a senior this year. He is already looking forward to next year's season. The doctor has given him some exercises to do four times a day. Its tough for anyone to have to watch their team from the stands, but especially for this guy, knowing how much he put into hockey and also how much he got out of it. If he could play with a cast on his leg, he would.

The other thing Patty mentioned concerned the Division II play-offs coming up in the beginning of March. We have two regular season games remaining with Middlebury and Norwich. We have won at Middlebury only once in our history and that was before any of the guys on the team were around.

They would love to spoil our chances for that first seed in the tournament, as Norwich did last year. However, there is nothing any of us would like more than beating Middlebury down there and then beating Norwich at our rink next Wednesday.

(This was written Tuesday evening. I hope the outcome of last night's game will not affect what I have said above.)

Winter Week Considered Successful By Directors

by Mary Jo Dahlbloom

With regard to both the financial aspects and student participation, the general consensus is that Winter Week at UVM proved successful. Terry Demas, a co-ordinator of the activities carried on during the Winter Week, stated that the overall expenditures for the various events were just about what it had been anticipated that they would be. No financial loss had been expected and none resulted at the conclusion of the week's festivities.

The income from the "J. Geils Band" and "Yes" concert on February 24, was a bit larger than had been foreseen. Barbara Chausse, a member of the committee responsible for the organization of the concert, offered the following comment: "For the 'J. Geils Band' and 'Yes,' we sold out and had to resell 200 tickets. The total cost of the groups was, roughly estimated, approximately $7,500 to $10,500. Ticket sales hovered around the $5,000 mark."

Student response was also extremely favorable to the concert, as Barbara Chausse indicated. "The audience at the concert was excellent—both bands backstage were very excited about the response of the audience."

Even though students were hassled by having to evacuate the gym because of a bomb threat, once the audience was seated again, they were, as Barbara expressed it, "ready for 'J. Geils.'" When "Yes" appeared, they were also well received with their "beautiful, soft music" that changed the tone of the concert.

The concert is considered to have been successful by its co-ordinators in relation to student response. The Baroque Ensemble on February 23, drew approximately 350 people. Barbara Chausse characterized those who attended the Baroque Concert as "wonderful and extremely polite."

Attendance at the five nightly performances of the play The Boys in the Band, was about 180 each night. For both the cast of the play and the audience, The Boys in the Band constituted a rather unique theater experience. The lecture by Dick Gregory, presented at no cost to UVM students on February 25, attracted a good-sized crowd. Mr. Gregory's cynical wit and barbs elicited enthusiastic response from the majority of those present.

Although the Players Masked Ball did not draw a very large crowd, students who did attend reported having had a "really good time."

One negative response to Winter Week came from those who believed that it would have been better if the activities of the week had been distributed throughout the course of the semester. Terry Demas pointed out that two more concerts are planned for the remainder of the semester. In all probability, two more plays will be performed, additional speakers will be presented, and the weekly film series sponsored by the SA will continue to run on campus.

A primary complaint of the activities during Winter Week was voiced by students who usually study in Billings. Entertainment was provided throughout the week in the "Roundhouse" and as a result, students were unable to study there. Terry Demas counters with this remark: "During the past week, Billings became something more than just a glorified study hall—a little bit more than just a building. Students were going there to have a good time."

This year, the concept of a "central, self-perpetuating committee" controlling activities of Winter Week was replaced by having each organization responsible for maintaining its own budget. Terry Demas feels that rather than having such a loose-structured committee, there should be a greater coordination of the various groups. Greater authority, though not total control by a few individuals, would result from having a somewhat more organized or more structured committee.

In addition, Terry Demas offered the subsequent comment concerning the notion of holding a Winter Festival of some sort: "I think

President Andrews Comments On 'Blackmail' Charge, UVM - Legislature Relations

by Jeffrey Yecker

The following are excerpts from an interview with Dr. Edward C. Andrews, President of the University. A second installment will appear in next week's Cynic.

QUESTION: When you accepted the post of President two years ago, did you expect quite this many headaches, with the budget, with people like Mr. Beckley and Mr. Parenti?

ANSWER: Well, I honestly did not expect the Beckley and Parenti thing, but I knew we were headed for financial difficulty. The University was headed for serious financial trouble when I took office. Other institutions are in similar trouble—the problem is a national one.

QUESTION: A letter in the Burlington Free Press a few weeks ago accused you of "blackmailing" the Legislature by threatening a $800,000 deficit. What is your reaction to that?

ANSWER: Well, in no sense was this a threat. As a matter of fact, when we went before the House Appropriations Committee we just outlined for them our financial problem and went right through it. They in no way felt threatened, in no way felt blackmailed; they were very sympathetic to our problem. As a matter of fact, they felt we did an excellent job in muscling down the budget to its present level. We will be increasing our expenditures in Fiscal 1973 by only 4.2%. And remember the cost of living—everything is going up, practically all of that 4.2% is in areas we have no control over: changes in Social Security Legislation, unemployment compensation legislation, the cost of fuel oil, the cost of gas, the cost of lights—the cost of everything. Virtually that entire increase is in areas we have no control over. So this means we have had to cut way back on lots of expenses. We have laid off a lot of people we're not replacing; we'll be teaching 300-odd more students next year with 35 to 40 fewer faculty.

So, that kind of letter in the Free Press is always from, you know, somebody who has to say something. It was in no sense a threat or blackmail. In fact there are many in the Legislature who feel that we deserve more money than what they've appropriated.

QUESTION: Could you generalize the state of the University's relationship with the Legislature at present, or would that be too broad?

ANSWER: No, I think we can. I'm probably the wrong one to ask, but I can tell you what other people have told me. People very high in State government, people who know people who are very responsible. They have said that our relationship with the Legislature is improving. As a matter of fact, the University Appropriation Bill is on the floor right now.

and thus far no one has attacked the University of Vermont. In past years they usually have QUESTION: Can you think of any specific reasons why our relations have improved?

Legislature at present, or would that be too broad?

ANSWER: No, I think we can. I'm probably the wrong one to ask, but I can tell you what other people have told me. People very high in State government, people who know people who are very responsible. They have said that our relationship with the Legislature is improving. As a matter of fact, the University Appropriation Bill is on the floor right now.

New SA Constitution Would Consolidate Fraternities, Sororities, IRA

by Jeri Covey

The Student Association has been in the process of rewriting its constitution. The rewriting started out with two objectives: to consolidate the Inter Residence Association, the Panhellenic Council, and the Fraternity Forum with the Student Association, and to better organize the structure of the Student Association.

Last week there was a meeting of members of the executive boards of SA, IRA, and Panhel. At the beginning of the meeting, Gene Beaudoin, President of SA, said that the constitutional draft that would be discussed that night had been prepared by the Constitutional Revision Committee, which is recognized by the SA Senate as the one group which is writing the new constitution. He also said that the final constitution would be written by the executive boards of Panhel, Fraternity Forum, IRA, and SA.

The Panhel representatives said that they were totally against the idea of merging all the campus governments into SA. What followed throughout the meeting was the slow realization that the merger between Panhel and SA was not necessary. Many misunderstandings between the two executive boards were cleared up, and it was shown that each group could function effectively with cooperation without the merger that was originally called for in the preliminary draft of the constitution.

Cooperation between the two organizations will be accomplished by the inclusion of the President of Panhel, as well as the Presidents of IRA and the Fraternity Forum, in the Coordinating Committee (comparable to what is now called the Executive Board) of SA.

As the merger is still advocated by IRA, the parts of the constitution that deal with the merger as such will contain "may" clauses instead of the previously written "shall" clauses. These parts of the constitution are the ones that deal with the setting up of the different "caucuses" representing the dorms, the fraternities, the sororities, and the town members. According to the new constitution, the representatives to the SA Senate may also be the representatives to these separate caucuses which would deal with the problems of its different members in the same way that they are now being dealt with by the separate organizations.

The other changes in the constitution deal mainly with the kinds and the duties of the officers. The duties of President would remain the same, as would the duties of the Chairman of the Finance Committee. There would be a permanent Chairman of the Senate; currently, it is a rotating chairmanship of the Senators. The Chairman of the Senate's duties would be to preside over the Senate, assume the duties of the President if he was not able to perform them, assign legislation to committees, prepare the agenda of the Senate meetings, appoint a parliamentarian, and sit on the Coordinating Board.

There would be a chairman for each of the separate caucuses. They will preside over the caucus and will be members of the Coordinating Committee. Each will be able to have one assistant. A communication Coordinator will be the head of the Communications Committee which will be in charge of liaison to the Cynic and public WRUV-AM and public

A Skinnier Gregory Suggests We 'Stop Eating Turkey'; Calls Press 'Sad Tragedy'

by Jeri Covey

Dick Gregory, famous Negro comic and lecturer, spoke to a large crowd, mostly of students, last Friday night in Patrick Gymnasium. His theme of the lecture was that it's "important for you young people to inform yourselves" because "you youngsters got a big job and don't have much time."

Having just completed the eleventh month of his fast in protest against the war in Vietnam, he suggested that the best way to stop the war would be for all young people to organize and boycott some major industry. The boycott would work because the establishment gets scared when you "mess with the money."

Gregory said that if everyone decided to stop eating turkey or chicken, then the whole poultry industry would join the peace movement "with Colonel Sanders in the lead."

Gregory called the American press a sad tragedy. It is important in a democratic society for the press to inform the people, but he said that the press is too busy now protecting their commercial and advertising interests. Ralph Nader, a private citizen can find things wrong with our society that the press doesn't. During the question and answer period following the lecture, in response to the question of how can the young inform themselves if the press is such a bad source, Gregory said there are many good books that are informative. He also said that we should be aware of what the press doesn't print and read between the lines.

Calling the CIA a "degenerate, vicious" group, he said that it is important for people to research how Hitler came to power. Hitler terrorized Germany and blamed it on others, he held that this is similar to the situation in the United States today. The FBI have no credibility today either. In recalling the May Day demonstration in Washington last year, he said that they were able to arrest 7,000 people in one day for demonstrating, but they haven't been able to find the person who set the bomb in the Capitol Building. Stating that there is now a new criminal type in the United States, long hair, side burns, T-shirt, jeans, the police have become so involved with arresting peace demonstrators, but the real criminals, i.e., pimps and dopepushers, can operate in broad daylight without getting busted.

Another disparity in our society is that people go to jail not for what they do, but why they do it. Using the example of the strikers in New York City who held up traffic by raising the drawbridges over the rivers and then walking out with the keys, he said that if they were doing it in protest to Vietnam, they would have been sent to jail instead of getting a raise.

Violence is only a short term solution, it's no good for America, Gregory stated. But he says that America wants you to become violent, the children's cartoons are the violent shows on television. "Hate makes your mind foul." He asked for a rally behind morality, for people who are willing to fight for what is right.

"You have a price to pay to your body" for anything that you put into it, whether it be coffee, alcohol, or pot. Calling people who think that they have to put these things into their body in order to change the world "revolutionary pimps," he said to forget it. You would just turn into "young slimy degenerates" who are even worse than the "old slimy degenerates" because the old will eventually die, but we have to put up with the young ones for a lot longer.

Gregory thanked the young people for turning the black movement into a people's movement, freeing Indians, Chicanos, women. He said that Shirley Chisholm's candidacy for president is very important because it will "free people's minds."

Not all of the speech was on quite so serious a note. Gregory started out by saying that he was really glad to be here because "I used to think that Vermont was a rumor. I never met a cat from Vermont."

"I love the way you treat your black folk here, all eighty-two of them." In regard to his fast, the worst part is the stupid questions asked by people, for instance, "How do you feel? Hungry?" He has gone down from his top weight of 225 pounds to 99 pounds. His worst problem is buying underwear, "don't mind buying it in the children's section" but if he loses any more weight he'll have to use

UVM VPIRG Elects Representatives

by Arlene Eriksen

Three juniors, one sophomore and one freshman have been elected as UVM representatives to the Board of Trustees of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group. The students are Sue Bolognani, Pam Brown, Arlene Eriksen, Dick Couture and Tom Talbot. Chosen during the elections which took place on February 16 and 17, these students will represent UVM's sentiments on the major policy decisions of VPIRG.

The annual corporate meeting of VPIRG is on Saturday at 10:30 AM in Marsh Lounge, Billings Center. The Director of research, projects, the status of other schools, and the budget are among the imperative topics to be discussed. The election of officers (the positions of which are open to any VPIRG member) is also scheduled for that day.

The local branch of VPIRG is presently undertaking two projects, one being a health care survey and the other being a retail price survey of drug items in Burlington proper. The UVM group would like to remind the student body and the community that it is open to suggestions for projects and would especially like volunteers to assist in carrying them out. Anyone so inclined should contact a member of the Board or should go to the branch office in the Government Research building on Main Street.

In addition, it is anticipated that a director will be chosen by the middle of March. VPIRG is in the process of reviewing resumes and interviews for prospective directors have been set-up for the weekend of March 11.

Life In UVM's Ghetto-On-The-Green

by Jim Judd

This article is written for the benefit of all you on campus people who live in dormitories with large rooms, luxurious lounges, dining halls that are nearer than a quarter of a mile from your room, showers that work, and adequate heating facilities.

And to point out to you some of the drawbacks and advantages of living in the "Shoe Boxes," "The Ghetto," or whatever other name you know Chittenden, Buckham and With Halls as, many people tend to overlook how over 400 male students live in these buildings. I would like to inform many of you about these living conditions.

About two and a half weeks ago there was a fire reported in the basement of Buckham Hall, and upon investigation, Head Resident Bill Root noted that oil from one of the lines in the basement was burning and causing a substantial blaze. As Bill put it, "I would have had little trouble extinguishing the fire, provided I could have gotten into the boiler room." But the door was locked, and he did not have a key. The fire department was summoned and for safety's sake the building was evacuated. At the same time, Maintenance was called to come and unlock the door. However, the fire department arrived at the building before Maintenance, so the head resident "carded" the door with a pocket comb and the fire was extinguished.

Root later said that the fire trucks had considerable difficulty in getting up to the building because parked cars were blocking the drive, and that one truck could not make it at all. However, he said, it was not a major emergency, but if it had been, there were so many implications that it might have ended up in a disaster. This is one grave disadvantage to living in these dorms, that the R.A.'s don't have keys to the boiler room in case of an emergency.

Heat is also a major problem in these buildings, as the heat is received from Given Medical Building, therefore having very little regulation. In the fall the rooms are overheated and in the winter they are underheated. You have two choices as to the desired amount of heat you want: either on or off. And as these radiators have exposed metal pipes, if you accidentally touch one you run the risk of receiving a rather nice 1st or 2nd degree burn. So, if you see people with scorched arms and hands, you will know that the heat in

Q-Why do you oppose birth control in the black community?

A-Birth control in the black community is genocide. The infant mortality is double what it is in the white community, therefore it is not needed. Only needed in the white community.

Q-What are your feelings on J. Edgar Hoover?

A-He is a "bad, mean man," he has power because he has "dirt on everybody." I wish he was in an old people's home with a bedpan.

Q-What is your stand on the candidacy of George Wallace?

A-It won't last. "The Nixon Administration busted Wallace on income tax," but they made a deal for Wallace to run as a third party to split the Democrats. The indictment is still open.

Q-You stated before that the CIA was responsible for the deaths of Martin Luther King and Robert Kennedy, how is this so?

A-If you look at the back newspapers at the time of Robert Kennedy's assassination, and add up the total number of bullets that were found in Kennedy and the four other people shot with him, it is a total of fifteen bullets. Impossible to have been shot by only one person.

Dick Gregory was sponsored by the SA Speaker Bureau in conjunction with Winter Week. He has just published a new book "Dick Gregory's Political Primer." He also has a new record out "Dick Gregory-Kent State." Gregory suggested that anyone wanting a tape of his lecture at UVM should write to the CIA.

Some of the questions that were asked at the end of the speech were:

Q-How do you feel about the Hamburg trial?

A-"If they get convicted we're all in trouble." The informer of the evidence of the conspiracy was made to cooperate with the police because they let him out of jail every day, and gave him prostitutes to sleep with, and other special favors.

S.A. Discusses Student Government Merger relations for the Senate. The Communications Coordinator will also be a member of the Coordinating Committee.

Provisions are made for two officers of the Senate. They are a Secretary for Student Activities, who is a liaison to the recognized clubs and organizations, and a Secretary of Elections, who will handle the elections. All of the above officers will be elected by a plurality vote of the student body. The constitution stipulates that these elections will take place during the month of March.

In addition to the above officers, there will be a full-time employed secretary to work in the SA Office and take the minutes of the meetings.

The above changes are as of yet tentative, and minor revisions may still be made. An official draft of the constitution will be released this week. SA hopes the changes of the constitution will promote greater organization and cooperation between the different factions of the student body; they believe having the Presidents of SA and Panel, and the chairmen of the Caucuses of IRA and the Fraternity Forum all on one Coordinating Committee will prevent the duplication of effort that exists now. They also feel this would provide a greater input and output to the Student Association on issues that involve the whole student body.

Ghosts Of Murdered Men Fight Imbalance Of Good And Evil

by Conix Master

This week, we have two superheroes featured. Both of them are ghosts of murdered men.

THE SPECTRE

The Spectre first appeared from February 1940 to February 1945 in both his own strip and as a member of the Justice Society of America. He then disappeared until a three-issue series in Showcase magazine in 1966. He then got his own magazine which lasted for ten issues from December 1967 to June 1969. He also appeared in two teamups in Brave and Bold and in several issues of Justice League of America.

The Spectre was the ghost of Detective Jim Corrigan, who was killed by gangsters. But a voice said that his work was not finished as long as there was crime on earth. So Jim's ghost returned to earth. Later, the voice decided that the job was too big for one individual and Jim elected to remain on earth and do what he could. The Spectre's powers were many and varied. In addition to the powers generally associated with ghosts, he could split into many Spectres, shrink in size, or grow large enough to hold planets in his hand. He also could travel through time and to other dimensions. Nevertheless, he was not immortal. In his last appearance, he dissolved

while preventing the collision of two planets, DEADMAN

"The man who was just murdered is our hero. His story begins one minute later." This dramatic caption began the origin story of Deadman.

Before his death, Deadman was a circus performer named Boston Brand. One night, while performing his act, he was shot. But he did not cease to exist. Rama Kushna, god of the balance of good and evil, gave him the power to find his murderer. His main weapon was the ability to possess the bodies of others. He found his killer, but was not satisfied. Instead of accepting eternal rest, he persuaded Rama to allow him to remain on earth to combat the imbalance of good and evil.

Deadman appeared in Strange Adventures from issue 205 thru 216, two teamups with Batman in Brave and the Bold, a single teamup with the Challengers of the Unknown, and a three-issue run in Aquaman, where he foiled an alien invasion. His most recent appearance was in the November 1971 issue of Justice League of America.

Beginning next week: a series on the Avengers, beginning with the original team of Thor, Iron, Man, Ant-Man, the Wasp, and the Hulk.

IRA Elections To Be Held On March 9, Positions Still Open

by Jeri Covey

Elections for the Inter Residence Association Executive Board will be held on March 9. The elections for the offices of President, Vice President of Welfare, Vice President of Social and Cultural Affairs, Vice President of Financial Affairs, Corresponding Secretary, and Recording Secretary. As of press time Tuesday night there were only two candidates for the elections, one for Vice President of Welfare, and one for Recording Secretary.

Anyone who has a grade point average of 1.7 or above, lives in a residence hall, and has not achieved senior standing is eligible for any one of the offices. All persons wishing to run must declare their candidacy by notifying either their IRA representative or Margaret Tetric (ext. 2592) in writing by March 2, that's today.

The composition and the duties of the Executive Board will not be changed by the new SA constitution. The Executive Board will just be incorporated into the IRA caucus provided by the new constitution, the only difference will be that the President will be part of the Coordinating Committee of

SA. Margaret Tetric, Vice President of Welfare and acting President in the wake of Steve Rice's resignation, stated that the "new government is a good idea" and she hopes that it will "be able to accomplish more."

The duties of the President are to serve as chief executive officer over IRA, call and preside over meetings of the Executive Board and the Council, serve as an ex-officio member of all IRA meetings, serve as official representative of IRA to the University community, appoint a parliamentary, appoint a Community Relations Director, submit a report of the progress and activity of IRA during his tenure to the incoming President.

The duties of the Vice President of Welfare are to assume the duties of President in his absence, chair the IRA Standards and Publications Committee, facilitate all negotiations between IRA and the Housing Office and Food Services Office. The Vice President of Social and Cultural Affairs is in charge of establishing a sound and healthy social program for the members of IRA by sponsoring special extracurricular social activities, and providing social to enhance the aesthetic welfare of the constituency. The duties of the Vice President of Financial Affairs are to be responsible for all IRA accounts, submit an annual budget to the Executive Board, insure an annual audit of the accounts is done, screen special requests for additional funds, and consult with the Bursar in matters relevant to the consolidated funds.

The duties of the Corresponding Secretary are to attend to the correspondence of IRA, maintain permanent files of all correspondence, manage office supplies and equipment. The duties of the Recording Secretary are to keep the minutes of the Executive Board and the Council, distribute copies of the IRA minutes, and maintain the permanent files of IRA.

The attendance at the Council meetings of IRA has been poor this semester. This is not helped by the fact that there are no minutes as both Secretaries are not able to carry out their duties. Margaret Tetric asked that more people attend the meetings because "no executive board can pull it off without people coming." The meetings are held every Tuesday night at 6:30 in the main lounge of MAT.

Life In The Shoeboxes...

their room was working!

Another thing that many people would like to see corrected is the mail service. All mail is delivered to Converse, and many times the sorting process is rather slow. So, you often have to wait several times before you actually pick it up. In addition, the only washers and dryers for these three dorms are located in Converse, which again is a little inconvenient.

Many of you living in the newer dorms can count your blessings that on stormy days and nights you don't have to walk from the "Ghetto" to Waterman to eat. This too is a slight inconvenience, since it is about a quarter of a mile walk.

However, at the same time there are some advantages to living in Chittenden, Buckham, and Wills, and the Housing Office is making some very noticeable improvements in the living conditions. Some of the improvements include carpeting in the halls of Chittenden and Wills, and new furniture in the lounges. Paint was also donated by housing, and most of the halls were painted, the color combination decided upon by the hall residents. There is also a skating rink constructed in back of Wills Hall, which allows people from the three dorms and Converse to skate without going over to the fieldhouse. A pool table was installed in Chittenden and a ping-pong table in Wills, which allows some form of recreation within the buildings. And in general, Housing is trying to make life in these dorms as comfortable as possible.

But perhaps the main advantage of living in the Shoe Boxes is that they are located on the main campus, and are close to the library and classroom buildings. For any of you who have never been inside these buildings, it would be a worthwhile experience to check them out some day. And for those of you who have lived there in the past, you may want to witness the improvements. Whatever the case, living the "Shoe Boxes" is an experience that you never quite forget. So you people in those newer dormitories, remember how the other half lives.

Hillel Learns

by Barbara Frankel Hillel House, the Jewish organization, led by Professor Harry Kahn, is trying to generate student interest with a two-fold program, using both educational and social programs.

"This is not the generation of joiners," according to Prof. Kahn. In order to remedy this situation, Hillel has a wide variety of activities which are geared to the multiple interests of the membership. Each Sunday morning, there is a get-together brunch during which discussions are held on current social and religious problems, such as abortion and population control. Cultural speakers, frequently members of the UVM faculty, discuss topical matters such as Israel and Soviet Jewry.

Some students only frequent Hillel on the Jewish holidays, such as the upcoming Passover. But there are a few dedicated members who make excellent use of Hillel's educational facilities. There is an intensive study group, which consists of eight to ten regular members who meet at Hillel House three nights a week, on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Wednesdays at 9 p.m. Last semester, under the guidance of Professor Kahn, Professor Richard Sugarman of the Department of Economics, and Mr. Murray Deitchman of the

In an article headed "Letters We Read With Mounting Horror," a letter received by the prosecuting attorney of Valley County (Idaho) from the Audio Security Institute, Inc., of Smithtown, N.Y., is reprinted below.

"Title 18 of the United States Code permits the use of eavesdropping."

No law enforcement agency, no matter how large or small, can afford to ignore this outstanding aid in combating organized crime. Is your department staffed and equipped to obtain maximum results with minimum effort and expense while utilizing this privilege, or are you still sacrificing men and court convictions due to dedicated but unfortunately inexperienced or poorly trained personnel?

The letter also plugs the school's post-graduation services.

Thursday's Concert At Patrick Gym

Last Thursday evening, the SA Concert Bureau sponsored a rock-blues concert, featuring "Yes" and the "J. Geils Blues Band" at Patrick Gymnasium. Thousands attended, and survived two ordeals: bomb scare, and the long wait in line prior to the performance outside the gym.

The bomb scare, of course, delayed the performance. But, the SA Bureau should be congratulated for following a rather important law: evacuation of the building during the scare, despite the understandable reluctance of the spectators.

However, the SA Bureau could have done a better job handling the flow of spectators before the performance. Thousands were literally jammed outside the doors, awaiting entrance. At one point, bodies were so compacted together, that it was nearly impossible for any type of movement.

On this matter, what's wrong with opening more doors at an earlier hour? And, by the way, what's wrong with selling fewer tickets to prevent such a crowd that the gymnasium cannot hold comfortably?

Take Notice, Girls

Does Civil Rights Law Apply To Women Here At UVM?

by Caryl J. Stewart

The New York Times last fall carried this sobering quote by the Department of Labor on jobs in the Seventies: "College students who graduate during the remainder of this decade will face the bleakest employment outlook since before World War II."

Why is that prediction of special significance to women students? For some of you the job market must seem a distant thing. For others it is imminent. What you all should know is that sooner or later it will probably be very important to you. A prediction that is bleak in general is even bleaker for women. And for professional women, perhaps, the bleakest of all.

By now, you may know the dreary statistics. Here are a few: 7% of all physicians, 3% of all lawyers and 1% of all engineers in this country are women. Income differences for every dollar a man makes, a woman makes 58 cents. Women comprise 40% of the work force, 51% of the population. However, they hold less than 1% of the policy-making jobs in the Federal Government.

One of the specific legal forces now at hand stems from the Civil Rights Law—the one that forbids the government to discriminate in employment for reasons of race, religion, color, national origin, sex or age. That law has now been extended to include any organization who contracts with the United States Government. That means, for example, that almost every university and college in the country, comes under this requirement. Is it a powerful tool? At the University of Michigan, a single woman refused to accept a condition in which she was given an inferior salary and status for the same job as her male colleagues. In the ensuing conflict the government finally withheld $38 million in federal contracts until the University of Michigan made a viable commitment to equal employment opportunity. The employee won her case.

Vermont, like Michigan and many other schools, has been tested on this issue of equal opportunity and found wanting. Over a year ago, the campus was visited by representatives of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. As a result of that visit, the University was informed its policies and practices were unacceptable toward minorities, and as President Andrews was reported by the press to have informed the trustees—especially toward women.

When a University is found to be out of compliance with equal opportunity regulations, the government has a procedure for achieving compliance. That mechanism is called an Affirmative Action Program. The program must,

Only Want Nice Girls,
That's All

TO THE EDITOR:

In response to the grievances aired by the freshmen girls, we, also, would like to take the opportunity to lodge a complaint. The girls have stated their side of the case; now, we would like to print ours.

We do get a little lonesome, too, and it does become discouraging to be "shot down" by a half dozen or so girls when calling for dates. For some unknown reason, most girls are unwilling to accept the offer of a guy they don't know personally. We are not all craven sex-maniacs, you know! We have tried to strike up conversations with many a girl in classes, at parties, and around the campus. The great bulk of the reactions to these attempts at acquaintance seems to indicate that the female members of the UVM student body have, on the whole, set up standards of preference. Many must be looking for guys who are as perfectly handsome as possible or who are able to throw around large amounts of bread when taking a girl out.

If the opinion expressed by the freshmen girls in last week's Cynic is shared by many other women on this campus, then they should reexamine their standards of selection. The fault certainly does not lie entirely with the guys. As we have stated, it is hard to get to know many girls around here if one is not wealthy, handsome, or known campus-wide. We would like to meet some girls who want to get to know guys who are not the big campus "run-arounds" and who are always ready for some good, clean fun and conversation.

If the "nice girls" are truly sincere in their complaints, would they please disclose their mysterious location!

Sincerely,
Bewildered males

Expresses Hope For Gay Recognition Fight

Gentlemen:

I would like to thank you for your recent interest and consideration concerning area homosexuals. Although your editorials have been insulting and short-sighted, it is gratifying to read the perceptive letters sympathetic to the liberation of gay men and women. The struggle against sexism, in all forms is motivated by what seems to us, obvious right. Sooner or later, any people will achieve equal rights—it is inevitable—and "straights" will be forced to accept our new-found freedoms. I sincerely hope that as time progresses the fight will become easier...not necessarily thinking of myself but of young people whose youth is ruined by looming fears. I feel quite comfortable with my life as it is but there are many who grow up extremely alone, they are homosexuals but, because they are so much hated, vented towards them by straight society. Consider how it feels to know that at any time you reveal your true self, disgust, hatred and ridicule—without conscience—will be the immediate reaction. I can't understand how anybody could really consider our situation and still resent us. There is only one reason to fear and resent a homosexual—if you fear and resent something "queer" within yourself.

For concerned gay people there are weekly meetings of Vermont Gay Lib in the Burlington People's Food Coop. at 160 N. Winooski Avenue, Wednesday evenings at 8 P.M.

Why Are Tests Needed In Liberal, Intro Psychology?

By Steven Rice

Dick Gregory shot many arrows Friday evening, and one landed right on the bull's eye when he spoke about education.

He remarked: "If you're looking at that textbook, because you're required to do so, for the sole reason of passing a test, then you're cheating yourself."

This comment made me think about a course that I'm presently enrolled in, entitled: "Introduction to Psychology," or more aptly known as "Psych 1."

The Tuesday-Thursday course has been hailed as an "experimental, liberal program" by many of its creators. And, in at least one respect, it appears to be just that:

Though many are required beforehand to take this course to satisfy a degree requirement, students do not have to attend the lectures and films. There's no penalty for not coming, and that's the way it should be.

However, the creators, apparently pinched by University officials to have an evaluation system for the students, feel it necessary to make these requirements:

A student must read every chapter of a textbook: Psychology and Life, 6th Edition, by Floyd L. Ruch and Philip G. Zimbardo.

He must read every chapter to pass quizzes. The student must pass the quiz of one chapter, before he proceeds onto another.

A student must obtain a certain number of points for letter grades. These points are determined by the number of quizzes passed, and a final examination.

These requirements, which center around the testing system, employed, are the basic weaknesses of a liberal, introductory course.

A student must get nine of ten questions correct, dependent on the proctor's satisfaction, in order to proceed to the next chapter. He's given three chances to pass the quiz; i.e., if he "fals" the first quiz, he take another up to three times. If he fails a third quiz, he may have to visit the head proctor, or one of the instructors of the course.

Under the point system, the student must read every chapter, and pass every quiz with 90%, to obtain 150 points. This total represents a letter grade "C."

Then, after all this, the student is rewarded with his final examination, which is worth 50 points. The number of points received on the test is added to his 150.

Letter grade "A" is worth 190, or above; letter grade "B" is worth 175, or above.

This apparently elaborate, but, all too brief, explanation of the testing system is necessary. It points out well, I believe, that success in this course is determined on a "grade-point" performance, rather than

About That Smokestack...

Fellow inhabitants,

Is the University's commitment to assisting in alleviating pollution any different from its stance on other important issues of the day (for instance, equal rights and pay for women, or meaningful involvement of minorities in the University community)? The answer seems to be negative. Only the most glaring example of the University's true stance can be seen any day at the Dairy Science building. If the University were seriously committed to improving our environment, would one's senses be brutalized by the sight and smell of the hideous smoke emitting from and flowing down the smokestack? One sometime wonders...

No Hibernation Here

To The Freshman Women:

We guys aren't hibernating; but from the amount of frostbite we manage to get we wish we were. The girls here cling together like packed snow, and that snow in time has become an ice pack. How do you girls go to a party—in an ice pack. How do you go to the dining halls—in the same pack. And how do you go to dances and concerts—you gasped it, in an ice pack. Imagine a guy trying to get to know a girl from one of these packs; he can't because she is frozen in place. The reason she always seems to give is "I can't leave...my girlfriend(s) (roommate) behind."

We all know this the age of Women's Lib where girls want to be accepted as equals with men. To gain this acceptance a lot of girls are trading in their dresses, blouses, and shoes for baggy patched pants, floppy plaid shirts, and rubber hiking boots.

We guys might go out looking for a "good time" for the night, but that doesn't mean looking for sex. Granted we seem to have a little more freedom but we too are looking for an "honest friendly relationship"

Coalition For A Democratic University Seeks Fairness

To The Editor:

Because we believe that ours is not a democratic university, neither in theory nor in practice, the Coalition For A Democratic University (C.D.U.) has decided that certain steps must be taken in order to help make the university a safe place for the free exchange of ideas. We feel that if the universities of this country are not free, then this country is not free. As the dismissal of Michael Parenti makes evident, the Board of Trustees, representing the business community, is actively trying to stifle the free exchange of ideas in order to protect the status quo (in which they hold power).

The Coalition has broken down into five basic groups: (1) Women's Group—deals with the role of women in society and the particular issues of sexism at UVM; (2) Fund

Charges 'Bias' On Coalition Coverage

To The Editor:

For the past two weeks articles have been written concerning the Coalition For A Democratic University. With the exception of a letter written by the Coalition, all information about C.D.U. has been heavily biased against it. In his article in the Cynic (Feb. 24) Fred Ginsberg described the C.D.U. as a "few dissatisfied students". One has only to look at the Coalition to see that it is the most diverse, representative organization on campus. It is not elitist, for it seeks popular support and recognizes the need to remove power over the University from corporate leaders and return it to the relevant constituencies.

Mr. Ginsberg's last statement also needs to be questioned. He says emphatically the C.D.U. will not be able to "attract mass student support." This self-serving prophecy can do nothing but perpetuate and increase the existing apathy on campus. His last sentence: "Hopefully a small core of highly interested students will focus its emphasis on a single issue at a time," smacks of the elitist consciousness that pervades every institution on campus. Detachment of the student body from crucial issues confronting them has resulted in too much aloofness and apathy. Students should no longer rely upon elitist organizations that are only interested in self-perpetuation and increased power and prestige. To call for a small core of student activists is to ask for the same kind of ineffectual organizations that exist already. The Coalition needs the moral backing of the University community as much as it needs dedicated people willing to work for change.

Raising Group—raises funds for our three lawsuits against the Board of Trustees and for our general needs; (3) Investigative Group—researches and uncovers facts that will lead to actions by C.D.U.; (4) University Awareness—tries to raise the awareness of the university, about the place of the university in society; (5) Communications Group—is in charge of the circulation of information as to the progress and plans of the Coalition.

Our Coalition is such that we want to help the university community be aware of what is happening and what can be done about it. Our projects to date include: (1) Support of Michael Parenti in his efforts to be reappointed; (2) Working for a resignation of the Board of Trustees so that it truly represents the university constituency, which is the students, faculty, staff, administration, and the community; (3) We are trying to set up a workshop on the People's Republic of China; (4) Uncovering the facts and exposing them to the community as to the dangers of the proposed intersection at Spear Street (the TOPICS program); (5) The Coalition For A Democratic University is open to everyone, and there will be a general student meeting at 12 noon, March 8 in North Lounge.

Rewarding Performance

By Brazilian Guitarist

A young Brazilian guitarist treated a small, attentive audience to a sampling of his virtuosity on the evening of Wednesday, February 23, as a part of the Lane Chamber Art Series. The Ira Allen Chapel was filled with warmth-on-a-chilly-night, as Carlos Barbosa-Lima appeared unassuming and looked younger than his twenty-seven years.

Perhaps this youthfulness was the cause of the stumbling evidenced especially in the Bach "Prelude in A Minor," and the hurriedness in the Fugue of the same piece. For the most part, however, the rest of the young, energetic performer's diverse performance proved his competence. His selections varied from Elizabethan dance tunes by John Dowland, a Classical minuet by Haydn and a Romantic Canonetta by Mendelssohn to various pieces by Spanish and South American composers. Throughout the concert, the performer added the audience emitted a friendly and growing affinity, one for the other.

In the second half of the program, devoted particularly to contemporary Spanish and South American composers, Carlos Barbosa-Lima played with exceptional ease, subtlety and expressivity. He ended his program with "Three Brazilian Dances," composed by Isaias Savio, his former teacher.

In response to the audience's enthusiastic response, the young guitarist played three well-executed encores. Everyone in the audience remained throughout the encores, and as a final gesture of appreciation, stood during his final bow. For those who ventured out on that frosty evening, it was an enjoyable and gratifying experience.

Rare Wine In Old Bottles—Tasty

On Wednesday and Thursday nights of last week the U.V.M. Baroque Ensemble met in the main lounge of Billings to perform their semesterly concert—this time dubbed Rare Wine In Old Bottles. That it was.

The first half covered music from the middle to late Baroque period, a time when interest in instrumental music was beginning to fix itself once again after the emergence of the opera as an art form. The first piece was a trio sonata in C major by George Telemann dedicated to Xantippe, Lucratia, Corinna, Clelia and Dido, some important female figures in literature. After Philip Ambrose, a noted classical figure in literature, a noted classical figure in literature, supplied some pertinent background on their various characters, and Telemann's apparent attitudes toward them, he and William Metcalf played the two recorder parts with the help of Elizabeth Metcalf on harpsichord and Steve Flanders on cello supporting the base.

Next came another trio sonata in D major, this one by Jean-Marie Leclair. Jane Ambrose made her debut with an authentic keyless transverse flute. Steve Flanders played an impressive part on cello, and Philip Ambrose gave it all body with the harpsichord.

Jill Lewis, who is currently teaching music at Vermont College and schools in the Lamotte North district sang an excerpt from Reinhard Keiser's opera "Croesus," the Italian "Cantata Parody." "Mi laschi dunque" which concerns itself with the departure of a loved one. Miss Lewis' voice gave even the recitatives the excitement one would expect from an aria.

After a brief intermission, the entire ensemble reconvened for a taste of English Renaissance. First to be heard was Anthony Holborne's "Dance Suite" from Parsons Galliards, Almogues and other short Aires. for Violin, Violins or other Musical Wind Instruments. It featured a mixed consort of Crumhorns, a double reed instrument sounding like a refined kazoo, the whole family of recorders, a touchpfeife (German for "noisy pipe") on which Philip Ambrose's virtuosity was exploited to the full, as well as cello and percussion. If it wasn't the most enjoyable piece for the audience, it must have been for the ensemble.

Elizabeth Metcalf then took a rest at the harpsichord and produced a most impressive interpretation of "Woody-Cock" from Giles Farnaby's Fitzwilliam Virginal Book.

Once again Jill Lewis gave us her angelic soprano voice, but this time in a more innocent and poetic, but less emotional (typically English) manner. Four of John Dowland's "Madrigals or 'Ayres'" were sung: "Come away sweet love," "Shall I see," "With thou unkind thus leave me," and "Away with these self-loving kids." On the last bit, William Metcalf and Philip Ambrose retired their crumhorn and recorder to join in with voice the final cadences.

To conclude the formal programme the ensemble chose to sing the famous Agincourt Carol "Deo Gratias Anglim" the song of the victory at Normandy which ended the Hundred Years War. It was sung in authentic old English and managed to capture the rugged spirit that tradition has passed us down.

For an encore the group offered another vocal piece, "Blow thy horn hunter," by William Cornish.

The University of Vermont Baroque Ensemble is a group of sincere enthusiastic musicians who bring us well performed music from a time when music had a divine influence. Their music is as precious to them as it is to the student, and although they have always played to a full house, I feel many are missing a treat that makes the college experience a little bit more fulfilling.

Violinist Daniel Helfetz

Rising Young Violinist On First US Tour

Violinist Daniel Helfetz, one of America's rising virtuoso talents, will appear on the Lane Series on Thursday, March 2, at 8:30 p.m., in Memorial Auditorium.

Tickets, priced from $3.75 to $6, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For information and reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Managed by the noted impresario Sol Hurok, young Helfetz, 21 years old, is making his first tour of the United States.

Mr. Helfetz made his New York debut on January 25, 1970, at Lincoln Center's Philharmonic Hall by playing the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto with the Washington National Symphony. Roger Sherman in the New York Times offered the young "Johann Sebastian" Bach, musician high praise: "Looking slightly younger than his 21 years, Mr. Helfetz stands erect, head thrown back, noble, and plays with confident the piano."

Film Review: 'Cotton' Is Fast Moving; Academy Award For 'Bloody Sunday'?

Cotton Comes To Harlem

Cotton Comes To Harlem is a fast-paced, first-rate detective comedy drama. The quick action shots and the serious sequences in the film are interspersed with comedy in just the right amounts. Thus the director, Ossie Davis, is able to quickly switch the emotion the audience feels, keeping them interested in the film. This is one of the truly good black films. Shot in Harlem, it is sort of a forerunner of Shaft.

The plot concerns the efforts of Grave Digger Jones (Godfrey Cambridge) and Coffin Ed Johnson (Raymond St. Jacques), two black detectives on the New York police force, to recover $87,000 which has been hidden in a bale of cotton. The film uses the bale of cotton as an anachronistic device. Many of the predecessors of the Harlem residents spent their lives in the south picking cotton, yet the most out of place object in the film is the bale of cotton in Harlem. This cotton gets around as the detectives follow it through a spectacular chase scene, several gun battles, and a strip joint.

The acting is excellent and some of the actors are famous. Godfrey Cambridge is well known, Raymond St. Jacques was in the TV show The Partners, and Redd Foxx (Uncle Bud) is now in TV in the new show, Sanford and Son. Calvin Lockhart is good as the Rev. Deke O'Malley and Judy Pace is great as Iris. All the other production credits are good, and the film will not disappoint the viewer.

Sunday Bloody Sunday

This intriguing film is the work of John Schlesinger, the film maker whose last movie was Midnight Cowboy. He has produced another hit with this film that examines the relationship two people have to a third person. The film has been nominated for three Academy Awards, including best actress for Glenda Jackson, who won it last year for Women in Love, and she may be one of the very few actresses to win it two years in a row. Her performance in Sunday Bloody Sunday is certainly up to Academy Award caliber.

The plot concerns the love affair that Alix (Glenda Jackson) and Dr. Daniel Hirsh (Peter Finch) have with a mobile artist, Bob Elkin (Murray Head). Complications in this relationship exist, not the least of which is the resentment Alix and Daniel feel at having to share Bob. Bob is an unusual character who hops between beds with the greatest of ease. When he leaves for New York at the end of the film, his relationships with Daniel and Alix are ended, and both find comfort for a brief moment when they meet outside a friend's house.

Of all the production credits, the photography is the most interesting. Very little use is made of deep focus, and most of the scenes have some part of the background or foreground out of focus. Changes in focus thus give the film a mobile aspect. The editing throughout the film is first rate. The musical score fits the film, but at times leaves a little to be desired.

Glenda Jackson was last seen in Women in Love, the film she did with Ken Russell. She was supposed to star in The Devils and Vanessa Redgrave was supposed to star in this picture. Glenda Jackson has said she will never do another film with Russell, and the switch in players did not hurt either film.

Hitchcock And Two Black Films This Weekend

Two movie performances will be offered by the Lane Film Society Series during the coming weekend.

Alfred Hitchcock's "39 Steps" will be screened at 8 p.m. on Saturday, March 4, in Marsh Life Science Building, to be preceded by a Road Runner Cartoon. This movie is part of the Hitchcock Classics Series.

Two films on the Black Man in Film Series will be presented on Monday, March 6 as a double feature — "No Way Out" and "Mingus." The movies will be shown in Marsh Life Science Building at 9 p.m.

Single admissions to each performance, $1 each, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. Telephone 656-3418 for information and reservations.

The film "39 Steps," made by Alfred Hitchcock in 1935, is perhaps the most famous of the Hitchcock thrillers. This chase film, which deals with a Canadian who is mistaken for a murderer, is regarded as the model spy film. It is also famous for the scene in which the hero and the heroine are accidentally handcuffed together, as well as the scene in which a woman's scream is juxtaposed upon the roaring of a train.

Robert Donat and Madeleine Carroll star in "39 Steps," which is noted for its

Byrds' Album Vibrant; Good Listening

by Doug Collette
FARTHER ALONG/The Byrds (Columbia KC 31050)

The previous Byrds album, Byrdsman, was something of a disappointment in that many of the songs were treated to large orchestral arrangements which, while not so cloying or intrusive as are most such arrangements (to my taste anyway), did succeed in covering up the funky band that is the Byrds. Only when I learned to bypass the strings and horns did I grow to like the LP very much.

At any rate, the news that, in just a week of sessions in London, the Byrds had completed a new album was welcome good news. Farther Along is all I could've hoped for and more. It consists of short disciplined but vibrant tracks that remind me of the first rock and roll albums I listened to and it makes me feel good in a way I thought I'd lost (and since the primary criterion for good rock and roll is to make people feel good, it's not surprising the Byrds would be the group to make an album like this). Perpetual Byrd Roger McGuinn's "Tiffany Queen" is the perfect choice to start the record because it contains one of those rousing rock and roll guitar riffs that'll play in your head for days on end.

This contingent of Byrds prove themselves to be extremely versatile on this outing. "America's Great National Pastime," written and sung by bassist Skip Battin (who plays sparkling piano on a number of cuts) would be easy to listen to once and then forget if it weren't for the ingenious juxtaposition of his images:

"One of America's great national pastimes is playing 'ball' Takin' it all Thinkin' so small"

And like all good satire it works because it contains the kernels of truth.

Gene Parsons and Clarence collaborated on a hoodoon called "Bristol Steam Convention. Blues and, in a more ten- moment, White's slightly nasal, Ringo-ish voice lends a touching sadness to "Bugler," the story of (one) man's best friend. "B.B. Class Road is a straightforward rocker, a long overdue tribute to road managers. And a band with the tradition the Byrds possess deserves to do Johnny Otis' "So Fine," the reverence and especially the relish with which they sing and play it is the standard for the entire album.

Because the varying musical backgrounds of McGuinn, Parsons, White and Battin are integrated in a wholly complete music, Farther Along must be considered the definitive LP for this particular lineup which, I think, has been together longer than any other band since the original group. The Byrds are a rock and roll institution and if Farther Along is any indication, they're going to be around for a long, long time.

The Billings Center Cyril was but a chuckle while sipping his morning coffee. "Did you read that outrageous letter?" he asked.

"What letter, Sir?" I inquired. "You know, it's that outlandish, those two girls are trying to put generation of males."

"Oh, yes, Sir...that thing. Do you that serious?"

The old man chuckled again and "Of course it was!"

"Well, what do you mean, Sir, wondering why he kept laughing."

"Back in my day, dear boy, the always dying to meet the opposite various reasons of course. And the smart. They didn't confess their writing a public declaration."

"And, you know, the guys in dying to meet girls, and they didn't by writing letters, either."

"Oh," I said.

"Now, it appears to me that ladies, who wrote this letter, are guys too. But, they have a certain that the guys must adhere to before go out with any of them..."

Skaters Tie In Crucial Game

By Dave Clark

The University of Vermont Catamounts played a very crucial game against the Middlebury Panthers in the first period of the season with a good feeling.

The results of the game left the Cats with the same sort of feeling you get when you kiss your sister (to quote John Monahan of WIOY) which translated in about nothing.

When I left the game last Wednesday night I felt as well as nothing lost and nothing gained but this was not the case. When the Cats only tied the Panthers they made things very difficult on themselves.

The Cats would have been needed number one in the tournament and thus made things easier as far as pressure goes for the last game of the season against the Cadets of Norwich U. if they had won.

Now the seedings will be determined by the last game of the season. If the Cats win then they will be needed number one over UMass and if the Cats lose or tie then the Redmen of UMass will take the top spot in the post season tournament which will include eight teams.

If Vermont is number one then they will play New England College (no I don't know who they are either) and if the Cats are number two then they will play St. Anselm (remember they beat UMass last week to give the Redmen their third loss of the season).

The Redmen will play either New England or St. Anselm depending on what we do on Wednesday night and they would much rather play New England after what happened to them last week.

The game last Wednesday night was a good game from the standpoint of both teams. Both the Cats and Middlebury played an excellent game but Vermont had an edge as far as offense goes. The Cats had 59 shots on net over the three periods and the overtime period.

Vermont was outplayed in the first period and it showed as the Cats were down by a 2-0 margin after 20 minutes of hockey. The Vermont fans including myself were stunned that the score should be this way.

Vermont out-shot the Panthers 11-9 but the Middlebury team showed more hustle as witnessed by the two goals which the Panthers got. The scores for Middlebury in the first period were Knowles who tallied at 11:46 of the first stanza and Everett who scored less than five minutes later at 15:48.

The period was filled with penalties as the Panthers got 3 to 1 for the Cats.

Vermont was unable to capitalize on the several power play situations which they had during this period. They were able to set themselves up in the Middlebury end but the scoring shot just didn't go in.

Larry Perlman, the Middlebury goalie, played a super game against the Cats and one can have nothing but praise for this sophomore who has frustrated UVM for two years now. Perlman stopped 56 shots over the three regular periods and the overtime period compared to the 24 shots which Steve Eckerson made during the course of the night.

The Cats exerted a great deal of offensive pressure during the second and third periods as they put a total of 42 shots on net.

Chris Miller put the Cats on the scoreboard for the first time in the evening as he took a pass from Andy Rickard and put a wrist shot past the left side of Perlman at 2:22 of the second period.

Curtis of Middlebury put the Panthers ahead 3-1 at 14:03 of the second period as the assist went to Norton.

With the beginning of third period the Cats were down 3-1 and they had to move to put it mildly. Bob Hodde brought the Cats within one goal as he scored at 4:40 of the third stanza with the assists going to Fred Hunt and Ted Castle.

UVM tied the game a little over a minute later as Willie MacKinnon took a beautiful pass from Sam Simmons and put a shot in the upper right corner at 5:18. The Vermont fans were going crazy (if they were not already there) while the Middlebury fans were not exactly passing around the winekin flasks in joy.

The rest of the game was all Vermont as the Cats dominated play but were not able to put that winning goal on the scoreboard. The Cats put real pressure on Perlman who was true to the task to quote an old cliché.

The Middlebury defense, great all game, played as good a game as a defense can play. Both teams played super games but I would have to give the edge to Vermont simply from the point of offensive pressure as they had 59 shots on goal compared to 27 shots for the Panthers during the contest.

The overtime period was pretty much the same as the second and third periods with the Cats dominating but unable to score.

Editor's note: This article was written on Monday night and it is hoped that as you read this the Cats won last night and are needed number one.

UVM Beats Dartmouth, Place Second

by Peter Hicks

The Middlebury Carnival this past weekend was the scene for yet another precedent-setting performance by the UVM ski team. Despite the fact that the Middlebury team took advantage of the familiarity of the surroundings and walked off with first place, UVM, with its second place finish, could attach equally propitious and portentous significance to the results. For the first time in memory, a UVM ski team beat a Dartmouth contingent and beat them soundly. The 5 1/2 point spread between the teams left no doubt, especially considering the previous weeks' performances at Williams, which was the better club.

The Carnival began on Friday morning with the Giant Slalom. Roby Politi of St. Lawrence skied well to take this event, but UVM with Dave Dodge (3), Wayne Wright (5) and Chris Brown (11) leading the way, took 5 of the top 17 places and established significant margins over rivals Dartmouth and Middlebury. The afternoon cross country event, however, saw the Cats' premature hopes for Carnival victory dashed as the Middlebury contingent of McNulty, Johnson and Bernstein ran their home course excellently and swept the top three places for a perfect 100 point score. The UVM trio finished disastrously far back in 4th place, 7 points behind Middlebury. Peter Blaset who is rapidly blossoming into the 2nd most consistent top runner on the circuit (Middlebury's Olympic returned Joe McNulty must be given top-billing), was the first Non-Middlebury skier across the finish line (4th) as Hank Pfeiffer, who continues to improve, copied 12th place. The sad story for the UVM team, however, and the partial explanation for its inability to catch Middlebury, was the pre-Carnival ankle injury to UVM's most valuable combined man, Knut Gulbrandsen. Knut, who is a nordic skier to do well, it is essential that Knut excel in both running and jumping. Under the painful circumstances, however, Knut was unable to approach his usual form and was courageous just in finishing the course, ending up with a distant 16th place finish.

The Slalom event was held Saturday morning with Middlebury narrowly edging out Vermont for top honors. Roby Politi again won the event, as UVM's top skiers were forced to hold back and assure themselves a standing finish, after the Cat's first man down the course, Dodge, crashed and virtually eliminated himself. Especially commendable for the team's sake, is Wayne Wright, perhaps the top skier in the East, who sacrificed his individual desire to win the event for the sake of the team. Dave Ojala, the co-captain, blazed down in fourth place, Wright took fifth and Dave Hubbard took 11th.

The last event was the jump in which UVM is usually heavily favored. Confidentially, however, the Cats knew they might be in trouble, with Gulbrandsen's ankle so stiff and sore that his ability to perform was greatly hampered. Realizing the greater burden on their shoulders, Kongali and Grimes performed magnificently, as always, with first and second place performances respectively. However, Middlebury again was able to kick out the event honors taking 3, 4 and 6 as Gulbrandsen jumped well below form (13).

The next meet is the St. Lawrence Carnival and Eastern Collegiate Championship. Hopefully Gulbrandsen will be more healthy and the alpine team will perform even better thus enabling UVM to make a run at the eastern title. It is expected that UVM will finish in the top 3 in this Championship in which case they will qualify to go to the NCAA National Championship out West.

It Is Finally Over

The University of Vermont Basketball Catamounts have finished up their season at last. The final game, held last Tuesday night against Adelphi in Garden City New York proved to be merely the final insult in one of the most dismal seasons in Catamount history.

Vermont posted a final season record of five wins contrasted against a grand total of 18 losses. The Cats finished up firmly imbedded in the Yankee Conference cellar as they went winless in that division. Next year's court club will be missing the services of this year's captain, Ray Ortiz. Despite the discouraging performance of the team, Ortiz did prove to be a mainstay.

The club will also lose Neil Hermann through graduation. Hermann's services as a playmaker proved to be a valuable asset to the club on occasion.

All hope is not lost for next year's court club if the talent

Reflections On The Past

The 1971-72 hockey season is almost over. The regular schedule was completed last night with the Norwich game. We only have the play-offs remaining. For a few of us, those will be the last games we play at UVM. Lately I have begun to recall these past years and my most vivid memories come from my freshman year.

During the first semester of that year, we had more players on our team than any freshman team had prior or since for that matter. Our goalie was Gordie Kunzleman who stopped going to classes after the first month to concentrate on his nursing. Mill told us a million stories about playing at Gov. Dummer and in Europe. Nick Hyde demonstrated "The Move" and

"The Shot" and Jim Wellington his over-the-top-flick-shot. Ned and Cowboy threw out Bonties pits whenever Cowboy wasn't taking a slapshot or taking a vacation (Bobo came back but Wagner's was permanent). Tim Cottrell scored two goals against TMR while Teddy started a fight and Hyde got the penalty.

After Christmas our numbers were depleted due to academics but that didn't keep us from not losing a game and finishing 6-2 overall. John Page replaced Gordie, who had gone to Atlanta, and turned in an amazing performance in our 7-6 win over Dartmouth. He got some support in practice from Hank Anderson and once in awhile from Charly Russo in sneakers. Snakey Al Johnson played defense and so did Bill Dunnington who also told us Frenchman jokes. Dave Snelgrove played darts, slept, drank beer, slept, and scored goals. Doug Harding whistled, had Helen, and practiced his speed-skating. Coach Bink Smith screamed, "Tear your guts out!" and told us he would like to have a team of guys like Bobby Marks (Sure, they'd hustle but who would score the goals?). The bomber line of George Dobbins, Jim Kiely, Chester Roberts, and Jim Libby got a chance to show their prowess once in awhile but usually they froze.

But now, Neddy, Teddy, Bobo, and myself are the only ones left. Some of them left school; others decided they had better things to do at school, but all of them will agree with me when I say that while on our freshman team we never had more fun playing hockey.

Jim Ducey, Nate Reeves and Bruce Fields will also be returning next year. The court experience obtained this year by these starters should add further sophistication to their play, and hopefully result in a much better season next winter.

Presidential Candidates Indicate Views On Marijuana Laws

The National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML) released today a survey of presidential candidates indicating their views on the marijuana laws. The poll was taken by NORML, a Washington, D.C. based group working for legal marijuana use for adults and governmentally controlled legal sales. Only Governor George Wallace, Representative Wilbur Mills and Senator Henry Jackson refused to respond to the poll.

In releasing the results of the survey, Keith Stroup, the group's Executive Director, issued the following statement:

"In 1972 for the first time, a serious debate in the presidential election is developing over the marijuana issue. Anti-marijuana forces see the weed as a serious threat to society, while the other side believes the criminal penalties surrounding the drug cause the real harm. The candidates now appear willing to discuss the issue, perhaps influenced by the knowledge that 24,000,000 Americans have now smoked marijuana. In addition, there are 25,675,000 new voters between the ages of 18 and 24, 40% of whom have used marijuana. Thus it appears likely the issue will gain in importance as the election nears."

The following stands were taken by candidates on various aspects of legalization:

DECriminalization

On the issue of eliminating criminal penalties for private use of marijuana, six candidates (Chisholm, Markle, Lindsay, McCarthy, McGovern and Spock) said they definitely favored this approach, and three others

Discussion Arises In SA Senate Over Proposal To Eliminate Pass-Fail Option

At the Student Association Senate meeting March 1, 1972 the primary topic for discussion was the proposal to abolish the PASS/NO PASS option. Alan Wertheimer and Gary Nelson, both of the Political Science Department, were present at the Senate meeting to speak on the proposal.

The proposal was drawn up by Richard Flannery, Garrison Nelson, Stanislaw Starron, Richard Warner, and Alan Wertheimer, all of the Political Science Department. The stand of these professors is that the option has failed in "serving the academic interest of the student body." Mr. Wertheimer stated at the S.A. Senate meeting that he felt that the option has failed and that he hoped that the faculty will start asking itself questions on the option that they have not considered yet.

Mr. Wertheimer was reminded by Bill Sisco, S.A. Senator, that there is a plan to change the graduation requirements from 120 credits to 32 courses that has not been acted on for three years. Bill felt that deleting this option would set us back four or five years.

Wertheimer agreed that it would, yet he felt that the PASS/NO PASS option is used by students to "ease their load." But he said that he did not think that his motion to the faculty Senate was in any way a condemnation of the students.

It was asked by Terry Demas if the Political Science Department was advocating this proposal to drop the option because of its difficulty in placing graduate students. This reason was refuted by Mr. Wertheimer.

In response to an objection by Aes-Bugbee to not being able to take a course because he is interested in it without worrying about the grade, Mr. Wertheimer hoped that the proposal to drop the option would result in a change in the grading system. He said that a student taking a course under the PASS/NO PASS option is not encouraged to gain intellectual benefits from his course.

Mr. Nelson said that his reasons for eliminating the option were his concern about graduate education and law school and detraction of the grading system. Stating that 38% more students have taken law boards this year at UVM than last year, but that the scores are low, Nelson would like to increase the "aspirational level" of the students. Mr. Nelson also said that he would like to abolish grades in favor of evaluations, but the graduate schools and medical schools want the grades of the applicants.

A proposal was made by Terry Demas that "the Student Association Senate firmly condemn the Wertheimer-Warner-Flannery-Starron-Nelson proposal to end the PASS/NO PASS option at UVM and that the S.A. demand that the Faculty Senate reject this proposal and further, that in the future when such proposals are made that directly affect the student body, they must be automatically be submitted to the student body in a manner (continued on page three)

Fraternity Forum Votes Unanimously To Oppose New S.A. Constitution

Arute Cites Problems With S.A.

by Jeff Yacker

Editor's Note: The following is an interview with Jack Arute, President of the Fraternity Forum.

QUESTION: Has the Fraternity Forum taken a stand on the proposed new S.A. Constitution?

ANSWER: Yes. Last Thursday we met and voted on the proposals as we had them. Since then there have been some changes, but more or less the feeling at that time was—well, they voted unanimously not to support the Constitutional revisions the Student Association committee presented to us. The basic reasons were, they felt: (1) the fraternities were a unique group and there should be no Student Association control, direct or indirect, over Fraternity Forum, and its responsibilities to its member fraternities, because the Student Association is concerned with students. These were problems which arose in the wording of the Constitution. Since then Gene Beaudoin has told me that there are some more revisions, in the Constitution, but still the problem remaining between Fraternity Forum and Student Association is what powers the proposed Greek Caucus will have over Greek member fraternities. And until this problem is resolved, I would think that probably the Forum members will continue to remain opposed totally to the proposed changes.

QUESTION: What role do you think the Greek Caucus should play as opposed to the Fraternity Forum?

ANSWER: The Greek Caucus should act as an advisory group to the Student Association and keep the channels of communication open between the two groups, because they both have specific problems which they should deal with. The caucus should only have that kind of power. The Fraternity Forum was founded as an outgrowth of the IFC (Interfraternity Council) which is a nationwide organization.

Our problems and the things that we deal with are with our member fraternities. Fraternities are groups of students. Now, the Student Association's basic responsibility, outlined in the Green Pages, is to the individual students that make up the Student Body here at UVM. There's no overlapping of power there of responsibilities. The Greek Caucus should help keep these groups which have responsibilities in communication with each other, so that they know what's going on between each group. Because we do have specific responsibilities to our constituencies, and they are different. Greek students are members of Student Association, and are members, indirectly, of Fraternity Forum, because of the fact that Fraternity Forum encompasses all of the fraternities on this campus. And so really, the caucus should have no other power but this, because the other powers—the other things that are necessary to control the groups, should be taken care of by the Fraternity Forum. But there are some things the caucus could do by advising the Student Association—the Greek sentiment—the sentiment or feelings of students who are Greeks. Because a lot of times this goes unheralded, and this has been a big problem with the Student Association in the past.

QUESTION: What have been the problems between Fraternity Forum and the Student Association? Can you give us any specific examples?

ANSWER: Yeah, I can give you quite a few of them. This all started, probably, back with the Kake Walk controversy, and has just snowballed since then. We realize that probably Kake Walk is gone from this campus, but we get quite tired of being the scapegoats for Kake Walk and everything that has been the result of it. Granted, the Greek organizations were the ones who competed in it, but it was the entire student body which attended it; so, we were all, more or less, to blame, what have you, for it. Since then, we've seen the demise of many of the major weekends on this campus. Whose fault is that? In no position to put the blame on anybody, but we tried to revive some of these things. In particular this year we tried to revive Homecoming Weekend, yet we were met with steadfast opposition by the Student Association. To give you an example: the entertainment. I was told in the presence of Rich Hanson, (Director of Student Activities) by Terry Demas, that it was by chance only that the concert fell on the date of the proposed Homecoming Weekend. Now, it came out after Fraternity Forum announced that they would try to pull together some sort of Homecoming sub-organization runs a weekend on this campus. I realized that we had some problems with Winter Weekend in the past since Kake Walk, but more or less these problems existed because of the committee was not accountable to anybody. And this is when we got into the problem of the debt.

QUESTION: Do you agree with the SA Committee Report on Winter Weekend that the $22,000 debt was indirectly the fault of Fraternity Forum?

ANSWER: No. I'd be a fool if I did, because it just isn't the truth. There were a few (continued on page three)

Weekend, that this was planned all along, and that this was the $11,000 which was being spent for Homecoming! We made attempts—feeble as they may have been—to hold poster contests. We used, incidentally, Greek Week trophies from the raised out Greek Week, because we did not have the funding and we were refused funding, more or less, even though we were never given the opportunity to go the Finance Committee. Because, they insisted, that this $11,000 was being spent for the weekend. This is a minor thing—but then we get into Winter Weekend. With Winter Week, we were asked to help set up ski weekends, build snow the same thing we did ever since Kake Walk. These were remnants of Kake Walk and these were things which the campus and community expected to see fraternities do. And fraternities, due mostly to the fact that we met such opposition with Homecoming in an attempt to save a weekend which we felt was very basic to two this campus in two areas, alumni contributions, and also just a fun weekend to have some good times, steadfastly said no—we weren't going to go along with just a loose organization of activities across the campus that would encompass an entire week, so that we could again be blamed for another failure. I think that the only way we are going to get back to a successful week, weekend, day or what have you, is if we get back to the good old fashioned time when one organization or

sub-organization runs a weekend on this campus. I realized that we had some problems with Winter Weekend in the past since Kake Walk, but more or less these problems existed because of the committee was not accountable to anybody. And this is when we got into the problem of the debt.

QUESTION: Do you agree with the SA Committee Report on Winter Weekend that the $22,000 debt was indirectly the fault of Fraternity Forum?

ANSWER: No. I'd be a fool if I did, because it just isn't the truth. There were a few (continued on page three)

President Andrews Feels Students Voting On Board Would Be 'Tokenism'

by Jeffrey Yacker

Editor's Note: This is the second and final part of an interview with Dr. Andrews. QUESTION: Within the past month or so, a group has been formed which calls itself the Coalition For A Democratic University. One of their aims seems to be that students be given full voting power on the Board of Trustees...as opposed to their present role on the committee. I think the students would be interested in how you feel about full privileges on the Board.

ANSWER: I think it presents problems, having a student...or students with full voting power on the Board. I think the question which needs to be asked, is, "How can students best participate in and influence the decision-making process?" And, I think you have to understand how a Board works. Most decisions have been made before they get to the Board and formal voting on Saturday mornings. So, the important thing for students, as far as I'm concerned, and I believe very strongly on this—I feel that students should be on every important—University committee, selecting deans, or chairmen, or presidents, or vice presidents—I think they ought to be on planning committees—the whole works. I think they should be on Trustee committees, because 99% of the decisions the Board makes are made in committee. This is where the influence is most effective. I think this is working: I think many of the students who have become involved in the University's governance agree that it's working, and it's effective.

As far as I'm concerned, putting a student on the (voting) Board is tokenism. One of two things is going to happen: either he will become co-opted by the Board, or he will not—and he is only one vote among 21 or 20. Furthermore, he can only be on as a student for a year or two, and then he will be a graduate. He probably will not be able to communicate...Well, you can say, put another student on when he leaves, but it takes about a year for an individual to find out how the Board works and how decisions are made. So, just going on and sitting there is not going to be terribly effective. Unfortunately, this is a learning process. So, I suppose it's one of those "motherhood" things, and no one should be against it, but if you look at it carefully and try to figure out what is it we're trying to do and how can we best achieve it, the system we have, now—students sitting on Trustee committees and having the privilege of standing up on Saturday mornings and speaking—you have everything you want.

QUESTION: I think the only counter-argument to that, is when it comes down to an issue which the students feel is vital—like the Parental case—they have no say in the final vote. Although they were allowed to vote in committee, when it came down to the vote, the vote was 13-4.

ANSWER: How much difference would two, or four votes make? QUESTION: This is true. ANSWER: The other thing

Coalition—o.k. there are 100 students there, and they want students on the Board. There is no guarantee whatsoever—in fact, I'd say it's most likely the other way—that one of their members would be on the Board. So, if you get a conservative student on the Board, what have they gained? Or if they get a middle-of-the-road student who gets co-opted, what have they gained? They're not going to be happy until they have 21 of their own kind sitting on the Board.

QUESTION: On a different subject, do you think that the expansion the University has undergone in the past four or five years has been worth all the headaches it has brought, and it has brought quite a few. ANSWER: You know, it's like me, today—I'm very strong for population control, yet I have five kids! Which three do I want to send back? You can ask the same thing about the University—which of these thousands of extra students would we send back? QUESTION: Well then, do you think the grade test will survive?

Professors Bring Proposal On Pass-Fail To Faculty Senate

by Marcy Sayles

A resolution that would abolish the Pass/No Pass option has been written up by five UVM political science professors: Richard Flannery, Garrison Nelson, Stanislaw Starron, Richard Warner, and Alan Wertheimer. The resolution may be on the March 10 agenda of the Faculty Senate meeting. Dr. William White, chairman of the Faculty Senate, stated, "there's a 40% chance that the senate will get to it on that date."

Following is a portion of the introductory paragraph of the resolution: "It is our belief that the present pass/no pass option is not serving our students' interests and that pending a more thorough study of the entire system of evaluation, the pass/no pass option should be immediately repealed."

The main points of the resolution are: 1. "The pass/no pass option is not encouraging students to become more internally motivated," as it was intended to do with the elimination of a passing grade. "It is doing the opposite." 2. "It encourages students to distribute their efforts in terms of 'grades' vs. pass/no pass course and encourages the belief that intellectual commitment should be related to the grade test will survive."

3. "The system encourages students NOT to make an intellectual commitment to their pass/no pass courses. This is harmful not only to the student, but equally important to the student-instructor relationship." CONCLUSIONS: 1. The pass/no pass option is justifiable in allowing students to take difficult electives which they might otherwise avoid for fear of a low grade.

2. It is not abused by all. "We are quite aware that some students do reap intellectual benefits because the option is available."

3. "We do believe that the pass/no pass option on the whole, works against the interests of this academic community."

4. "We do not wish to suggest that the previous grading system was perfect or even sound. We do think that it is preferable to the present system."

Discussion of the pass/no pass resolution took place at the March 1st Student Association meeting in Billings. Alan Wertheimer, Assistant Professor of Political Science, and Garrison Nelson, Instructor of Political Science, represented the committee of five who drew up the (continued on page three)

CALENDAR/ANNOUNCEMENTS

Northeastern Slavic Conference To Hold It's Annual Meeting At UVM

The Northeastern Slavic Conference of the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies will hold its annual meeting at the University of Vermont in Burlington, on Thursday, April 27, Friday, and Saturday, April 28 and 29. Approximately 250 scholars from the U.S. and Canada are expected to attend. The scholars represent all disciplines in the social sciences as well as languages, literatures, religion, theatre, etc. Subject matter for discussion will be as diverse as assessments of Khrushchev, Slavic drama and film, Soviet foreign policy, Slavic studies in U.S. secondary schools, human services in the Soviet Union, demographic trends in Eastern Europe, etc.

University of Vermont history professor Robert V. Daniels is president of the Northeastern group while the executive secretary and program chairman for the Conference is Vermont political science professor, James S. Pacy. The Northeastern group's vice-president is Columbia University professor Leopold H. Haimson. In addition to Daniels, Staron, and Pacy, the Conference program committee includes professors Robert L. Baker, Middlebury College; Danuta Bienkowska, University of Toronto; L.A.D. Dellin, Vermont; Norton T. Dodge, University of Maryland; Frederic J. Fleron, State University of New York at Buffalo; Mark Field, Boston University and Harvard; Robert G. Jensen, Syracuse University; George L. Kline, Bryn Mawr; Alvin Z. Rubinstein, Pennsylvania; Irving H. Smith, Sir George Williams University, Montreal; and a Harvard graduate student, Steven Grant. The Conference's keynote address will be delivered by Dartmouth professor Henry L. Roberts on Thursday, April 27 at 8 p.m. in the North Lounge of the Billings Center on the University of Vermont Campus. For years Roberts was director of the Russian Institute at Columbia University and editor of the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies' outstanding periodical, The Slavic Review. He lives in Rochester, Vermont and also serves as a member of the Conference's program committee.

Grant Application Forms Available For Student Programs

The Family Associates gift committee will be meeting soon to consider requests from University of Vermont organizations for grants for the general purpose of enriching student life. The organization, open to parents of UVM students, and funded by dues from parents electing to pay them, annually has made gifts which include geographic globes for residence halls, encyclopedias for residence halls, an emergency fund for students, sewing machines for residence halls, magazine subscriptions, records, tea service, and drapes for Billings, acquisition of art and furnishings, and gifts to a variety of organizations including the Outing Club and the Pep Committee.

Most gifts have ranged from $100 to $500 but a major gift was made to underwrite approximately half the cost of the new uniforms acquired recently by the UVM Band. The Associates also have made Vermont Professor Daniels will deliver a presidential address at the Conference banquet on Friday night, April 28 at Burlington's Sheraton Motor Inn. Daniels, a native Burlingtonian, has been chairman of the department of history at Vermont, is past director of Vermont's experimental college, and is the author of numerous books, articles, and reviews on the Soviet Union.

The Conference sessions are open to the public as will be the publishers' book displays in the Marsh Lounge of the Billings Center.

Van Doren, A Man Of Many Talents

The Student Association Speakers Bureau presents Mark Van Doren, prize-winning poet, playwright, novelist and teacher, on Wednesday March 15, 1972. Mr. Van Doren will speak in Ira Allen Chapel on the University of Vermont campus at 8:00 p.m.

Mark Van Doren is one of the best known American poets of the Twentieth century. His talent encompasses the many areas of poetry, drama, fiction and non-fiction, teaching and critical analysis and in 1940, he won the Pulitzer Prize for poetry. Equally important is the influence he exerted during his 39 years at Columbia University where he was Professor Emeritus of English. On the occasion of his retirement, when 500 friends and former students-turned-writers gathered to honor him, the late James Thurber said that "Mark Van Doren is so many men that I have to open my front door and windows when he visits me in order to let all of him in." Of his memorable course on Shakespeare that he taught for 16 years, it was said that "it is almost as if no one has written (or talked) about Shakespeare before."

The enduring figure of Mark Van Doren is appearing before a new generation of students. It is the measure of his talent, humanity, and love, that the generation gap is non-existent during his lectures and seminars. What he says of "truth" can easily be said of him:

"No thought, no feeling, is to be rejected for the simple reason that it is old. Or because it is new. The truth of it, if one can find that out, is all that matters."

"The magic weight of his soul is hard to come by. It's what literature is about. His writing, his example, and his personality helped a variety of young would-be to understand that a book is not a flat and abstract surface; it is a piece of multidimensional sculpture." N.Y. Times, Nov. 10, 1968. Admission is free with I.D. No tickets will be required.

George Albee Speaks

George Albee will speak on American Psychology in the Seventies. John Dewey Hall, Room 314. Friday, March 10, at 2:30.

Student Representatives To Board

Of Trustees To Be Selected

The University of Vermont Board of Trustees meeting of February 19, 1972 was the last one for the current student representatives. New representatives will be selected for the April 15 Board meeting. Interviews will be held in the evenings of March 20-24. If anyone is interested in applying, please contact the Student Association in Billings Center.

Student representatives are needed for the following committees: Educational Policy, Development, Governance, Investment, Management and Planning, Student Activities, Buildings and Grounds, and Finance and Budget.

The student representatives participate along with the faculty representative on each of the Board of Trustees committees. These committee meetings are normally held on the Friday before the open Board meetings on Saturday.

This is an excellent opportunity for anyone who is interested in the administrative proceedings of the university. The student representatives have direct input into the committees. Each representative represents the student body in the Board committee meetings.

We offer a developmental alternative in undergraduate education for those who want to affect the structure and priorities of our society.

Programs in the arts, communications, video, urban studies, social sciences, mental health, community development, education, basic human problems, political sciences, law, environmental science, etc.

Our sliding scale tuition enables students to attend who might otherwise be unable to afford a quality education.

A concurrent work/study program helps students find meaningful jobs to support themselves and complement course work and individual and group projects.

We feel that college and universities must respond to the needs of the communities that surround them and not just to their own needs.

Our campus is located in three areas: Washington, Columbia and Baltimore.

We are now considering applicants for Summer and Fall, 1972.

Candidates' Stand On Marijuana

(Humphrey, McCloskey and Muskie) indicated they leaned heavily in that direction. Only one candidate (Mayor Sam Yorty) opposed these changes.

Decriminalization is the position recently embraced by John Finlator, former number two man in the Bureau of Narcotics, and Dr. Bert Brown, the Director of the National Institute of Mental Health. And it has been widely speculated in the press that the President's Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse will recommend the laws permit legal private marijuana use by adults in its comprehensive March 22nd report.

The candidates responded in a similarly favorable manner when asked if they would support such a finding by the Commission. Six (Chisholm, Hartke, Lindsay, McCarthy, Muskie and Spock) said yes, one (McGovern) was favorable, and again one (Yorty) was opposed. Two candidates (Humphrey and McCloskey) failed to respond to this question.

LEGALIZATION

The final question dealt with support for instituting a system of governmentally controlled, legal sales. Three of the candidates (Chisholm, Hartke, Lindsay, McCarthy, Muskie and Spock) said yes, one (McGovern) was favorable, while the remaining six said they currently oppose such a step.

NIXON'S POSITION

President Nixon has publicly stated that he would ignore the recommendations of the Marijuana Commission should they call for legalization. However, Stroup commented, "Nixon has left his options open as to the possibility of decriminalization, the recommendation which we now expect from the Commission. I assume he will have a comment on this following the release of that report later this month. We are hopeful the President will support the findings of his own Commission."

A listing of specific questions and responses, along with supporting documents to the survey follow.

- (1) Do you now favor the elimination of all criminal penalties for simple possession of marijuana for personal use by those 18 years or older? (Decriminalization)

Chisholm - yes
Hartke - yes
Humphrey - favorable
Lindsay - yes
McCarthy - yes
McCloskey - favorable
McGovern - yes
Muskie - favorable
Spock - yes
Yorty - no

- (2) Assuming the Marijuana Commission recommends the elimination of all criminal penalties for simple possession of marijuana for personal use by adults, will you support their recommendations?

Chisholm - yes
Hartke - yes
Humphrey - failed to respond
Lindsay - yes
McCarthy - yes
McCloskey - failed to respond
McGovern - favorable
Muskie - yes
Spock - yes
Yorty - no

- (3) In contrast to the current prohibition, do you favor a system of governmental control over the distribution of marijuana similar to the licensing system used for alcohol? (Legalization)

Chisholm - yes
Hartke - no
Humphrey - no
Lindsay - no
McCarthy - yes
McCloskey - no
McGovern - favorable
Muskie - no
Spock - yes
Yorty - no

to be determined by the Student Association Senate before such proposals are approved." (T.62-3/1/72).

Dean Powers commented that there were two issues being discussed, the structure of the University and the substance of the PASS/NO PASS issue. The question was, "What is the substance of the PASS/NO PASS issue?"

In other business, Tim night, the issue was tabled until the next meeting.

Ace Bugher of the Constitution Review Committee moved that the Senate accept the new constitution. The motion will be voted on in three weeks. (See article in this week's Cynic about the new constitution.)

The concert Bureau reported that the last concert, J. Gell and Yes, cost approximately $11,300. Ticket sales for the concert brought in over $16,000.

Arute Explains Fraternities' Vote Against New Constitution

problems with the investigative committee. We tried to work with these people the best we could and found that the results were not really not what we had reported to these people. Let's face it—the $22,000 debt was the result of the ineptitude of the people that ran the weekend. After the debt was incurred, everybody started denying responsibility. You had the Administration, who had a man who was supposed to be advising this committee, and did nothing but sign the vouchers and had no idea how much money was left. You had the Student Association, who after the debt was incurred, began to say that they never had control over this organization. It was spelled out quite specifically in the IFC Constitution, that when Kake Walk became Winter Weekend, that fraternities were no longer responsible. The Kake Walk activities were spelled out quite specifically in the Constitution.

When this ended, the responsibilities were taken away from our shoulders. Now, I am not here to know whether it was shifted to the Administration or shifted to the S.A. QUESTION: It was shifted to the S.A. ANSWER: Well, I would assume it was turned over to them. QUESTION: President Rowell said so specifically. ANSWER: There were attempts made to negotiate a settlement between fraternities and SA about this problem. The Greeks were reluctant to hand this over to the SA. We lost the battle, but probably through the debt, we won the war!

QUESTION: Do you think there is any feasible way for the Student Association to work together? ANSWER: Yes, I think even with some of the Constitutional Revisions we could work together, if the problems of fraternities were taken into consideration. We used the channel of communication that the Greek Caucus would provide. There is some question of the intent of a caucus such as this, because it is so vaguely stated in the Constitution, that its jurisdiction would be Fraternity Forum in no way desires to see the end of Student Association, as some people feel.

QUESTION: Do you think some people in SA, or the SA Executive Committee desire to see the end of fraternities on this campus? ANSWER: I think there is some definite Greek sentiment among some members of the executive committee. I would say, though, that Gene Beaudoin is probably not one of those people. I think he has really tried his best to maintain channels of communication between SA and Fraternity Forum. I think there is a lot of underground work done that even Gene is not aware of. If he is aware of it, he's never let me know...I think the problem is that some people who are on the executive committee let some of their personal feelings get in the way of what are the best interests of the students on this campus.

Professors' Resolution

resolution, and expressed their personal views on the subject. Alan Wertheimer expressed "rather serious doubts about the working of the pass/no pass system at UVM." He feels that this system "discourages intellectual commitment" on the students' part, and that student-professor relationships suffer as a whole.

The problem of the pass/no pass system is that it works within a letter grade system. Dr. Wertheimer was not willing to defend the merits of a total letter grade system, but he felt that it is "preferable" to the pass/no pass system. He felt that the faculty is responsible for curriculum matters, and has been "irresponsible in not asking, 'is it working?'"

Garrison Nelson expressed his concern that the pass/no pass system may become a threat to the graduate school system. He explained that since the implementation of this system here at UVM, grade averages in the college of Arts and Sciences have gone up. An estimated 50% of the students in the college of Arts and Sciences made the dean's list this past semester. He cited a few cases of graduate school candidates where there were discrepancies between a high grade point average and low graduate exam scores. To have to "explain away" this phenomenon, Mr. Nelson termed, "fudging."

Before the meeting adjourned, a suggestion was brought up to have a campus wide referendum on the issue of the pass/no pass option to allow students to express their views and to have some say in the final decision of the fate of the pass/no pass system.

QUESTION: Since aspirin is supposed to take only one minute to reach your bloodstream, according to television commercials, why does it take so long to "get off" on hallucinogenic chemicals such as LSD, mescaline and peilocybin?

ANSWER: The drugs you mentioned all produce perceptual distortions and abnormalities if taken in very, very tiny doses. Exactly what happens to produce the psychic effects of these drugs is unclear, but many people feel that they release inhibiting centers in the brain that normally control the perception of sensory stimuli. Actually, close questioning of people who have taken these drugs indicates that most of the effects that they have are not true hallucinations but rather very intense illusory experiences. The difference is that a hallucination arises completely within one's self whereas an illusory experience has its beginnings in some real, external stimulus which undergoes elaboration and distortion inside the person. For example, colors or patterns become over emphasized, appear much brighter than they really are, and appear to be shifting and flashing, or a sound is more intense, richer and fuller than it really is.

Some studies have shown that the actual perceptual changes following a dose of LSD occur after the drug is excreted from the brain, which suggests that the material opens some neural pathways or unlocks some inhibiting centers and then disappears; this may also explain why a person can have a bad trip that lasts for such a long time or may be tripped into a psychotic state that can go on for weeks or months.

Incidentally, it is not terribly relevant that a particular brand of aspirin reaches the bloodstream in a minute as opposed to two minutes since it is still quite a few minutes more before the level of the drug is high enough to have some effect on reducing pain.

QUESTION: Other than pregnancy, does the deposit of semen in the female sex tract have any bearing on the health and sex attitude of a woman? I can remember my mother telling me to watch for weight increase after marriage, and others have said that the deposit and absorption of semen would have good effects on my nerves and emotions.

With very, very infrequent orgasms would contraceptives other than condoms be of any eventual help in achieving more frequent orgasms? After several years of marriage and four children, my husband almost always uses condoms; I now wonder if I have been missing something.

ANSWER: You have raised the possibility of an interesting causal relation between sexual intercourse and feeling good, namely that semen contains some sort of sex molecules. It doesn't work that way. On the other hand, most men and women involved in a close relationship find that sexual intercourse does produce a sense of well being and is an important part of their closeness.

Sexual arousal to a high point without orgasm can leave a person feeling tense, anxious, and if it happens often enough, fairly irritable. Some people find one or another contraceptive more conducive to relaxing in sexual intercourse making it much easier to have an orgasm. However, the condom is not usually considered to interfere with the woman having an orgasm; so perhaps the answer to your second question has to do more with sexual technique. There are a number of paperbacks available discussing techniques of sexual intercourse, I suggest you look over some of these and pick out one that seems appealing. In fact, pick out two of them and give one of them to your husband.

How 'Democratic' Are The Coalition's Goals?

The Cynic received an article this week which read as follows:

"The Coalition Can Be Effective"

The Coalition For a Democratic University is dedicated to striving for equal representation. How many people either have a say or know how this "university" is run? Generalities can no longer appease the people who want to know how; who want to know why; and then who. When we have other people to work with, to co-operate with, much work can be done.

There are too many operations within this community that are unquestioned, unanswered, and even unmentioned. How many of us know how much land the University of Vermont owns and what they do with it? Mount Mansfield, or an oil field in Arkansas for instance? For some reason there are students and faculty and administration people who are beginning to forget our Board of Trustees. Do you remember the United States Supreme Court's conflict of interest decision? Our Board of trustees. Conflict of interests? The men, their principles and their goals.

Our admission policies, what are the "pre-requisites": is race, religion, or finance considered? They most certainly are; because of a very few students, a few black students. The Black representation here has come from zero to a beginning, a beginning seen nowhere else; Religion? In recent years the Jewish admissions have gone down. Perhaps it is coincidence but it seems that a good amount of Radical Activities have been perpetuated by these same people.

Allocation of state and federal funds; Vermont is very far from being a wealthy state but, what happens to the money that is given to us from these two giant beneficiaries? It would be really fine to know where our time and our efforts and our money are taking us.

These are only a few questions needed, the coalition has some answers now; believe me, you would not feel safe or secure or content with these answers.

If you missed the open meeting yesterday and you want to do something, or you want some answers, or you have some questions, please, call 862-4080 and ask for Christopher or Willy. Elitism is no good, egoism is no good, we have no officers, no parliamentary procedure, no "organizers", we're just a circle of people, one hundred people, let's help one another.

Signed:
The Coalition For
A Democratic University

If the "Coalition For a Democratic University" truly lived up to its glorious ideals, it would not have submitted such an article. To begin with, there was no byline or signature to the article, surely we are not to believe that all one hundred coalition members sat down one night and wrote this. In addition, the "article", if you wish to call it such, indulges in extremely questionable attempts to excite the reader with scanty information. Specifically, the references to the Supreme Court Decision, the oil well in Arkansas, allocation of State and Federal funds, and especially the admissions policy concerning Jewish students and radicals, all are shameful displays of half-truth, innuendo, and for all we know, fabrication. But we do not know, for the Coalition does not supply us with one single, solitary shred of supporting evidence to back up the allegations expressed in that travesty.

If this is indicative of the thought and mood which prevails in the Coalition For A Democratic University, then hopefully the students at UVM will give it no support. There are, without question, some things wrong with the University of Vermont and the way in which it is run, but a group which employs the tactics of fascist demagogues mocks itself with an appellation seeking democracy.

Black Studies Committee Reveals Its Findings And Recommendations

To the Editor:

For: Department Chairman and Faculty

From: Black Studies Curriculum Committee Support Services Committee

The University of Vermont, in its pursuit of academic diversity and excellence, has committed itself to the principle of establishing a racially heterogeneous body of students and faculty. In the past several years the number of black students at the University has increased greatly and will continue to increase in the future. Unfortunately, the increase in programs and courses bearing upon the black experience has failed to keep pace with the increase in students.

We believe the University of Vermont should have the dual purpose, in the area of minority group education, of providing students of minority races with superior educational opportunities and informing other students of the richness and diversity of America's black heritage. Black studies are central to the difficult process of self-definition which black students must undergo; this is especially true here at Vermont, where the black community, though supportive, is very small in comparison with the white community. Black studies are central to white students as well, for they offer the hope that by abolishing ignorance they may abolish racism as well, and they promise the necessary depth and breadth of racial understanding that is so necessary to future teachers and citizens.

We recommend, therefore, that all departments seriously consider the following courses of action:

All departments should give, in their hiring procedures, the highest priority to the active recruitment of members of racial minorities for their faculties.

All possible departments should develop new courses which deal specifically with the nature and content of black life, art, history, society, and experience.

Black professors should be recruited to teach such courses. When new hiring is impossible, and the task of teaching a course in black studies is given to a teacher presently on the faculty, he should contact our committee. We will provide him with whatever information and expertise we either have or can locate. In addition, we will attempt to find a black teaching assistant to help the teacher in his class presentations, and who will be prepared to lead discussion sections.

All departments, when dealing with either the hiring of minority group faculty or creating new course offerings, should consult with black students and include them in the selection or creation process.

We welcome your inquiries and replies. Please send responses to: Black Studies Curriculum Committee, at the College of Education, Counseling and Guidance, 228 Waterman.

Right To Be A Homosexual Not The Issue Claims Writer

March 1, 1972

To the Editor of the Cynic:

Recent letters to the Cynic concerning homosexuality have ranged from calling homosexual behavior a disease to calling it a way of life to which an individual should have free access. People have talked in terms of "civil rights" of homosexuals.

The right to be homosexual is not the issue! Men or women can make love to each other as easily as men and women can, if one regards homosexuals as a distinct body of people attempting to obtain a niche in society in which to privately exercise their nature. Neither is the right to be dikes or queens the primary issue, for such people seem to be able to emerge into society without the need for "rights."

The issue is the necessity to be humanly sexual in the face of a culture which thrives on repression and categorization. The gay movement is but a faction of the sexual revolution in America (which includes women's lib and the bisexual community) which itself is but a faction of the cultural revolution. Movement factions use labels such as "gay" as part of a psychological process of becoming aware of the political forces imposed upon them (this has nothing to do with the political conventions). The same process is at work in the process of taking a societal weapon of categorization, dehumanization, and abuse and turning it into a tool of self discovery.

One thing that will become more clear as things proceed is that it is not possible to talk about another person as if they were black, gay, a woman, a hippy, or whatever without realizing that these distinctions are roles related to social struggle, a struggle imposed by the same oppressively rational, inhumanity responsible for everything from Parenti's problems to the fact that this country runs you, itself, and even the President like an automated GM automobile straight out of 1984.

Shaking hands is a sexual act. Football is an orgy. Tiny Tim is as sexually straight as Spiro Agnew. So wake up and remember to kiss your children after they reach puberty, too. The true meaning of "make love, not war" will not be realized until the USMC and the Viet Cong - to say nothing of you and your wrestling partner in Gym Class - crawl under the sheets.

Freshman Year Is Tough

To the Editor:

In your previous news paper (Feb. 17, 1972), there was an article entitled "Freshman Girls Ain't Grievances" in which the girls are complaining about the guys who seem to be afraid of them, or shy towards the girls when it comes to asking them for a date. Also, that the ones that aren't afraid or shy, only want a "Piece of Ass". At this point I'd like to state my opinions and reasons why.

Since the Freshman year is the hardest one out of the four, most of the guys tend to stay together studying and helping each other out. The leisure time that they do have, they are shy or afraid to ask a girl for a date. In my case, this is what's wrong with me. Since this is my first semester here at U.V.M. I know very few people, especially girls. But now that I know how the girls feel, I think I will have more friends in the weeks to come.

If any girl wants to discuss this or anything else with me over a couple of drinks, I will be more than glad to. I think if they had enough guts to write an article stating how they feel they will have enough guts to call me. My name is: George Santiago

An Invitation To Meet

To the Editor:
This is an open invitation to all the bewildered males and frustrated women on campus. Since the flow of letters in the Cynic seems to be the only source of communication, Robinson Hall is sponsoring a party on Sunday, March 12 at 7:00 for all interested; frustrated or not.

Seems Like Nobody Listened...

To the Editor:

Dick Gregory gave another one of his fantastic talks on Friday night. To me, and I hope many other people, Dick Gregory had a real, big impression.

For the first time I stepped out of my tracks leading nowhere, and looked at some of the dumb things I involve myself with. Some of these being: personal eating habits...others having to do with thoughts, and others toward others.

It's unbelievable how little effect Gregory can have on melting the giant glacier of apathy existing here on campus. My floor came back from the talk and stopped talking about it half way back to the dorm. Then they ran to the refrigerator to grab their fix of beer or wine from the local chivron station or their latest parcel of "great" dope. Really gets you off great! This is a college community, supposedly and yet no effect by anything but a club.

The "slimy, degenerates" sticking close to Nixon's plans have nothing to worry about with this community getting in the way. I hope it's not the truth but, what else can you believe by looking around.

If the whites in the country had half as much initiative as the blacks, Nixon would be stumbling over the Great Wall with picking tar and feathers off his rear.

An AEM site is scheduled to be built on the campus green next month, guess we'll just have to find some place else to shoot the bull on those warm spring days...

Thanks
J.G.S.

Now, About Those Girls

February 18, 1972

To the Editor:

In regard to the letter in the February 17 issue from the Freshmen Women, I can say that it both pleased and surprised me. You see, I am a man who is interested in forming an "honest, friendly relationship with girls". Up to this time I had not thought there were any "nice" girls who were looking for male companionship, and that is why I was surprised by their letter. I was pleased to find out they do exist, but where? I transferred here just this semester, so my plight is worse than theirs to some extent. I know that it means to sit in a dorm room on Friday and Saturday nights with nothing to do or anybody to do it with if there were. As a result of their letter, I have hope for the future. My only request is that they bear with us nice guys for a while until we can adjust to the thought of such a future. It isn't easy to do. We'd do our best to meet you but I think you must hide, also. The only girls I've met around here so far are the type guys go looking for at parties and so I hesitate to continue the quest through such an array of quests, lest I lose my wick.

Thank you,
M.C. '73

Gregory Coverage Questioned

March 3, 1972

To the Editor:

Your coverage of Dick Gregory's lecture at UVM angers me in its inaccuracy. It was not a "famous Negro" that spoke such painful truths, but a right thinking black man.

With very little respect for your perception,

Suggests Campus Mixer

March 2, 1972

To the Editor:

We are writing this letter in response to all the grievances being aired through the Cynic concerning the "how-to-meet-a-boy/girl syndrome". These letters back and forth demonstrate that both sides do care, but letters aren't helping to solve the problem.

Therefore, we would like to suggest that at the beginning of each new semester a mixer be held for all freshmen men and women. This would make meeting a person unprejudiced and casual, and the beginning of a semester is a perfect time to have one because everyone is "psyched" and eager to meet new people. By a mixer we do not mean little "room parties" or other so called "parties" on a small scale—but a mixer held in a place large enough to accommodate the bulk of the freshman class (for instance Patrick Gym). Since the beginning of this semester has already passed, perhaps now is still a good time to hold a mixer. How about it? Granted, this may not be the ultimate solution but it is certainly a start. Both the men and women are to blame for the current situation, but with a sincere effort from both parties this can change. Let's do something about it!

New Student Constitution Will Bring All Together, Hopefully Stop Duplicated Efforts

by Jeri Covey

Over the past month the Cynic has printed articles on the new Student Association Constitution—that is, being drafted. This new constitution has two main purposes: to restructure the organization of the SA government in order to facilitate greater efficiency within the executive offices, and to merge the Fraternity Forum, Panhellenic Council, and Inter-Residence Association into the Student Association.

An ad hoc Constitution Revision Committee was recognized by SA Senate as one group who is preparing a new draft of the constitution. But Gene Beaudoin, President of SA, emphasized at a recent meeting of executive board members of SA, Panhel, and IRA, that the final constitution would be a product of the executive boards of all four of the student governments. At this meeting, Panhel representatives expressed opposition to the idea of consolidating Panhel into SA. IRA, however, does strongly support the idea of the consolidation. Because of the opposition by the Panhel representatives, it was decided that the sections of the constitution that dealt with the merger would contain "may" clauses in order to make the merger optional to the different organizations. (See last week's Cynic article.) A draft of the constitution has been drawn up and was presented to the SA Senate last night. As of press time, it was not known how the Senate would react to the draft. The draft is still not the final one, but is subject to the approval of the Senate. The final constitution must be ratified by the students "when acted upon favorably by a majority of an SA quorum" at a general assembly of the students. The presence of a majority of the number of voters cast in the most recent general election of officers of the SA shall constitute a quorum. The constitution then goes into effect after it has been approved by the President of the University and the Board of Trustees.

The draft of the constitution calls for three officers of SA to be elected by the students. The officers are President, Treasurer, and Secretary of the Senate. In addition there are three officers appointed by the Senate: Secretary of Student Activities, Secretary of Elections, and Communications Officer. The individual caucuses also elect from their own members a Chairman of the Caucus.

There will be a Co-ordinating Committee that will take the place of what is now called the Executive Board. This committee "shall be composed of the President, Chairman of the Senate, Chairman of the Finance Committee and Chairmen of the Caucuses." Its purpose will be to "co-ordinate and review all legislation, committee reports, information and other matters pertaining to the SA, for presentation to the Senate on the agenda."

In addition to the co-ordinating committee, the other standing committees will be Finance Committee, Election Committee, Student Activities Committee, and Communications Committee. These committees will be chaired, respectively by the President, the Secretary of the Senate, the Secretary of Student Activities, and the Communications Officer. The members of these committees will be appointed by their respective chairmen with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Membership in the Senate will be composed of one representative from each of the residence halls, fraternities and sororities and 10 representatives from the town. Representatives of the town are representatives elected by all students who live off-campus and not in either a fraternity or a sorority. Voting in the Senate is proportional to the number of students that a senator represents.

The sections of the constitution that would consolidate, if the organization is willing, the Fraternity Forum, Panhel, IRA, into the Student Association institute caucuses to deal with the problems of these particular constituencies. "SA Senators, Inter-Residence Affairs representatives, Fraternity Forum and Panhel representatives may be one in the same. The representatives of the various constituencies shall meet in caucus to discuss the various problems of their respective constituencies."

The funding of the residence halls and the IRA caucus will be delineated within the Inter-Residence Affairs Constitution. In regard to the fraternities and sororities "funding shall remain in collection; management and disbursement separate from S.A. funds and responsibility as required by (fraternity/Panhel) regulations."

It is hoped by the SA that these changes in the constitution will increase the efficiency of the student governments by reducing the bureaucratic red-tape and will also produce greater co-operation between the different student governments and prevent duplication of effort.

It's funny isn't it how some things stare you in the face and you never even see them. RUV is a radio station and is short for WRUV-AM. If you ever happen to glance behind Pomeroy Hall you will see an old barn, known by some as WRUV.

Operating at 580 on your radio dial WRUV was established exclusively by UVM students to serve the student body at UVM. Highway Plan

by Kirby Kirkpatrick
The Vermont Highway Department proposed a construction plan for a half-clover interchange connecting East Avenue and Spear Street during a four-hour hearing Feb. 29 in Waterman. Students, faculty members and the Burlington public attacked the $400,000 proposed program.

Officials endorsing the proposal seek to speed the traffic flow and improve pedestrian and vehicle safety in the area. The complex of one-way, jug handles, medians and a traffic island is intended to clean up the messy traffic situation. Twenty-four thousand vehicles and 17,000 pedestrian crossings congest the area daily. President Andrews and other officials favor the plan for South Burlington and Burlington.

Reacting strongly to the approval, students and faculty members voiced their opinions with anger, disappointment and discontent.

Gene Beaudoin presented statements opposing the highway plan. He demanded to know the number of signs required for the proposed interchange because road signs are usually large and unsightly. He also questioned the proposed hedge hiding the fence to keep people off the road; it adds another place for crowd attackers to camouflage themselves.

"Burlington is different," Beaudoin said. "It has a university in the middle, a lake on the west side and a flood plain on the north. It already has reached the limits of the traffic it can take and short-range solutions are not

programs and courses bearing upon the black experience has failed to keep pace with the increase in students.

We believe the University of Vermont should have the dual purpose, in the area of minority group education, of providing students of minority races with superior educational opportunities and informing other students of the richness and diversity of America's black heritage. Black studies are central to the difficult process of self-definition which black students must undergo; this is especially true here at Vermont, where the black community, though supportive, is very small in comparison with the white community. Black studies are central to white students as well, for they offer the hope that by abolishing ignorance they may abolish racism as well, and they promise that necessary depth and breadth of racial understanding that is so necessary to future teachers and citizens.

We recommend, therefore, that all departments seriously consider the following courses of action:

All departments should give, in their hiring procedures, the highest priority to the active recruitment of members of racial minorities for their faculties.

All possible departments should develop new courses which deal specifically with the nature and content of black life, art, history, society, and experience.

Black professors should be recruited to teach such courses. When new hiring is impossible, and the task of teaching a course in black studies is given to a teacher presently on the faculty, he should contact our committee. We will provide him with whatever information and expertise we either have or can locate. In addition, we will attempt to find a black teaching assistant to help the teacher in his class presentation, and who will be prepared to lead discussion sections.

All departments, when dealing with either the hiring of minority group faculty or creating new course offerings, should consult with black students and include them in the selection or creation process.

Freshman Year Is Tough

To the Editor:

In your previous news paper (Feb. 17, 1972), there was an article entitled "Freshman Girls Air Grievances," in which the girls are complaining about the guys who seem to be afraid of them, or shy towards the girls when it comes to asking them for a date. Also, that the ones that aren't afraid or shy, only want a "Piece of Ass". At this point I'd like to state my opinions and reasons why.

Since the Freshman year is the hardest one out of the four, most of the guys tend to stay together studying and helping each other out. The leisure time that they do have, they are shy or afraid to ask a girl for a date. In my case, this is what's wrong with me. Since this is my first semester here at U.V.M. I know very few people, especially girls. But now that I know how the girls feel, I think I will have more friends in the weeks to come.

If any girl wants to discuss this or anything else with me over a couple of drinks, I will be more than glad to. I think if they had enough guts to write an article stating how they feel they will have enough guts to call me. My name is: George Santiago

Seems Like Nobody Listened...

To the Editor:

Dick Gregory gave another one of his fantastic talks on Friday night. To me, and I hope many other people, Dick Gregory had a real big impression.

For the first time I stepped out of my tracks leading nowhere, and looked at some of the dumb things I involve myself with. Some of these being personal eating habits, others having to do with thoughts, and others toward others.

It's unbelievable how little effect Gregory can have on melting the giant glacier of apathy existing here on campus. My floor came back from the talk and stopped talking about it half way back to the dorm. Then they ran to the refrigerator to grab their rot gut beer or wine from the local chevron station or their latest parcel of "great" dope. Really gets you off great! This is a college community, supposedly and yet no effect by anything but a club.

The "dimmy, degenerates" sticking close to Nixon's plans have nothing to worry about with this community getting in the way. I hope it's not the truth but, what else can you believe by looking around.

If the whites in the country had half as much initiative as the blacks, Nixon would be stumbling over the Great Wall still picking tar and feathers off his rear.

An ADM site is scheduled to be built on the campus green next month, guess we'll just have to find some place else to shoot the bull on those warm spring days.

Thanks

Right To Be A Homosexual Not The Issue Claims Writer

March 1, 1972

To the Editor of the Cynic:

Recent letters to the Cynic concerning homosexuality have ranged from calling homosexual behavior a disease to calling it a way of life to which an individual should have free access. People have talked in terms of the "civil rights" of homosexuals.

The right to be homosexual is not the issue! Men or women can make love to each other as easily as men and women can, if one regards homosexuals as a distinct body of people attempting to obtain a niche in society in which to privately exercise their nature. Neither is the right to be dikes or queens the primary issue, for such people seem to be able to emerge into society without the need for "rights."

The issue is the necessity to be humanly sexual in the face of a culture which thrives on the repression of sexual desire.

categorization. The gay movement is but a faction of the sexual revolution in America (which includes women's lib and the bisexual community) which itself is but a faction of the cultural revolution. Movement factions use labels such as "gay" as part of a psychological process of becoming aware of the political forces imposed upon them (this has nothing to do with the concept of black pride - it is the process of taking a societal weapon of categorization, dehumanization, and abuse and turning it into a tool of self discovery).

One thing that will become more clear as things proceed is that it is not possible to talk about another person as if they were black, gay, a woman, a hippy, or whatever without realizing that those distinctions are roles related to social struggle, a struggle imposed by the same oppressively rational, objective, and necessary responsibility for everything from Parent's problems to the fact that this country runs on itself, and even the President like an automated GM automobile straight out of 1984.

Shaking hands is a sexual act. Football is an orgy. Tiny Tim is as sexually straight as Spiro Agnew. So wake up and remember to kiss your children after they reach puberty, too. The true meaning of "make love, not war" will not be realized until the USMC and the Viet Cong - to say nothing of you and your wrestling partner in Gym Class - crawl under the sheets.

Now, About Those Girls

February 18, 1972

To the Editor:

In regard to the letter in the February 17 issue from the Freshmen Women, I can say that it both pleased and surprised me. You see, I am a man who is interested in forming an "honest, friendly relationship with girls". Up to this time I had not thought there were any "nice" girls who were looking for male companionship, and that is why I was pleased to find out they do exist, but where? I transferred here just this semester, so my plight is worse than that it means to sit in a dorm room on Friday and Saturday nights with nothing to do or anybody to do it with if there were. As a result of their letter, I have hope for the future. My only request is that they bear with us nice guys a while until we can adjust to the thought of such a future. It isn't easy to do. We'll do our best to meet you but I think you must hide, also. The only girls I've met around here so far are the type guys go looking for at parties and so I hesitate to continue the quest through such an array of sluts. I lose my way.

Thank you,

An Invitation To Meet Gregory Coverage Questioned

March 3, 1972

Suggests Campus Mixer

March 2, 1972

To the Editor:

We are writing this letter in response to all the grievances being aired through the Cynic concerning the "how-to-meet-a-boy/girl syndrome." These letters back and forth demonstrate that both sides do care, but letters aren't helping to solve the problem. Therefore, we would like to suggest that at the beginning of each new semester a mixer be held for all freshmen men and women. This would make meeting a person unprejudiced and casual, and the beginning of a semester is the perfect time to have one because everyone is "psyched" and eager to meet new people. By a mixer we do not mean little "room parties" or other so called "parties" on a small scale—but a mixer held in a place large enough to accommodate the bulk of the freshman class (for instance, Patrick Gym). Since the beginning of this semester has already passed, perhaps now is still a good time to hold a mixer. How about it? Granted, this may not be the ultimate solution but it is certainly a start. Both the men and women are to blame for the current situation, but with a sincere effort from both parties this can change. Let's do something about it!

Highway Improvement Plan

by Kirky Kirkpatrick

The Vermont Highway Department proposed a construction plan for a half-clover interchange connecting East Avenue and Spear Street during a four-hour hearing Feb. 29 in Waterman. Students, faculty members and the Burlington public attacked the $600,000 proposed program.

Officials endorsing the proposal seek to speed the traffic flow and improve pedestrian and vehicle safety in the area. The complex of one-way, jug handles, medians and a traffic island is intended to clean up the messy traffic situation. Twenty-four thousand vehicles and 17,000 pedestrian crossings congest the area daily. President Andrews and other officials favor the plan for South Burlington and Burlington.

Reacting strongly to the approval, students and faculty members voiced their opinions with anger, disappointment and discontent.

Cape Beaudoin presented statements opposing the highway plan. He demanded to know the number of signs required for the project because road signs are usually large and unsightly. He also questioned the proposed hedge hiding the fence to keep people off the road; it adds another place for co-ed attackers to camouflage themselves.

"Burlington" is different, Beaudoin said. "It has a university in the middle, a lake on the west side and a flood plain on the north. It already has reached the limits of the traffic. It can take any short-range solutions and not

by Frank Bonnett

It's funny isn't it how some things stare you in the face and you never even see them. WRUV is a radio station and is short for WRUV-AM. If you ever happen to glance behind Pomeroy Hall you will see an old barn, known by some as WRUV.

Operating at 580 on your radio dial, WRUV-AM is directed exclusively by UVM students to serve the student body at UVM. The station receives no funds from the university itself but does receive allocations from the Student Association. It is an adventure in free enterprise; a profit making endeavor subservient to no one but itself.

The profits do not go to pay the staff as the staff consists entirely of volunteers. The money that is made (if any) is reinvested in equipment and station improvement. In a couple of weeks a storage area for the arena theatre (presently sharing the barn with WRUV) will be removed and the station will be free to expand.

By now you probably are asking, "What can WRUV do for me?" First of all, it can be a place to gain valuable experience in advertising or a publicity man or maybe even a record producer. A staff of 35 people presently mans a station that could use at least 50. Ever have a dream about a DJ (disc jockey)?

Secondly, WRUV-AM plays decent music. By decent I mean music that you like to hear. In fact, at least 25% of all the music played is from requests. Name me a station in this area that plays what you want to hear when you want to hear it.

A third way WRUV serves you is by informing you about events on campus. Free advertising is given to not only the SA but to all students. If you need a ride or have an apartment, why not broadcast it on WRUV—its free.

For those talented individuals who have something to offer to the public, WRUV has 15 minutes of open airtime a week which is set aside for any person who wishes to perform. How about reading your poem or getting a couple of friends together and singing a song over the air?

After all, the station is here to use why not use it? WRUV broadcasts 7 days a week from 9 a.m. until 2 a.m. Who gets up before 9 o'clock anyway? Tune in to 580 and maybe you'll hear something besides Val Carter singing "Riki Tik."

WRUV-AM is always open to anyone who wishes to visit. I think that WRUV is a pretty fair station. Why not give it a try? The number is 3220.

Highway Dept. Plans Project

by Kirby Kirkpatrick

The Vermont Highway Department proposed a construction plan for a half-clover interchange connecting East Avenue and Spear Street during a four-hour hearing Feb. 29 in Waterman. Students, faculty members and the Burlington public attacked the $660,000 proposed program.

Officials endorsing the proposal seek to speed the traffic flow and improve pedestrian and vehicle safety in the area. The complex of one-way, fly handles, medians and a traffic island is intended to clean up the messy traffic situation. Twenty-four thousand vehicles and 17,000 pedestrians crossings congest the area daily. Presently, Andrews and other officials favor the plan for South Burlington and Burlington.

Reacting strongly to the approval, students and faculty members voiced their opinions with anger, disappointment and discontent.

Gene Beaudoin presented statements opposing the highway plan. He demanded to know the number of signs required for the project because road signs are usually large and unsightly. He also questioned the proposed hedge hiding the fence to keep people off the road; it adds another place for cow-eyed attackers to camouflage themselves.

"Burlington is different," Beaudoin said. "It has a university in the middle, a lake on the west side and a flood plain on the north. It already has reached the limits of the traffic it can take and short-range solutions are not going to solve the ultimate problem."

Dugout and disappointment was aired by many speakers. Opposing the issue, townspeople blamed the present traffic problem on commercial and shopping interests. The new plan would deliver consumer motorists to downtown merchants. Several students attacked the University for donating the ten acres of land—for the construction and asked them to reconsider their decision. A petition against the proposed plan showed further disapproval.

Institute Searches For Alternative To Drugs

DEL MAR, CALIFORNIA.

A nationwide search for alternative to drug abuse begins this month.

The National Institute of Mental Health will sponsor an imaginative effort to stimulate ideas for alternative pursuits that can compete effectively with the promise of drugs.

In this way, people will have a chance to explore the potential of their ideas in their own communities. Working separately, but sharing experiences and insights through a unique conferencing program, individuals will be first helped to form teams and then to create, plan, and try out specific alternatives.

The teams will use new approaches to take a fresh look at the specific needs and opportunities in their communities. What they learn will serve as a basis for inventing alternative pursuits—new things to do and other ways to go about the activities of everyday life.

Investigators in each community will be provided with information about potential alternative pursuits and suggestions on how to recruit others in their community to join in redefining the "pursuit of happiness" for our time. As teams are organized, they will receive assistance by mail, using extensive descriptive and how-to materials, exercises, games, and tape cassettes in five rounds of dialog.

Through these exchanges, each local team will have access to expert consultants to (1) refine their concepts, (2) learn what skills and resources they have as well as how to work together effectively, and (3) plan and decide the steps they can take next. They will also receive news about significant activities of other teams and will be able to call for specific information as needs arise. Links will be made between communities working on projects with similar concepts so that ideas and experiences which might prove useful to others will be exchanged as quickly as possible.

Later, teams who have made the most progress and have the greatest experience to share will be selected to attend "manoeuvres" in June at Warner Hot Springs, California. At these intensive sessions, representatives from the teams will join well-known people from the arts, professional disciplines, business, sports, and other fields related to change and the future. Teams will pool their experiences and work through gaming situations to learn and exercise skills that will improve their concepts and increase their effectiveness. Their insights and experiences at the manoeuvres will be shared through special reporting with other teams across the country.

Kurtz set the Alternative Pursuits project in this perspective:

threat of stiff legal sanctions and serious health consequences do not appear to have negated the appeal of drugs for many youths and adults. Drug use has grown despite more extensive drug education and law enforcement programs. This suggests that a new approach is needed.

The National Institute of Mental Health began a nationwide information and education campaign two years ago to combat the spreading of drug abuse. One of the goals of this effort was to somehow create alternatives to the use of drugs. Creating alternatives has become an important task.

Alternative pursuits can be designed to compete with drug use to win the involvement, interest, and expectations of individuals. It has become apparent that for many young people drugs are a way to relate more satisfyingly to themselves and others and to fulfill needs unmet in any other way. The question was how to develop alternatives to drugs.

"Thus," Mr. Kurtz concluded, "many teams and interesting thinkers from around the country will be involved with alternative concepts for many weeks, as a result of the continuing exchange of information and coaching that will begin in early spring. This should produce exciting results."

More information about this nationwide project is available from Alternative Pursuits, P.O. Box 861, Del Mar, Ca. 92014.

Walking With the Cynic

by Steven Rice

The afternoon had become oppressive. "So, it was indeed a relief when the Billings Center Cynic suggested we go for a walk. The chapel bells were finishing their daily song as we left the den."

"What's bothering you, dear boy? We've walked a good distance, and you haven't said a word. Why the Lord knows that members of your generation aren't especially noted for their silence."

Startled by the old man's observation, I said, "Oh, I'm sorry. I didn't mean to."

"No need to apologize, Son. There's nothing wrong in being quiet, when contemplating the nature of things. It's just that your silence reminded me of the days when I was young."

We walked a few steps further, before he continued: "You were known as some kind of dim-wit if you didn't keep your mouth shut. Being the kind of rebel, I was then, I kept wondering why people thought you were."

"And...the amusing thing about it all was that my rebellion was kept inside of me. So, no one knew about it. So, you see, I was keeping my mouth shut, like you were supposed to, and wondering at the same time why I was. Kind of odd, you might say." He snickered softly at his last thought.

"So, dear boy, there's no real reason why you have to keep it all inside yourself, right? Why don't you, as your generation says, open up?"

"Yes, Sir, you're quite right. I've just been thinking how boring this afternoon's been. You should've seen the people in my lecture. The professor kept spilling off all these facts, and kept asking us what we thought about them."

"Well, our heads were so dizzied by the time he had all the facts straight, we just sat dazed. I guess most of us just kept staring at that clock on the wall, praying the big hand would move along faster...Well, maybe that's not exactly right; I do know that I was looking, though."

Exasperated, I shrugged my shoulders, looked at the old man, and said: "What's the use of even talking about it, Sir? Even when you open up, it doesn't make it any better."

The Cynic grinned, and gave a fatherly pat on my back. "So, what the hell else is new, dear boy?" he remarked. Then, he became strangely silent.

We continued our walk, quietly contemplating the nature of things...

Is Pot Safe?

WASHINGTON (CPS)—The

second annual report on marijuana and health sent to Congress by the Secretary of Health Education, and Welfare recently claims that marijuana can provoke psychotic actions in unstable individuals, impair driving ability and cause other unspecified "serious effects."

Notably, the report also said that marijuana "smoked in moderate amounts by 'normal, healthy' college students probably has no ill effects."

Although he feels outright legalization of marijuana is going a step too far, Brown feels there is a need for "decriminalization" of the weed.

Dr. William E. Bunney Jr., head of the Mental Health Institute's division of narcotics and drug abuse, said that although this year's report was a major one—the critical studies remain to be done.

Bunney said tests indicate that persons driving under the influence of marijuana exhibit "deficient" intellectual performance and psychomotor skills.

The major surprise of the effects of the weed was the discovery that apparently there is little damage from long-term use.

"However, the overall question of what dosages, frequency and duration of use are clearly likely to be injurious to health in various groups and individuals remains unresolved," Bunney said.

The report also found that: "Marijuana use is as high as 90 percent in some groups of high school students."

"Heavy use of marijuana is associated with use of other drugs, but there is no scientific evidence that marijuana is psychologically addictive or causes use of other drugs."

"Further research is needed to determine the effects of marijuana on the chromosomes of women of child-bearing age and whether the drug damages such human organs as the brain and kidneys."

Series Studies Suicide

SUICIDE—Is life worth living? Recent statistics for the U.S.—show that every 24 minutes, someone answers NO to that question. Is suicide a product of insanity? Or are there times when suicide could be a rational decision of a healthy mind? What about the diabetic who forgets his injections regularly? What about the person who consistently overeats, adds excess fat to his body, causes undue stress on his heart, and ends his life 10 years earlier than might have been expected because of heart failure? Are there people engaged in an indirect, slow suicide? And as for those who commit suicide—Consciously and directly, what can we learn from them about our own lives and deaths.

This Tuesday evening, March 14, at 7:00 p.m. at St. Anselm's Chapel, we will be discussing the whole phenomenon of suicide in the fifth of six sessions on DEATH AND DYING. Our guest will be Dr. Christopher McArae, Asst. Professor of Psychiatry with the University Health Services. In a very informal session, we will be trying to understand why someone would commit suicide, how to talk to someone about to commit suicide, and what suicide means psychologically, socially, and morally.

Join us this Tuesday evening, March 14, for this session on the problem of suicide. The session begins at 7:00 p.m. at St. Anselm's Chapel, 100 Willow Street, Burlington, VT. Students, faculty, staff, as well as non-University people are all invited to attend.

First Family Of Guitar Next Lane Series Offering

The Romeros, billed as Spain's first family of guitar, appear on the Lane Series on Monday, March 13, 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

Tickets, priced from $3.75 to $4.00, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman and at the door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

This ensemble of classical guitarists comprises Candelario Romero and his sons, Colin, Pepe and Angel, who were introduced to American audiences over ten years ago.

In this period they have averaged over 100 concerts a season, appearing in all major cities and nearly every state in the union.

When they recently appeared in Vancouver, they were hailed as "the world's finest guitar ensemble since the founding of the genre."

They have performed even times with the Philadelphia Orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy and also with the Los Angeles, San

Candelario Romero and Sons

Francisco, Cleveland and Chicago symphonies. The artists' fame has been greatly enhanced by numerous recordings on the Mercury label, including "The Royal Family of Guitar," "Baroque Concertos of Vivaldi," and "An Evening of Flamenco Music."

This year they made an European tour in September and October, appearing with several orchestras in the U.S., and giving numerous recitals.

In the summer of 1970 they were featured on the NET series of Arthur Fiedler's "Evening at the Pops," with the Romeros playing Vivaldi and Rodrigo conducted by Fiedler with the famous Boston Pops Orchestra. They have also appeared in NBC's Today and Tonight shows and the Ed Sullivan Show on CBS. Candelario Romero, founder and father of the celebrated Quartet, was born in Malaga, Spain, the youngest son of a Spanish Architectural engineer who designed the harbor of Gibraltar. He played on his first guitar at the age of five, and then entered the Conservatory of Madrid. His three sons were practicing scales as soon as they were old enough to hold a guitar, and then each had made his concert debut in Seville's Teatro Lope de Vega.

Candelario and his three sons left their native Spain to settle in the U.S. in 1958. The family now lives in Southern California. The three boys are married to American girls, and between them are fathers of seven more potential guitar virtuosos.

Monday night's program will include such masters of the guitar as Vivaldi, Bach, Scarlatti, Villa-Lobos, Rodrigo, Albeniz, Romero, Sor, Breton, Sanz, Tarrega, and two flamenco improvisations.

Elisabeth Schwarzkopf Recital To Replace Vienna Opera Company

World-famed soprano Elisabeth Schwarzkopf will make her Burlington debut in the Lane Series on Wednesday, March 15, 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

This concert has been substituted for the cancelled Vienna Opera performance. Vienna Opera tickets will be good for the Schwarzkopf concert. Single admission tickets, $3.75 to $6.00, are available in the Lane Office, 234 Waterman, and at the door. For reservations, telephone 656-3418.

Madame Schwarzkopf is a legendary figure in her own lifetime, generally acclaimed as "the most perfect soprano of our time" without peer both as a singer and as a proponent of operatic roles.

She began her professional career with the Berlin Civic Opera, when she sang roles in "Fanny Hill," "The Merry Widow," "Die Fledermaus," and others. She gave her first recital in Vienna, and it was such a success that her fame spread as a recitalist and as an operatic singer.

After the end of World War II, Madame Schwarzkopf quickly became the recognized star of the Vienna Opera, followed by numerous appearances at Covent Garden in London, when she sang a wide variety of roles, including Gilda, Pamina, Sophie, Violetta, Mimì, Butterfly, Manon, Susannah and others.

Additional triumphs occurred at Salzburg, with a memorable performance in "Marriage of Figaro" conducted by Herbert von Karajan led to the company's invitation to perform at La Scala. It was there that Mrs. Schwarzkopf has sung virtually the entire standard operatic repertoire.

Her first American recital, at Carnegie Hall in 1953, was one of the most spectacular and most widely discussed debuts ever made in this country. Since then, the U.S. has been on her regular touring schedule with annual visits, during which she has appeared in Opera, recital and with Orchestras.

In 1955 Mrs. Schwarzkopf made her San Francisco Opera debut as the Marchioness in "Der Rosenkavalier," a role for which she was acclaimed throughout the world. She also made her debut in this role at the Metropolitan Opera in 1964. Subsequently a Paul Canner/J. Arthur Rank film of "Der Rosenkavalier" was an enormous success.

In 1967-68 Mrs. Schwarzkopf gave a recital on the distinguished "Great Performers at Philharmonic Hall" series, as well as recitals in Minneapolis and Chicago. In addition, she was featured soloist with all the leading major orchestras in this country, notably at Carnegie Hall with the Pittsburgh Symphony.

During 1970-71 Mrs. Schwarzkopf will again appear with the Washington National Symphony, the Toronto Symphony, the Indianapolis Symphony, and give another Philharmonic Hall recital as part of her coast-to-coast tour. Her New York recital takes place immediately after her Lane Concert.

Mrs. Schwarzkopf's recitals are always well attended occasions. Paul Lang of the N.Y. Herald-Tribune wrote of one of her performances: "The soprano does not just sing, she lives a song. She follows every turn, every nuance, her facial expression always vividly expressive... an extraordinary artist."

In private life the gracious and lovely soprano is Mrs. Walter Lege, wife of the founder of London's famed Philharmonic Orchestra and Chorus.

Director Jack Trevillick of the Lane Series said that the Lane Committee is extremely proud to bring Mrs. Schwarzkopf to the University of Vermont, and that the diva's appearance will certainly be the major vocal recital in all (continued on page six)

Play a marimba, see slides of masked dancers, and hear the music of Africa at ART IS LIFE IN AFRICA, the exhibit which opened last Saturday at the Robert Hull Fleming Museum.

Mrs. Bronwyn Brothman, A.U.V.M. Art History instructor, organized the show from the Fleming Museum and other collections. She has assembled objects from all walks of traditional African life. A Kuba ceremonial axe, status-symbol for a chief, is displayed, along with a variety of masks and musical instruments once used in rituals and festivals. Much of the old and beautiful Zulu beadwork in the exhibit was brought to America at the turn of the century by Vermont missionaries—Joseph Felt and Lewis Groot. The oldest piece on view here is a 17th-century bronze head from the ancestral altar of an African king. ART IS LIFE IN AFRICA has a full calendar of related events: March 9, at 8 P.M. in the

"La Premiere Kuumba"

Museum's Marble Court, there will be a dance production called "La Premiere Kuumba." The performers are a group of black students from Middlebury College. They choreographed the dances themselves and are accompanied by drums and taped music. Admission is free, but will require a ticket obtained in advance from the Museum Secretary.

The Museum's March 14th film program is also related to the exhibit. "Buna: African Sculpture Speaks" will be shown, along with "Atumpan: The Talking Drums of Ghana." The film will be shown at 8 P.M. in Votey Auditorium.

"Adventures in African Art" will be the topic of a talk by Robert F. Thompson on March 17th at 8 P.M. in Billings. Mr. Thompson, Professor of Art History at Yale University, is just back from Africa with films, slides, and music.

ART IS LIFE IN AFRICA will be on view through April 15th.

control, those dancers entertaining at the feast performed a delightful sequence of classical ensembles. This included the Bluebird Pas de Deux by Luis Feunte and Christine Knoblauch. As the February issue of "The New Yorker" stated, "Mr. Feunte accomplished all the difficult feats of tone movement that the male role requires." Puss in Boots, by Jane Miller and Edward Myers, seemed to be the most entertaining of the Pas de Deux. The remaining Pas de Deux, Red Riding Hood and the Wolf, the Three Ravens and Princess Florine, were adequately done.

As for Margot Fonteyn, she delivered an undeniably outstanding performance of the Princess Aurora. She exhibited a supreme control which allowed her to sustain herself "on toes" for over thirty seconds, and master the most complex of allegro movements. The quality of an aging ballerina's performance was received with awe and inspiration. After viewing Dame Fonteyn, it would be difficult to deny her the position of Prima Ballerina of the Royal Ballet, she so well deserves. Her partner, Attilio Labia, danced harmoniously with the Princess. While creating a pleasing ensemble with his partner, Labia held his own with a sequence of grand leaps and turns neatly executed with control.

The sets and costumes by Peter Farmer, were enchanting but not ostentatious, as they were in the American Ballet's version of "Romeo and Juliet." Perhaps the most lovely costume-set design was in Act III, done in deep red, royal blue, and subtle russet.

The National Ballet usually performs "The Sleeping Beauty" with Carmen Mathe as the Princess and Peter Breuer as the Prince. It is often said that Miss Mathe has some of Dame Fonteyn's physical characteristics, although still lacking the desirable artistic qualities. In the same review of "The New Yorker," Winthrop Sergeant stated, "The National Ballet has become one of the outstanding companies in America, and one that can carry off big challenges with admirable results."

Arena Theatre Review:

"A Streetcar Named Desire" Is An Enjoyable Success

by Jeff Yacker
"A Streetcar Named Desire," by Tennessee Williams, was presented from March 1 to 6 at the Arena Theatre. Overall it was a very good production; although some weak points were apparent. The problem of a visiting sister-in-law who is a prostitute was treated in a forthright manner, emphasizing above all, the sexual desires of all the characters.

Diane Lawrence was nothing less than brilliant as Blanche Dubois, a pathetic case of insecurity who comes to New Orleans. From her first moments on stage, she alternated between attempts to assert her superiority through a fake gentility, and pitiful episodes displaying a craving of affection and praise, no matter how unwarranted. Miss Lawrence superbly showed the two sides of Blanche which are essential to the play—the Southern Belle, and the town whore in disguise. Her flashbacks which explain her behavior were particularly moving. She was supported by Leon Martell in the role of Stanley, an American of Polish descent whose sexual desires seem to be the driving force behind his occasional brutal outbursts. His performance was good, but at times tended to be slightly overdone, especially in the poker game scenes. Unfortunately Stella, played by Nancy Rounds was a disappointment. If Stanley was overdramatic at times, Stella was far too "bliss." In fact, at times it seemed that she was reading lines at rehearsal instead of acting. However, her performance in the final scene was indeed excellent. The rest of the supporting cast did a fine job, particularly the neighbor Eunice (Virginia Pender), the newboy (Stephen Kelly), and the Mexican Woman (Cate McKeegney). Although their roles were small, it was precisely these parts, and others, which added to Miss Lawrence's outstanding performance. Also to be mentioned in this line is Michael Levine, who as Harold, provided a sensitive contrast in male sexual desire to the animalistic Stanley.

The costumes were authentic—the 1947 dresses hung heavily to mid-calf, and the men's clothes fit loosely so as to suggest a style. The lighting was also commendable for providing the proper emphasis at the key moments.

One minor point which was slightly disturbing was the use of Southern accents. Anyone who has been to New Orleans, knows that the drawl there is quite considerable. However, whereas Blanche and Eunice drewled, Stella, Stanley, Harold did not. Either they all should have had accents appropriate to the region, or none should have. The effect would have been similar if Blanche wore a dress from 1947, and Stella walked on in hot pants.

The first act tended to drag, and at one point Stella quipped in reference to Stanley's commonness, "He's Polish, you know." This attempt to parody today's round of "Polish" jokes fell flat and was quite unnecessary. And although the rape scene was forceful, it was not forceful enough, for there was perhaps the climax of the desire of the two antagonists, Blanche and Stanley. But the final scene, in which Blanche is led off by the doctors, was done so forcefully by all those onstage, that the other shortcomings were eclipsed. The director, Jeff Wilson, and the entire cast and crew deserve credit for this successful production.

UVM Approaches Division Finals

Two determined opponents face off in what was to be a very lopsided game. Photo by S. Frowenfeld

Some Statistics For A Standout Season

Vermont, undefeated in its last 13 games, raced to a 7-0 win over a scrappy Lowell Tech sextet, Saturday night (March 4), to move into the semi-final round against Buffalo. The Catamounts recorded their second consecutive shutout, previously whitewashing Norwich, 10-0, in the season's finale. Vermont has not been scored upon since the second period of the Middlebury game, Feb. 23, totaling up 7 1/2 periods of "shutout" hockey.

The Lite Side

by S.G.T. Callihan

Yesterday, I was privileged to witness a race down one of the lesser known trails of a local ski area, between an instructor and one of her male students. Her "spectacular" performance is what sparked the following song, entitled Super Skier (sung to The Ship That Never Returned):

1. Well, they called her Super Skier as she sat around the sundeck
For she swore that she'd never take a spill;
When they finally brought her down, they had to use three toboggans,
To carry all the pieces down the hill.

Chr. She was comin' down the slope doin' ninety miles an hour
When she caught an edge of her ski;
Well, her clothes they were fast,
But the slopes they were faster,
And that's the last of Super Skier we'll see.

2. Well, she hollered "What the hell" as she lined them parallel,
She figured there was nothing more to learn;
And as she started on her way, she shouted, "Endelay," Assuming that she'd never have to turn.

Chr. Well, she was slippin' down that slope doin' ninety miles an hour;
When a pole went flippin' thru the air,
Her jumpin' form was fine,
Until she ran into that pine,
And two one-legged skiers left from there.

3. When she left that tree at last, she was movin' twice as fast,
Both halves were skinnin' moguls like a feather;
She said, "I might be a split personality,
How can I ever keep my knees together?"

4. One ski headed north and the other headed west,
'Cause both of them, you see, were runnin' free-er;
And the folks on Little Nell, looked up scared as hell,
And said "It's a bird,
No, it's a plane,
No, IT'S SUPER SKIER!"

Chr. Now the moral of my story, though my story's kinda gory,
For all you sundeck-T.K.'s there's still hope;
Buy the fastest clothes you can,
Then talk skin like a man,
But don't let them catch you on the slopes.

For those interested in the out-come of the race, the song speaks for itself. Names were withheld to avoid embarrassing anyone but any similarity to persons living on this campus, is pretty close.

WHEN YOU'RE GAMING MORE THAN ONE

Despite the fact that we beat the men from Lowell Tech last Saturday night it was certainly not one of our better games of the season. Vermont won by the score of 7-0 but the Cats were not passing, organizing or for that matter playing well. Lowell was not playing well either but they have only had a hockey team for three years and one is hard pressed to find an excuse for the Cats.

During the first five minutes of the first period it appeared as if the Catamounts were going to blow Lowell Tech out of the arena and half way to Hannibal's which—more likely where they would have liked to have been getting smashed out of their minds instead of just smashed.

Ted Castle scored his 24th goal of the season, to tie the record set by Rico Minarsky during 69-70 season. This goal came at 56 seconds of the first period as the Cats waited an additional 48 seconds against Norwich. Ted has a chance to break the record in the game against Buffalo on Wednesday night (I realize that Wednesday was last night but this article was written on Tuesday night to make the press time).

Fred Hunt played a good game on Saturday night as Fred has been playing good hockey for the last three games but I haven't gotten around to mentioning it until now. Fred was moving with the puck very well as he put on some good rushes up ice.

Above I stated all the things that the Cats were doing wrong now I will attempt to name the things that they did right. Vermont played good defense as Steve Eckerson was not forced to work very hard all evening as Steve had a total of 17 saves.

The Cats controlled the game very well as Lowell Tech didn't get into the Vermont end of the rink very often in the game.

Lowell Tech had a good goalie not a great one but good enough to keep the score from going to 15-0 as it might if not for his scrambling saves all night.

Many of you may wonder why we didn't play New England College in our first round game as I said we were going to. The Wednesday before the seeding went out for the tournament New England sent their uniforms out to be cleaned because they figured the season was over I guess. On Monday when the seeding was announced for the tournament New England was named eighth and would have been destined to play us in the first round. When New England told the tournament they didn't wish to play. Their reason for this decision might have been that it was too much trouble to get uniforms back for the laundry starched their jockey shorts again).

Teddy Yeates played another super game Saturday. Teddy has been the Cats most consistent performer all season as he hasn't played a bad game, and in most of the games he was great. Teddy does so many things so well that it is hard to pin down any one thing. He made one great play of which I can remember in which he poke-checked away the puck from a Lowell Tech player who was about to come in alone on Steve Eckerson. The fans cheered this, wildly but most of them had forgotten the play ten minutes later. Teddy is very rarely in the penalty box which is unusual for a defenseman who must check. Mr. Yeates rushes and score well as he is the all-time leader for defensemen with 53 points for his three years of play at UVM.

Vermont got three goals in the second period to extend their lead to 5-0 as Ted Yeates, Fred Hunt and Roger Mallett scored for the Cats. UVM put 30 shots on goal during this period as Vermont was really applying the pressure. The Cats had quite a strange situation as they got a goal which they shouldn't have gotten and denied a goal which was rightfully theirs. The game was a mess at this point as both plays were disputed and nobody was really happy about what had happened when the whole thing was over. I am not saying the refs were bad, just confusing, and there is a difference.

The third period was a refun of the second period only twenty minutes and four beers later. The Cats dominated this period as they did the previous one.

Ted Child scored in the third period on his blue line slap shot as he did in the Norwich game and again the goalie never even saw the puck. Chris Hurley got the other Vermont score for the final period.

Hopefully as you read the last lines of this article we will be preparing to play in the division final game on Saturday night. If this not the case I can still say that this was a great season.

From the Editor

Dear Women of the Campus,

No doubt you read last week how this some of you aren't. I've advertized for more writers and since half of the readers of the Cynic are women, I expected some of you to show up and volunteer. To date, none have shown up. I can't cover a story without the writers to do it.

The second obstacle to covering women's athletics, is the fact I have no schedule of events. I've asked to have one sent to the Cynic Office two weeks ago. Where the hell is it? I realize your program is not printed up as is the men's but if you want your events covered, I'll have to know when and where they are.

In conclusion, women of UVM don't bitch if your sports events aren't properly covered in the Cynic. If you want something publicized, you get the material in and it will be in the paper.

Now since I agree with you, why aren't your events covered yet? Well for one thing, no women seem willing to write about their events. Surely you aren't ashamed of your sports. I would say you

WHY WOULD A WOMAN AT UVM WANT TO TAKE ROTC?

She probably wouldn't. But she might be interested in taking some courses with ROTC students. Military affairs are certainly important to all of us, so why shouldn't the UVM coed enroll in one or two of the following courses to be offered in 72/73 by the Department of Military Studies?

MS 1 Introduction to Military Studies. Fall Semester. Relationship of war to society; impact of technology on warfare; role of logistics and administration. Political, social, economic factors making up current military power. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

MS 2 U.S. Defense Establishment. Spring Semester. Organization of Department of Defense. Process of formulating national security policy. Impact of economic factors on the decision making process. Case studies of current issues affecting national security. Meets twice a week. Two credit hours.

Don't expect to find drill, or marksmanship, or first aid in these courses. Don't expect to be reading Field Manuals. Do expect to find provocative questions raised by the faculty and by the commercial texts to be used, such as Military Power and Potential by Knorr; How to Control the Military by Galbreith; Defense Strategies for the Seventies by Halperin; and others.

If you are interested in more information or a complete listing of courses for next year, drop by the Department of Military Studies or call 956-2968. Currently there are four non-ROTC men taking our course, Wars of Revolution. We hope many more men and women will consider Military Studies courses during presentation, March 17-April 14.

The Ethan Allen Rifles sponsored a blood drawing in Billings Center on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week. During the drawing, the 16,000th pint of blood was donated at University of Vermont drawings since the first one was held on December 18, 1950.

Edward R. Stearn, Administrator of the Red Cross Blood Center in Burlington, called the support of the college students "truly outstanding." Over 7500 pints of blood were donated last year by students at organized blood drawings at colleges and universities in the state of Vermont. The Blood Center estimates that approximately 9000 pints will be donated by students this year.

Since the Center was started on September 15, 1950, over 910,000 pints were donated by the Vermont-New Hampshire Red Cross Regional Blood Program. This makes it the most superior program in the United States in relation to its population. In the year ending June 30, 1971, 48,595 pints were collected in the two states by the program. played applying the pressure. The Cats had quite a strange situation as they didn't have gotten and denied a goal which was rightfully theirs. The game was a mess at this point as both plays were disputed and nobody was really happy about what had happened when the whole thing was over. I am not saying the refs were bad, just confused, and there is a difference.

The third period was a rerun of the second period—only twenty minutes and four hours later. The Cats dominated this period as they did the previous one.

Ted Child scored in the third period on his blue-line slap shot as he did in the Norwich game and again the goals never even saw the puck. Chris Hurley got the other Vermont score for the final period.

Hopefully as you read the last lines of this article we will be preparing to play in the division final game on Saturday night. If this is not the case I can still say that this was a great game.

Why but last week's letter proved that some of you aren't. I've advertised for writers and since half of the readers of the Cynic are women, I expected some to show up and volunteer. To date, none have shown up. I can't cover a story without the writers to do it.

The second obstacle to covering women's athletics, is the fact I have no schedule of events. I've asked to have one sent to the Cynic Office two weeks ago. Where the hell is it? I realize your program is not printed up as is the men's but if you want your events covered, I'll have to know when and where they are.

In conclusion, women of UVM don't bitch if your sports events aren't properly covered in the Cynic. If you want something publicized, you get the material in and it will be in the paper.

Results Of Cynic Poll On Pass - Fail

The Cynic opinion poll on the Pass-Fail option, which was published two weeks ago, was returned by a relatively small number of students. Although the newspaper's circulation is approximately 6,000, only 22 students filled out the poll and returned it to the Cynic office.

If the students who responded are at all a cross-section of the student body, a definite sentiment for keeping the Pass-Fail option appears to exist. Of the 22 students who responded, all indicated a desire to retain the option in one form or another.

Former Chairman of the appearance is part of the issue. Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. "72 Lecture Series. He will Lyman L. Lemnitzer, will be a lecture on the "Continuing guest lecturer Tuesday, March 14, 1972, at 8 p.m. in the Votey Auditorium at a no admission charge and 4 p.m. Gen. Lemnitzer's everyone is invited.

As for the other questions, the results are as follows: In response to question 1, "Have you ever taken or are you presently taking a course on a Pass-Fail basis?" 21 out of 22 replied yes. The second question was, "If you responded 'yes' to question 1, do you think pass-fail has affected your motivation in the course?" Here the answers were slightly more varied. Of the 9 people who answered 'yes', a common reason was that the pressure to compete and keep up with the readings was absent, or significantly less. Question 3, "Do you think the Pass-Fail option makes a difference in the amount a student gets out of a course?" elicited 13 "no" responses, 8 "yes", and one other. In response to question 4, 19 answered "no," a teacher should not know whether a student was taking a course on a pass-fail basis. One student who answered "yes" stated that perhaps then the instructor would not have to waste time in deciding on a specific grade.

In the space provided on the questionnaire for "Other Comments," several students expressed overall dissatisfaction with the grading system. One student stated: "The pass-fail system does not eradicate the underlying faults of the learning-teaching process generally used. The student is being tested to find out how well he could do an assignment, with no way to relate to the course in a personal sense." Two comments criticized the faculty; one stated: "If they (continued on page five)

Greeks Reach Agreement With Committee On New Constitution

by Jeff Yecker

Representatives of the Fraternity Forum and Panhellenic Council met Tuesday afternoon with members of the S.A. Constitutional Revision Committee. The purpose of the meeting was to settle any differences between the groups concerning the proposed new S.A. Constitution. At the conclusion of the meeting, it appeared that the Greek objections to various parts of the new Constitution could be satisfied by some relatively minor changes.

The part which had caused the most worry to the fraternities and sororities was that section dealing with the proposed caucuses. The constitutional revision committee had envisioned a Greek Caucus consisting of S.A. Senate representatives from fraternities and sororities, and under the stewardship of a Chairman. The Chairman would by law have been included in the new Coordinating Committee, which would, more or less, take the place of the present S.A. Executive Committee. The S.A. representatives might also have been the representatives of the Greek houses to the Fraternity Forum and Panhellenic Council, which are the governing bodies of the Greek houses, not the Greek students. On Sunday evening a meeting of all fraternity and sorority representatives was held at Phi Gamma Delta. At that time the overwhelming consensus was that a Greek Caucus was neither desirable nor necessary. Jack Arute, President of Fraternity Forum, agreed that there was a necessity for Greek "input" at the upper echelon of the Student Association. However, he and Linda Weldy, President of Panhel, and the representatives at the meeting felt that this flow of communication could be better served by the inclusion of the Presidents of Fraternity Forum and Panhellenic on the proposed Coordinating Committee. The Greeks did not want the post of Chairman of Greek Caucus created.

At the Tuesday meeting at Alpha Delta Pi, several representatives from Greek houses, Jack Arute and Linda Weldy met with Gene Beaudoin, Carol Hine, Bill Stone and Ann Buehler of the Constitutional Revision Committee. The changes which the Greeks proposed were found to be quite compatible with the intent and framework of the proposed Constitution. After the meeting, the following changes in the wording of the constitution were agreed upon by all present: Article II, Section 4, Paragraph 1; delete "shall," add "may"; Article II, Section 4, Paragraph 2; delete "in entirety"; Article II, Section 4, Paragraph 3; make Paragraph 2.

Article III, Section 4, Paragraph 1; delete "Fraternity Forum and Panhel representative." Article III, Section 4, Paragraph 2; change "shall" to "may"; Article III, Section 4, Paragraph 3; change "shall" to "may"; Article IV, Section 2, Paragraph 1, sub-paragraph a; delete "Chairman of the Caucuses, add, 'IRA President, Panhel President, Fraternity Forum President.'"

Article V, Section 3, "Lower Courts," change "IFC" to "Fraternity Forum." The last change, a very minor one, resulted from the inadvertent use of IFC instead of Fraternity Forum, IFC-Inter Fraternity Council—was basically the same organization as Fraternity Forum. (continued on page seven)

VPIRG Takes Stand Opposing New Abortion Legislation

by Arlene Eriksen

The abortion bill, the Connecticut River summer project and a health-care delivery project were among the issues discussed at the annual meeting of the Vermont Public Interest Research Group. The meeting, which was a continuation of the annual corporate meeting of March 4, was held last Saturday at Middlebury College. It was open to all the members of VPIRG.

After reviewing the Senate bill S-170 concerning abortion, VPIRG has decided to take a stand in opposition to the proposed legislation. In pointing out the loopholes inherent in the proposed bill, VPIRG's primary concern is the relative negligence on the part of the State for the mother's health and care, the rights of the fetus seem to overwhelm the rights of the pregnant woman.

In addition to formulating a formal statement against S-170, VPIRG has allocated funds for further research into the abortion problem. A poll is being conducted this week in The Burlington, Montpelier and Rutland areas. By randomly polling a minimum of eight hundred individuals, VPIRG hopes to uncover a general sentiment among Vermonters on this controversial issue.

The health-care delivery project is now being set up under the guidance of Dr. Hank Alberelli. The said committee plans to question four hundred public housing people in Burlington on the quality of the medical services which they are receiving. The ultimate goal of this project is to establish a state-wide health program implementing preventative health care.

President Andrews Appoints New Advisory Group

A group representing various constituencies of the University has been appointed to serve in an advisory capacity to University of Vermont President Dr. Edward C. Andrews, Jr.

The Task Force on University Governance, appointed last fall by President Edward C. Andrews, Jr., after the Trustees' Governance Committee suggested such a task force, recommended the creation of a President's Advisory Group.

The Task Force, chaired by Dr. Dean C. Corrigan, Dean of the College of Education, recommended creation of the advisory group to serve as a device to aid the president in consultation with the various constituencies of the institution.

Dr. Andrews responded affirmatively to the suggestion, and has named a group with himself as chairman.

Members of the President's Advisory Group include Student Association President Eugene W. Beaudoin, Medical Student Council President Douglas W. Brown and Extension Service Director Robert F. Davison.

Also, Alumni Council President Samuel W. Fishman, Graduate Student Association Chairman James A. Mulick, and Dr. Alfred B. Rollins, Jr., academic vice president, representing the Council of Academic Deans.

Representing the Board of Trustees is Dr. Robert E. O'Brien, and also serving on the President's Advisory Group are George J. Trono and Dr. William N. White, chairmen, respectively, of the Non-Academic Employees Council and the University Senate. An ex officio member of the advisory group is Donald E. Wilson, executive assistant to Dr. Andrews, who serves as the group's secretary.

The President's Advisory Group will serve in an advisory capacity only, confining itself to matters of overlapping or mutual interest among constituencies. Each member, as expressed by the Governance Task Force in its recommendation, accepts the responsibility "to act as a communication liaison to his governing body and to his constituency-at-large."

The group is regarded as "an experiment in university communication." Dr. Andrews noted in a letter to Dean Corrigan. It will be subject to modification and review and may be, "perhaps, as the Task Force suggests, a transition mechanism looking to a more elaborate system of institutional governance."

The suggestion to create an advisory group was part of the Governance Task Force's interim report last month to the Trustees Governance Committee. A final report from the Task Force will be forthcoming.

IRA Elections Attract Limited Number Of Candidates

by Jeff Covey

Elections for the executive board of the Inter Residence Association will be held next Tuesday, March 21, in the dining halls. As of press time there is only one person running for each of the offices.

Running for President is Sig Heller of Buckham; Vice President of Welfare, Jim Kelley of Willis; Vice President of Social and Cultural Affairs, Stan Braden of Mills; Judicial Chairman, Sig Wysolmerski of Davis; Treasurer, Tom Thorrell of Chittenden; Recording Secretary, Allison Milne of Harris; and Corresponding Secretary, Mary Ashcroft of Hamilton.

In other IRA business, a motion was passed that would give an additional $200 for a kiln to be built in the basement of Redstone. The additional money is for improvement to meet fire regulations. The kiln, which is being built by a ceramics instructor in the Experimental Program, is being financed half by IRA and half by the Experimental Program. When it is finished it will be available for use by the whole campus.

Stan Braden of Mills introduced a motion that would provide for a series of dances to be held around the campus. The motion asks for $1000 to pay part of the expenses for two dances, the rest of the expenses would be paid by the individual complexes where the dances will be held. Stan will take care of the details for hiring the bands and arranging for publicity. Refreshments and cleanup will be done by the complexes. The motion was tabled until next week when it will be voted on.

Representatives of the campus film co-op were present to ask for some money to sponsor a film to be shown at UVM, "Marder of Fred Hampton." This film is a documentary of the Black Panther shoot-out of a couple years ago. Rental of the film will cost $200, and it may be shown unilaterally over a two-day period. A tentative date of April 7 and 8 has been set.

16,000th Pint Of Blood At UVM Donated In Drive

by Jeff Covey

The Ethan Allen Rifles sponsored a blood drawing in Billings Center on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week. During the drawing, the 16,000th pint of blood was donated at University of Vermont drawings since the first one was held on December 18, 1950.

Edward R. Stearn, Administrator of the Red Cross Blood Center in Burlington, called the support of the college students "truly outstanding." Over 7500 pints of blood were donated last year by students at organized blood drawings at colleges and universities in the state of Vermont. The Blood Center estimates that approximately 9000 pints will be donated by students this year.

Since the Center was started on September 15, 1950, over 910,000 pints were donated in the Vermont-New Hampshire Red Cross Regional Blood Program. This makes it the most superior program in the United States in relation to the population. In the year ending June 30, 1971, 43,595 pints were collected in the two states by the program. They estimate that over 52,000 pints will be given this year.

This Vermont-New Hampshire Blood Program supplies at no charge for the blood all the blood required for medical practices for every patient in any one of the 62 civilian and government hospitals in the two states. It also replaces blood received by residents of this region in any U.S. or Canadian hospital out of state at no cost for the blood, out of state students are considered as residents of this region until their class graduates under this option. The blood supplied under both these options totals about 49,000 pints yearly.

This program provides the hospitals in these two states with safer blood. Unlike metropolitan areas, where some of the blood may be obtained from commercial firms who pay people to give blood, donors to the Red Cross Program have no reason to conceal medical facts that may result in unsafe or deceased blood.

In addition to the tests and questions before donating the blood, every donation is thoroughly tested at the Blood Center. Tests are done for typing of the blood, and to determine if the donor has hepatitis, jaundice or syphilis. These tests protect both the patient and the donor. After the tests the blood is labeled and refrigerated, ready to be used at the hospitals.

The center is open—undergo this process.

twenty-four hours a day every day of the year in order to be able to fill requests for blood at any time. After the regular staff leaves at the end of the business day, three University of Vermont students have rotating duty of sleeping in the center to be on call to cover any order that may come in.

A new advance has been made in this area that allows the patient to receive only the part of the blood that he needs, this leads to six or seven patients being able to be helped from only one donation. This process, called componentry, separates the different parts of the blood by centrifuging. These different components are then given to the patients that lack those parts of the blood, for instance, platelets are given to leukemia patients and the part called cryoprecipitate is given to hemophiliacs.

The only problem with the process of componentry is that it has to be done within two hours after the blood has been drawn. So, the process can only be done on blood that is taken in drawings fairly close to the Blood Center, such as the drawing at UVM. It was estimated that approximately 170 pints of blood from the Billings Center drawing will

In addition to expressing his appreciation for the students who donated blood at this drawing, Mr. Stearn expressed his gratitude to the volunteers, including 150 to 200 UVM students, who give up their time to help at these drawings. These volunteers supplement the paid staff of six nurses (the ones who actually perform the venipunctures, not the ones who take your temperature, blood pressure, etc.) and one driver. The volunteers, many of whom are nursing or medical technology students, are really carrying out the ideals of concern and compassion expressed by college students today, "they are involved in making certain that every person who needs blood will get it."

Mr. Stearn said that the act of donating blood is the "most unselfish, humane act available to us" because the donor gets no compensation for it and he never knows who gets his blood. It is the "responsibility of all citizens in a democracy. It is necessary that people continue to give this gift of life because, despite tremendous scientific and medical advances, no substitute for human blood has been found. Blood drawings are held twice a year at UVM, in October and in March. These drawings usually net approximately 750 pints. Students have expressed many reasons for donating their blood, one student who was there for his first time Monday, said that he was donating because one of his professors (continued on page three)

Robinson Hall Seeks Residents

Robinson Hall, the twenty women, have been busy working on ecology projects throughout the year. Some of these have included the ZPG pumpkin relish, composting Wright dining hall wastes every night, painting two parks in Burlington, lobbying in Montpelier for a ban on non-returnable bottles, and interviewing candidates for a director of UVM's new Environmental Studies program.

All students interested in living in the dorm next year should attend a special meeting in Robinson Hall, Wednesday, March 22, at 9:00 p.m. If interested students cannot make the meeting, please contact Kathi McIntyre, Bob Baird, or Kirby Kirkpatrick at the dorm or at the UVM Environmental Fair this Saturday to pick up applications. All applications must be in by the Wednesday after spring vacation.

Student Representatives To Board Of Trustees To Be Selected

Interviews will be held next week for the new Student Representatives to the Board of Trustees. If you are interested, applications can be obtained and interviews scheduled at the SA desk in Billings Center. The selections will be made by early April since the next Trustees meeting is April 15.

The Board of Trustees deal directly with issues and policy concerning: education, philosophy, university development, academic governance, investment policy, management and planning, student activities, buildings and grounds, and finance and budget. If you have an interest in any of these areas, you should consider applying for the appropriate committee.

If you are interested in finding out more about the student representatives, stop by the SA office and pick up some information.

Susy Giroux Wins Scholarship

The Vermont Knights of the Road—an organization of the state's "travelling" sales representatives—have awarded a scholarship to a University of Vermont student for the third consecutive year.

She is Susy Giroux, a sophomore from Hinesburg and a marketing management major in the UVM department of economics and business administration.

She was recommended for the $250 scholarship by Prof. Edwin C. Greif of the department on the basis of her "promise as a student of marketing management and her application to her studies."

Miss Giroux also works part-time as an information operator with the N.E. Telephone Co.

The scholarship was formally awarded Thursday (March 9) at a banquet in the Ramada Inn, where the check was presented by Knights of the Road Pres. John Rae of Barre, a Pillsbury sales representative.

ETV Highlights

"What did You Learn in School Today?" is the question on "Special of the Week" Monday (March 20) at 8 p.m. on Vermont ETV, when the weekly PDS special takes a candid look at education in America.

"Town Government Training Course," the first in a series of locally produced programs aimed at training small town elected officials, begins Tuesday (March 21) at 7 p.m., and will repeat Fridays at noon for the duration of the series. University of Vermont political science Prof. Andrew Nuquist moderates.

Mime Marcel Marceau and modern dancer Lar Lubovitch are featured on "Vibrations" Wednesday (March 22) at 9 p.m.

August Strindberg is the subject of "N.E.T. Playhouse Biography" Thursday (March 23) at 8:30 p.m. Max Von Sydow stars in the dramatic exploration of the dark nature of Sweden's best-known playwright. Included in the production, filmed in Sweden, are scenes from three Strindberg plays: "The Father," "Miss Julie," and "The Mother."

Friday (March 24) "Vermont Cracker Barrel" focuses on bill H-513, which calls for construction of a $2.5 million community correctional center in Burlington and a $1.3 million addition to the youthful offenders facility at St. Albans and would make $250,000 available for improvements to the State Prison at Windsor.

USMC Officer Selection Team

The U.S. Marine Corps Officer Selection Team from Hartford, Connecticut will be at the University of Vermont on Wednesday and Thursday (March 22-23) to discuss various officer programs available to qualified students.

The Platoon Leaders Class (PLC) program is available to the undergraduate in both the ground and aviation fields. Available on a selective basis is educational assistance of $100 per month during the school year (i.e. nine months). Successful completion of PLC training is culminated with commissioning as a Second Lieutenant upon graduation from college.

Law school deferments are available to qualified students.

The team visiting the campus will be located in the Student Center from 10:00 A.M.-2:00 P.M.

Information on the officer programs can be obtained by contacting the Marine Officer Selection Office, Post Office Building, 135 High Street, Hartford, Connecticut.

VPIRG

The Vermont Public Interest Research Group will hold a meeting every Sunday evening at 7:00 in the Den. These meetings are open to all students and anyone else who wishes to do volunteer work. SUMMER INTERNSHIPS

The Federal Government is launching another Federal Summer Intern Program for the summer of 1972. This program is designed to bring students with proven scholastic ability and demonstrated leadership potential into Federal operations for the summer. All those interested should contact Professor Warner, 475 Main St. (x-2601), as soon as possible.

Professor Warner also asks that those interested in an intern position with the State Government in Montpelier for the coming summer contact him.

Action Volunteers

Thirty-two University Year-for-Action Volunteers, ranging from freshman to graduate students, are hard-at-work on a variety of projects relating to the poverty community. Under faculty supervision, students have coordinated their full-time academic programs with their projects, so that the two are mutually reinforcing. The Office of Volunteer programs invites prospective UYA'ers to inquire about new projects to begin in July.

Will Students 'Fail' On Pass-Fail?

The proposal by 5 political science professors to drop the pass-fail option here at the University of Vermont is on the top of the agenda for UVM's Faculty Senate's April meeting.

Unless something radical occurs on this campus, the option may very well be dropped. In a recent poll, conducted by this newspaper, responses all pointed to the retention of the system.

The pass-fail option should be retained, if only for the reason that it offers an alternative to the letter grade, which many professors and students, we believe, don't like.

If the option is dropped, then only the students can blame themselves for it.

To Meet Others, You Must Go Out

To the Editor:

In response to the grievances mentioned in the letter from the freshmen women, you've raised some good questions, for which there simply is not enough room in this article to respond adequately, so if you're interested in further discussing these things drop by and say hello.

Obviously there's no simple explanation, but I think you'll find that "what we've got here is a failure to communicate" between the sexes. Certainly there are "men" around who want to meet some "nice" girls; so the problem is getting together. You girls seem to feel the guys are waiting for you to get them and then say "it's not me." Come on now, do you really expect a stranger to stop you on the path and ask you out; would you do that to a guy? These traditional sex roles are dissolving but rather than debate the desirability of this I would simply like to suggest to everybody (females and males) that they stop waiting for something to happen and go out and initiate contacts. Granted, it's easier said than done, but it must start somewhere. In conclusion I'd like to wish everyone success in their quest for happiness.

Coalition For A Democratic University Defines Meaning Of 'Democracy'

To the Editor:

March 13, 1972
To answer your editorial about us would be useless. Your coverage of the Coalition for a Democratic University has been derelict from the beginning, and a disservice to the UVM student body. You have totally distorted everything we have said and done. In the first article about us, Steven Rice criticized our use of the word democratic;

and from that point on, you have done your best to make that prophecy come true, with no facts to back you up. Perhaps you should get some definitions out. A democracy is a political unit in which the supreme power is vested in the people and exercised by them directly or indirectly through a system of representation involving periodically held free elections. A democracy involves the people as much as possible. We do not believe our university is a democratic one, and we are working to make it one.

One of the many things that we believe are undemocratic at this university is the Cynic. I want to know what right you have to strike out against the CDU? You should try to objectively cover us in order to serve as an information base for the students. Also it seems

you do not respond well to criticism. Last week we criticized your coverage of our meeting and this week you blasted us in your editorial. Last week two girls asked for better coverage of Women's Sports; this week you blasted the women for "bitching." Also what right do you have to blast some freshmen women with a serious problem to "have the guts to sign your names?"

Also, why did you refuse to appear on John Reed's RUV FM radio show Monday, March 13, 1972 5:30-6 in order to talk with a CDU representative, or do you have to hide in your editorial column where no one can ask any questions? Also, will you grant us equal editorial space in the Cynic, since you have written a whole editorial about us?

In continuation of the questions we ask about the university (and they were questions, not half truths or innuendoes), why is it that students cannot be in their own student union? We tried to set up a Bake Sale Monday morning and were refused because there is a policy that students cannot sell food to other students in our student union. Only Sage can (we could give our food away, so we did). Why?

The Coalition For A Democratic University
P.S. Why don't you sign your editorial?

Editor's Note: The Cynic established a policy a couple of weeks ago of not signing editorials. Very few newspapers — student or otherwise — do. In fact, the only one we know of is the Burlington Free Press.

Age Of The Comic Mighty Avengers, Assemble!

by Comic Master

This week is the beginning of a series of columns about Marvel's mighty Avengers. But first, belated birthday greetings to one of the best known superheroes, Superman. If you didn't know it before, Superman celebrates his birthday on February 29.

AVENGERS ASSEMBLE!
The original Avengers consisted of five superheroes with varied powers and origins. They met in September 1963, when they teamed up to battle Loki, Norse god of evil. Each of the original Avengers had their own features in other magazines, in addition to the Avengers. The original Avengers were Thor, Iron Man, the Hulk, Ant-Man and the Wasp.

Thor, son of Odin, the Norse god of thunder, first appeared in Marvel comics in August 1962. Don Blake, a lame doctor vacationing in Europe, was trapped in a cave. In the cave he found a cane which, when struck against a solid object, turned into Thor's hammer and changed Don Blake into Thor. Thor later learned that Don Blake was a fictitious identity created by Odin in order to teach Thor a lesson in humility.

Iron Man, on the other hand, is very mortal. Tony Stark, while visiting Viet Nam, was injured by the explosion of a land mine, which left pieces of shrapnel imbedded in his chest. Captured and forced to work for the Viet Cong, Tony and another scientist devised an iron suit powered by translators to magnetically pull the shrapnel away from Stark's heart. Using the suit, Stark escaped. Since then, the suit has been modified many times.

Dr. Bruce Banner became the Hulk when an experimental gamma bomb he developed went off while he was saving a teenager who had strayed into the testing area. The radiation turned Dr. Banner into a nearly mindless green-skinned behemoth of incredible strength. The Hulk left the Avengers after the first two issues, but returned in two later issues.

Ant-Man and the Wasp, really biochemists Hank Pym and his girl friend Janet Van Dyne, could shrink to insect size by using Hank's invention of a reducing serum. Janet also grew wings when she shrunk. Hank could also grow to become Giant-Man.

NEXT WEEK: The second team: Captain America, Hawkeye, Quicksilver, and the Scarlet Witch.

Question Hiring Procedure For Future Puerto Rican Courses

To the Editor of the Vermont Cynic:

Last semester the University of Vermont for the first time had one Puerto Rican in the student population. This semester the number rose to three. The coming semester, there will probably be well over a dozen Puerto Rican students. At one time or another, the number is increasing steadily.

Recently we three met and decided that we would like a course in Puerto Rican Heritage, Literature, History and a few other subjects taught here at U.V.M. So we spoke to several Professors and to the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. They all seemed to like the idea. But, they would like such a course not in the coming semester (September '72) but in the coming year (September '73). We understand their reasons for such a delay. We see the interest of some of the Professors in wanting to teach such a course and we see that they would need time to prepare. But the Dean told us that if we wanted such a course in the coming semester, we would have to get someone that's not in U.V.M., and only as a part time basis.

But what we don't understand is, why if they are so interested in such a course do they leave the finding of such a person entirely up to us? We three are Freshman and do not know how to go about finding someone and we do not know where to go to find such a person.

Not only have large numbers of Black students shown interest but, also large numbers of white students. And we three feel that the University should start moving "Palante" (forward). Instead of remaining at its present state.

We also feel that the University and we three should work together, instead of just us three alone.

What function can a college chapel have in 1972? What does a chapel offer that is not offered anywhere else on campus? What is a ministry to the University Community? St. Anselm's Chapel has tried to meet this challenge and these questions in several ways. The primary task of the church on campus is to provide a Christian witness to the pressing issues—personal and social—of today. In terms of program, this means raising real life-and-death questions, and asking members of the community to look for some answers together in the light of their own experiences and the witness of the Christian community.

Parochial

by Dan Haslam

One of the greatest problems which faces schools today is not an academic one, but rather a grave financial crisis. Consider the plight of the public schools, and then consider what faces private and parochial schools. Their problems are compounded by the lack of a tax rate to rely on, and their security is threatened by the traditional taboos of support by the government to private institutions disregarding their secular/non-sectarian nature.

The Vermont Cynic examined the nature of this financial crisis with respect to its effect on parochial schools in Burlington, specifically at the secondary level.

Father Wendell Seale, principal of Rice Memorial High School, terms the current effect of money shortage to Rice as "extreme." Since its thirteen year history, Rice has gone from a non-tuition school to a current tuition level of $400 annually per family. In the last seven years tuition has jumped nearly two-hundred per cent because of striving to make ends meet.

Rice's income is derived from three main sources: the first, through tuition which meets about 50% of the total need. The twenty Catholic parishes in the county are then assessed annually according to how many students attend school from their district, which brings in another 25% of the budget. The remaining bulk of funds is met on the Rice's diocesan level from a $75,000.

Their problems are compounded by the lack of a tax rate to rely on, and their security is threatened by the traditional taboos of support by the government to private institutions disregarding their secular/non-secular nature.

The Vermont Cynic examined the nature of this financial crisis with respect to its effect on parochial schools in Burlington, specifically at the secondary level.

Father Wendell Seasties, principal of Rice Memorial High School, terms the current effect of money shortage (to Rice as "extreme"). Since its thirteen year history, Rice has gone from a non-tuition school to a current tuition level of $400 annually per family. In the last seven years tuition has jumped nearly two-hundred per cent because of striving to make ends meet.

Rice's income is derived from three main sources: the first, through tuition which meets about 50% of the total need. The twenty Catholic parishes in the county are then assessed annually according to how many students attend school from their district, which brings in another 25% of the budget. The remaining half of funds is met on the state disbursement level from a $75,000.

Will Students 'Fail' On Pass-Fail?

The proposal by 5 political science professors to drop the pass-fail option here at the University of Vermont is on the top of the agenda for UVM's Faculty Senate's April meeting.

Unless something radical occurs on this campus, the option may very well be dropped. In a recent poll, conducted by this newspaper, responses all pointed to the retention of the system.

The pass-fail option should be retained, if only for the reason that it offers an alternative to the letter grade, which many professors and students, we believe, don't like.

If the option is dropped, then only the students can blame themselves for it.

To Meet Others, You Must Go Out

To the Editor:

In response to the grievances mentioned in the letter from the freshmen women. You've raised some good questions, for which there simply is not enough room in this article to respond adequately. If you're interested in further discussing these things drop by and say hello.

Obviously there's no simple explanation, but I think you'll find that "what we've got here is a failure to communicate" between the sexes. Certainly there are "men" around who want to meet some "nice" girls; so the problem is getting together. You girls seem to feel the guys are waiting for you to set them and then say "it's actually up to them to ask us out." Come on now, do you really expect a stranger to stop you on the path and ask you out? Would you do that to a guy? These traditional sex roles are disorienting but rather than debate the desirability of this I would simply like to suggest to everybody (females and males) that they stop waiting for something to happen and go out and initiate contact. Granted, it's easier said than done, but if it must start somewhere, in conclusion I'd like to wish everyone success in their quest for happiness.

Coalition For A Democratic University Defines Meaning Of 'Democracy'

March 13, 1972

To the Editor:
To answer your editorial about us would be useless. Your coverage of the Coalition for a Democratic University has been excellent from the beginning, and a disclaimer to the UVM student body. You have totally distorted everything we have said and done. In the first article about us, Steven Rice criticized our use of the word democratic, and from that point on, you have done your best to make that phrase come true, with no facts to back you up.

Perhaps you should get some definitions out. A democracy is a political unit in which the supreme power is vested in the people and exercised by them directly or indirectly through a system of representation involving periodically held free elections. A democracy involves the people as much as possible. We do not believe our university is a democratic one, and we are working to make it one.

One of the many things that we believe are undemocratic at this university is the Cynic. I want to know what right you have to strike out against the CDUT. You should try to objectively cover us in order to serve as an information base for the students. Also it seems

you do not respond well to criticism. Last week we criticized your coverage of our meeting and this week you blasted us in your editorial. Last week two girls asked for better coverage of Women's Sports: this week you blasted the women for "bitching." Also what right do you have to blast some freshmen women with a serious problem to have the guts to sign your names?

Also, why did you refuse to appear on John Reed's RUV FM radio show Monday, March 13, 1972 5:30-6 in order to talk with a CDU representative, or do you have to hide in your editorial column where no one can ask you questions? Also will you grant an equal editorial space in the Cynic, since you have written a whole editorial about us?

In continuation of the questions we ask about the university (and they were questions, not half truths or innuendoes), why is it that students cannot sell things in their own student union? We tried to set up a Bake Sale Monday morning and were refused because there is a policy that students cannot sell food to other students in our student union. Only Sags can (we could give our food away, so we did). Why?

Dear Professor Miles,
While I do not agree in total with your letter of February 29, there are some points in it to which I would like to comment at this point.

First and foremost, if I did indeed "blur" either Professor Larson, President Andrews, or the Buildings and Grounds Committee, I hereby apologize.

I had said, "Today I hope I represent better than the two speakers before me." The two speakers were in reference to Professor Larson of the Buildings and Grounds Committee and to President Andrews, both of whom made favorable comments to the "jug-handle" concept and plan for the Spear Street, East Avenue, Main Street intersection. It was not my intent, by any sense of the word, to claim that I generally better represented the students than Professor Larson represented the faculty.

Sincerely,
Gene Beaudoin

Our Beer Tap Is Lost

To the Editor:

We the members of Hamilton Second are sending out an appeal to all those who participated in our little gathering last Friday night. It was a great party until we discovered the loss of one of our beer taps. Referring to what's been going on in the Cynic, we tried, but that beer tap is now causing us a hell of a lot of frustration. All we can say is that we could really appreciate the return of our tap, no questions asked. It could mean the difference between our having another party and not.

Age Of The Comic Mighty Avengers, Assemble!

by Comic Master

This week is the beginning of a series of columns about Marvel's mighty Avengers. But first, belated birthday greetings to one of the best known superheroes, Superman. If you didn't know it before, Superman celebrates his birthday on February 29.

AVENGERS ASSEMBLE!
The original Avengers consisted of five superheroes with varied powers and origins. They met in September 1963, when they teamed up to battle Loki, Norse god of evil. Each of the original Avengers had their own features in other magazines, in addition to the Avengers. The original Avengers were Thor, Iron Man, the Hulk, Ant-Man and the Wasp. Thor, son of Odin, the Norse god of thunder, first appeared in Marvel comics in August 1962. Don Blake, a lame doctor vacationing in Europe, was trapped in a cave. In the cave he found a cane which, when struck against a solid object, turned into Thor's hammer and changed Don Blake into Thor. Thor later learned that Don Blake was a fictitious identity created by Odin in order to teach Thor a lesson in humility.

Iron Man, on the other hand, is very mortal. Tony Stark, while visiting Viet Nam, was injured by the explosion of a land mine, which left pieces of shrapnel imbedded in his chest. Captured and forced to work for the Viet Cong, Tony and another scientist devised an iron suit powered by translators to magnetically pull the shrapnel away from Stark's heart. Using the suit, Stark escaped. Since then, the suit has been modified many times.

Dr. Bruce Banner became the Hulk when an experimental gamma bomb he developed went off while he was saving a teenager who had strayed into the testing area. The radiation turned Dr. Banner into a nearly mindless green-skinned behemoth of incredible strength. The Hulk left the Avengers after the first two issues, but returned in two later issues.

Ant-Man and the Wasp, really biochemist Hank Pym and his girl friend Janet Van Dyne, could shrink to insect size by using Hank's invention of a reducing serum. Janet also grew wings when she drank. Hank could also grow to become Giant-Man.

NEXT WEEK: The second team: Captain America, Hawkeye, Quicksilver, and the Scarlet Witch.

Question Hiring Procedure For Future Puerto Rican Courses

To the Editor of the Vermont Cynic:

Last semester the University of Vermont for the first time had one Puerto Rican in its student population. This semester, the number rose to three. The coming semester, there will probably be well over a dozen Puerto Rican students. As one can see, the number is increasing steadily.

Recently we three met and decided that we would like a course in Puerto Rican Heritage, Literature, History and a few other subjects taught here at U.V.M. So we spoke to several Professors and to the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. They all seemed to like the idea. But, they would like such a course not in the coming semester (September '72) but in the coming year (September '73). We understand their reasons for such a delay. We see the interest of some of the Professors in wanting to teach such a course and where they would need time to prepare. But the Dean told us that if we wanted such a course in the coming semester, we would have to get someone that's not in U.V.M., and only as a part time basis.

But what we don't understand is, why if they are so interested in such a course do they leave the finding of such a person entirely up to us? We three are Freshmen and do not know how to go about finding someone and we do not know where to go to find such a person.

Not only have large numbers of Black students shown interest but, also large numbers of white students. And we three feel that the University should start moving "Palante" (forward). Instead of remaining at its present state.

We also feel, that the University and we three should work together, instead of just us three alone.

Movie Review On 'Cotton' Was 'Utterly Banal...'

Dear Sirs:

Film Review
Cotton Comes To Harlem
This is a movie. Cotton Comes To Harlem is its name. It really is just a great movie. Cause it had shooting and stuff. I really liked this picture.

Because it is a movie, it has a director. His name is Ossie Davis. He is famous. He does some great stuff. We all have emotions, so he uses them. He even switches these emotions. This is just so great a maneuver that the entire movie becomes great.

Now get this. This one will say you. These guys, Grave-Digger Jones and Coffin Ed, are detectives. Grave-Digger is played by Godfrey Cambridge. Godfrey Cambridge is famous. He is also well known. So is Raymond St Jacques who plays Coffin Ed Ray was in the T.V. show Th

Partners being well known and all. Well, these guys chase a bale of cotton around Harlem. This is called irony. That old bale gets around. Uncle Bud gets around too. He is played by Redd Foxx, who is also famous on T.V.

Calvin Lockhart is good. Judy Face is great. All the others are great and good. Those production credits couldn't be better. They too are famous on T.V.

This satire is meant to convey two facts. First: The review of this picture in the Cynic was utterly banal. Second: The entire black, conscious, so vibrant in this particular picture, was destroyed.

What function can a college chapel have in 1972? What does a chapel offer that is not offered anywhere else on campus? What is a ministry to the University Community? St. Anselm's Chapel has tried to meet this challenge and these questions in several ways.
